The Payne-Aldrich bill is dead for all time. The people of this country will not go back to the high protective-tariff system. They will not reverse the verdict of the American people that sent to a tremendous defeat the party and the administra-tion that thrust upon the country the Payne-Aldrich tariff measure, the provisions of which are well known to all the country. We have declared that a large part of the expenses of Government shall be paid by the levying of taxes internal and taxes upon large incomes, and I believe the more people become familiar with the provisions of this measure the more they will conclude that it is an absolutely just measure. The most of the people, regardless of which party they belong to, be-lieve that the excess war profits and the abnormal profits that come from abnormal conditions, which conditions bring about the necessity for enormous appropriations, should bear these added burdens and that those who reap the benefits of those conditions ought to help pay for those added expenditures.

It is no argument to say that it falls more largely upon one section than upon another. It has been well said that the added appropriations will go to, and those expenditures will be made in, those sections, wherever located, that are able to manufacture these munitions of war and great armaments; and it matters little to the people whether they are located in one section or another. Every section of this country would be glad to have the wealth in their section, and would be glad to pay the small, reasonable tax. It has been said that it will fall upon small concerns. I do not believe it. Large concerns are making large war profits from the manufacture of munitions for war and large concerns are providing war materials.

There will not be, in my judgment, a serious protest against this measure when it is thoroughly understood. When conditions like now shall pass away, when excessive war profits shall cease, when abnormal profits shall be a thing of the past. then this revenue measure will yield far less. If profits and prices become reasonable, the law may stand, but the necessity for it, in a measure, will have passed.

I favor this measure now. If excessive profits continue in peace times, it should continue to be the law. The existence of the law will doubtless be helpful and tend to repress excessive profits from goods sold to the consuming public and thus at the same time tend to reduce the high cost of living. But I repeat that, regardless of party, the masses of the country, struggling now because of high prices, prefer and will approve and will stand for and demand that those who reap immense profits, whether partnerships or corporations or individuals, shall help to bear a fairer share of the burdens of government than heretofore. Wherever there are governments and wherever civilization exists, expenses of government do exist and taxes will have to be levied. The only equitable system of taxation is that which is similar to the taxation levied in States, where they pay in proportion to what they have. And if a system that seeks to make the toiling millions pay, and great wealth does not pay its fair share of the burdens of government, it is wrong.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Mr. MEEKER. What is the justice, as conceived by the gentleman from Missouri, in exempting agricultural partnerships and settling this on industrial partnerships instead?

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not think I could answer any better than by calling attention to the question asked on yesterday of the majority leader and the answer made by him. If the gentleman was present, he heard it. It was made at considerable

A MEMBER. It is in the RECORD.

Mr. FORDNEY. No; it is not.
Mr. MEEKER. It is not in the Record.
Mr. DICKINSON. And, besides, we are following, I understand, the example of the great and old countries of the world, where agriculture is exempted. From my viewpoint I think it ought to be exempted. It can not be as readily determined or collected. They, however, are not exempted under the income-tax law. Individuals are not levied upon under this proposed They are exempted from the provisions of this, except so far as they enter into and are interested in partnerships and in corporations; and the greater the number of individuals who enter into those partnerships and corporations the amount paid will be divided among them and will be appreciably small.

Mr. MEEKER. Just a word. I asked the question as to the gentleman's conception of the justice of the thing. Suppose Tom Smith and Bill Jones are running a store in a partnership and their income is over $5,000. Sam White and Bill Smith are operating a farm at the edge of the town and their income is $15,000. The storekeepers pay under this partnership, and those farmers out there, who could buy these fellows times over, are

Mr. DICKINSON. Do you think you could get at the income very easily and readily by seeking to levy it upon the agricultural interests? Proceeding further, it would be difficult of administration if applied to the agricultural interests, and difficult to determine their net incomes. Their capital in a large measure is their land, of no fixed value, their expenses heavy, and fortunate indeed is the farmer who is able to realize 8 per cent on his capital invested. Take out all the exemptions permitted under this law, and not one farmer in a thousand would have such a net income as is permitted under this law before he would be liable to taxation.

The farmer is the producer of the necessaries of life, and the life of the Nation is dependent upon his labor and activities and the food products of the farm.

Partnerships or corporations having only $5,000 incomes pay nothing. Five thousand dollars is deducted from their net incomes, after all prior deductions for expenses, and then 8 per cent of the capital is further deducted from the net income before there is any levy of the 8 per cent on the balance, leaving 92 per cent of the balance for the business concerns. It means only a taking of about 1 per cent of the net profits of a business concern with a capital of $100,000 and a net income of $15,000, and no tax collected if the net income is much below that on such amount of capital.

This bill seeks to collect only from those having excessive profits, and those who reap large war profits in times of distress should help to bear the burdens of Government, increased by reason of the very conditions that add to the wealth of those who flourish and fatten on the misfortunes of the country.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Bell having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 18453) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint esolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 203. Joint resolution to provide for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property in connection with the presidential inaugural ceremonies in 1917.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Madden]. [Applause.]
Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I can not allow this further burden to be placed upon the backs of an already overburdened people without a word of protest.

I see the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Gordon] laughing. does not pay any of the tax. He can afford to laugh. [Laughter.]

You were given power on the promise that you would conduct the Government economically; but from the first day you took over the Government you entered upon a system of extravagance the like of which has never been known. When you were appealing for power you complained of the extravagance of the Republican Party, of how it had increased the cost of living. You cried aloud for a chance to show how you could prevent extravagance and reduce the cost of living. You have The expenditures under your management have done neither. more than doubled and the living cost has gone up more than 50 per cent.

You have imposed taxes upon every form of business activity. until to-day the people are crying aloud for relief. During the 16 years of Republican management of the Nation the Government was run on an economical business basis. No excessive burdens of taxation were levied upon the people. Business was looked upon as a legitimate part of American life.

But how all this has changed since you came into power!
You complained of the large appropriations made by the Republicans when they were in power, but you will recall that the largest appropriation ever made by them for a single year was $1,026,682,881.72, while your appropriations for the current of that power they never overlook a chance to lighten the burfiscal year, including contracts and authorizations, amounted to $1,947,259,048.64. You will recall that during Republican control the American Navy was maintained at second place among the navies of the world and that the Panama Canal was built out of the ordinary revenues of the Government. You can not have forgotten that when you took over the Government you found $130,000,000 in the Treasury, over and above every outstanding current obligation. Your memory must be clear as to how you allowed the Navy to drop to fourth place, while your expenditures in other directions emptied the Treasury and forced upon the country new and abnormal systems of taxation, under the weight of which the people are groaning to-day.

But you are not satisfied with the load you have already placed upon the people's back, and hence you are here again, for the fourth time in the four years of your power, to propose still more novel means of extracting money from the pockets of the people in order that you may continue to practice your extravagant habits.

What is it that you now propose? What are the expenditures for the fiscal year 1918 to be? It is asserted in the report of the Democratic members of the Committee on Ways and

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MADDEN. In just a moment. It is asserted that the revenues from sources of taxation previously provided will be $1,001,750,000. Add to this the $325,000,000 from postal receipts and we have $1,326,750,000. This bill proposes the issue of $340,000,000 of bonds and $300,000,000 in certificates of indebtedness. It proposes to raise $248,000,000 by a tax of 8 per cent on the profits of all business corporations, copartnerships, joint-stock companies, and insurance companies over 8 per cent and $22,000,000 by an increase of 50 per cent in the inheritance tax, thus making a grand total of $2,336,750,000, which you propose to expend during the fiscal year 1918, $910,000,000 of which is to be raised under the bill now before

And this is what you call economy. Shades of economy as practiced by the Democratic Party. Compare with this that $1,026,682,881.72 which you characterized as extravagance under Republican rule, and then ask the people what they think of your promise and your performance. Ask the business men of the country how long they intend to submit to such iniquities. Is there to be no relief from this continued injustice? Are the people to go on forever without calling a halt to such extravagance?

You have squandered $162,000,000 to no purpose in the Mexican-border fiasco, $25,000,000 in the Vera Cruz incident, $35,000,000 in Alaska, $11,000,000 in an armor-plate plant, $20,000,000 in a nitrate plant, $50,000,000 in a ship-purchase scheme, $50,600,000 in a scheme for flood control, which means nothing but the reclamation of privately owned lands. spent last year $40,000,000 on the river and harbor bill, much of which went into dry creeks, where you were compelled to dig artesian wells to furnish the water. [Laughter on the Republican side.] You have increased the number of men on the pay roll at an annual cost of $50,000,000.

You have indulged in other wasteful and inexcusable extravagances too numerous to mention, and now you find it necessary to force the business industries to admit the Government of the United States into partnership with them to the extent of sharing in a certain percentage of their profits. You do not make any guaranty that the earning power of those companies will be increased on account of the copartnership into which you have forced them to admit the Government. You have opened the ports of America to the free entry of foreign-made goods, to be sold in competition with the goods of those whose profits you compel them to share with the Government. You give the foreigner the American market free, while you continue to impose new burdens upon our own people. If a reasonable customs duty had been imposed at the customhouses during the 30 months that have elapsed since the outbreak of the European war, the Treasury would have been $500,000,000 richer and the imposition of the present tax unnecessary,
But no; you would not do that. The American people must be exploited, while the people of the world elsewhere are allowed to ship into American ports during the year 1916 $571,000,000 more of their products than in any other single year of the country's history, while the revenues from that source are $100,-000,000 less

The Northern States pay 94 per cent of the expenses of the Government of the United States, and the Southern States pay 6 per cent. When the Democratic Party is in power the South is in control, and the people who pay 6 per cent of the bills have the power to tax those who pay 94 per cent; and in the exercise dens of the people of their own section, while they give no consideration whatever to the rights of those who live in other sections of the country. Business efficiency is taxed by an inefficient majority in this House-vield-The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield-

Mr. MADDEN. And reckless extravagance have run the finances of the country upon the rock of bankruptcy, beyond the hope of repair. [Applause on the Republican side.]

You gentlemen know nothing whatever about the industrial side of American life. We have 250,000 corporations engaged in the development of the business of America, and they have over

$250,000,000,000 invested in those enterprises

There are more than 10,000 different kinds of business; and you men who are in control of the affairs of the Nation to-day, without any knowledge of any business, presume to say that you can tell how best to regulate the conduct of those busi-You impose a tax upon those who have not sufficient means to engage in business for themselves, and therefore are obliged to combine in the form of corporations. You impose this tax upon those of moderate means who in combination are obliged to enter into partnerships, but you allow to go scot-free the man with millions of dollars to invest who is able to stand alone, and you give as the excuse that he pays a surtax upon his income. But all men who have incomes pay the income tax on equal terms, regardless of whether their incomes be great or small, if the income be above $4,000 a year; and every man, whether he be engaged in business by himself or in partnership with some one else, ought to pay the tax levied upon the American people on the basis of equality. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I yield. Mr. LONGWORTH. In regard to one particular kind of business, how does the gentleman think this tax would affect

Mr. MADDEN. The newspaper with $100,000 capital and $200,000 good will should be allowed an exemption of $29,000 before the tax applies; but under the provisions of this bill only $13,000 exemption will be allowed.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will it not affect them rather more seriously than other corporations in this way: The return provided for under this law is to get at the actually invested capital. What is the invested capital of a newspaper property? the value of the original cash put in, the value of the plant, the assets, and the accumulated surplus? No account whatever is taken of the ability of the manager or anything of that sort; and it occurs to me that scarcely a newspaper in this country would escape paying a large tax under this bill.

Mr. MADDEN. All corporate organizations will be unjustly discriminated against under this tax, while all individual enterprises will be permitted to go scot-free.

Mr. TAGGART. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MADDEN. I decline to yield. Take a man like John Wanamaker, for example, who is conducting his business as a private individual. He is not taxed under this bill, and yet he has one of the greatest enterprises in America. You tax those who are unable to bear the burden, and you allow the man with millions invested in an individual enterprise to escape these You may think you can continue on in this extravagant waste of public money, and that an unsuspecting, confiding people will allow you to continue to impose these unjust and unjustifiable burdens upon their backs; but the time will come when they will tell you what your duty is. They will demand more economy and better business management in the affairs of the Government than you have given any evidence of your ability to apply.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. MEEKER. In the gentleman's opinion would a certain business man who under oath has said that he made $476,000 because a great English statesman used the word "but" exempted from paying a tax on the $476,000?

Mr. MADDEN. He would have absolutely no tax to pay under this bill; yet this man, Barney Baruch, has testified under oath that because of the leak giving information as to the possible issue of a peace note by the President of the United he took advantage of the stock market and made $476,000, not one dollar of which will be taxed under this bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me there?

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Slemp].

Mr. SLEMP. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. That privilege has already been granted.
Mr. KITCHIN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] such time as he may consume.
Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I am always interested and always entertained whenever the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] gets into action. Sometimes I agree with him; but in his speech he made one reference with which I disagree, and because I am going to vote for this bill I think it is incumbent upon me to contribute at least a few words to this discussion.

If this bill passes to-day, and I know it will, the South will not be responsible. As a Northern Democrat I am willing to share the responsibility of the action of the majority on this [Applause on the Democratic side.] In my judgment, Mr. Chairman, this bill provides the best possible manner in which these badly needed revenues of the Government can be secured. Of course, no tax is ever a popular tax, but I believe that the proposition now under consideration has at least this merit, namely, that the little fellow in this country who has to pay exorbitant sums for what he eats and what he wears, who has to struggle hard day by day to make both ends meet, has for once, in revenue-raising times, been overlooked by the tax More power to the Government along these lines, and all praise to the leader who has made this possible! [Applause on the Democratic side.] Mr. Chairman, I want to take this opportunity to say this word, in fairness, of appreciation and admiration for the Democratic leader in this House [Mr. KITCHIN]. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I have been reading in the daily press certain severe strictures in reference to the alleged statements of the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Kitchin] in explanation of the bill now under consideration when he addressed a caucus of his Democratic colleagues on Friday night last. The charge has been made that the gentleman attempted to draw sectional lines, and that in a burst of assurance he informed the Democrats who come from his section of the country that not a dollar of this tax would be raised "below Mason and Dixon line."

I was present at that caucus, Mr. Chairman, and I listened with careful attention to the gentleman's speech, and I can say to this House that no such expression emanated from him. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is true that he said there what he has said in this committee, that the money to be raised in the manner provided for in this bill would find its way to the Northern States almost exclusively, to the shipyards, to the munition shops, to the cloth factories, to the shoe factories. Not the faintest whisper of a suggestion came from the gentleman that we were taxing the North as against the South. my membership in Congress I have carefully observed the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina, and I have learned to appreciate and to admire him as a broad-minded, capable, patriotic American, the peer of any man in the Congress of the United States in loyalty and devotion to that flag and all it represents. [Applause.] He is no sectionalist, and I stand here to-day to pay my tribute of respect and regard for him and to express the hope that in the not far distant future he may receive from even the partisan press of this country the welldeserved appreciation which is due a man who has worked so untiringly and devotedly for his country. [Applause.]

I am concerned over something else just now, in which we all are or ought to be interested.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the time has come when this Congres must act to break down the intolerably high cost of food and by its action put to rout the whole gang of unscrupulous speculators who have been waxing fat and growing foolish in their undreamed-of prosperity. [Applause.] We have learned to our sorrow that everything we eat, from "the apples that blush in the sunlight and glisten in the rain" to the potatoes that blink their dull eyes on our dinner table, is subject to the greed of every manipulator that touches them from the time they fall from the tree or come out of the earth.

Mr. Chairman, it will reflect the very greatest credit on this Congress if we will get into action at once. I believe that we can and we ought to solve the difficulty, as far as food is concerned. Rising prices due to artificial causes are evidence that the workers and producers in this country are being cheated by speculators, gamblers, and thimbleriggers.

Take, for instance, rice. There are upward of 9,000,000 pockets in the South to-day-a much larger crop than we ever raised in past years—and still the market has been advanced fully half a cent a pound in the past month by the manipulators in the North. Beans are out of sight altogether, but I have not the slightest doubt that this is due to the fact that Armour & Co. are to-day one of the largest factors in the country.

The much-despised bean that you and I have so frequently eaten of a Sunday morning is in the neighborhood of 28 cents That is since Armour has gotten control of the product, even to owning farms to raise them on. Armour practically controls the soda-fountain sirups, canned pineapple and peaches, has a good grip on canned corn and peas, eggs, butter, cheese, and is now laying the wires to get a strong grip on the rice output of the country.

Swift & Co. tried to control the soap industry, but Procter & Gamble were too much for them; however, Swift is the main factor in beef, poultry, salt fish, glue, and tallow.

To show you to what limit they go to gouge the little fellow I might cite the instance of a poor fellow who gathers the bones and trimmings at the small restaurants in Boston and pays $1 a hundred for them. That is all they are worth. Swift's man, or at least the Swift crowd trading under the name of the Hinckley Rendering Co., has offered to present the owners of the Chinese restaurants with a box of wool soap a month if the Chinaman would sell him the stuff at the same price that the other fellow was paying.

Is that not on a level with the man who would steal a penny from a little child?

The rule with Swift and Armour is to hire only those between 18 and 35 years of age. Swift has in force a compulsory insurance. Armour works an old-age pension, but, Mr. Chairman, can not you read between the lines? When a man gets beyond the certain age something crops up that means dismissal. is how it looks to me.

If combinations are given a free hand, it will be only a few years when the small dealer will be a thing of the past, the public will be one mass of serfs to the few, and, as the people attain the age of two score and ten, their resting place will be the almshouse.

Mr. Chairman, we can produce anything in this country as cheap, if not cheaper, than any other country, and a moderate tariff is all we require. It is the only country in the world that can live within itself, and for that reason prices on commodities should not be so outrageously high.

An embargo on foodstuffs would soon lower prices. I cited the rice instance. We have taken Japan rice seed and raised more Japan type rice to the acre in Texas than they could raise in Japan. Instead of buying Japan rice from Japan, we sell the Japs their favorite type rice. The Japs cradle out their rice by hand in harvesting. We have a machine that will harvest more rice in one hour than 20 Japs can harvest in one day. Do we need protection on rice?

The Japs sell cotton cloth in China for much less than we do, but the Chinese tell me that the Japanese cotton falls down in two or three washings, while the American-made cloth will last for many months.

With a high tariff manufactured products in this country will remain high and the surplus dumped abroad at a ridiculously We have a corporation here to-day that produces dyestuffs about as cheaply as they can do it in Germany and equally as good. Before the war Germany sold blue cyanite for 12½ cents a pound. Thirty per cent duty brought it above 16 cents a pound. It was sold at from 25 to 50 cents a pound. To-day the American corporation has the various buyers pinned to a contract at $2.75 a pound, and, while they have been producing the stuff since summer time, they have stalled off deliveries until New Year's; in the meantime those who are obliged to buy are referred to a middleman, who exacts $5.50 a obliged to buy are referred to a landstand, pound for immediate delivery. In 1915, 7,000,000 pounds of direct black were sold at 65 cents a pound. With the raw material cheaper this year, the company has forced consumers to pay 95 cents a pound. It is said that the corporation in ques-tion has made a profit in excess of $20,000,000 in two years, and one of the members is said to have declared that they were making so much money they did not know what to do with it.

Mr. Chairman, it has been well said that the world has gone mad over fictitious value and inflated prices. Everything seems to have lost its genuine value in the bewildering figures of its arbitrary price. Nowadays everybody is gambling with everything. May I be permitted here to quote from a recent article by a former brilliant Member of this body, Hon. Martin W. Lit-tleton, of New York, who states a solid truth when he says:

I am liberal enough to allow that anyone who wishes to gamble and juggle and corner may do so if he is gambling and juggling and cornering with others who have the same chance he has, but if I were a sort of benevolent despot I would strangle the men who dared to gamble or juggle with or corner the things which mankind must eat and wear. Better a thousand times the archaic fare table, with the persistent idiot hurling himself against the prevailing percentage; better the poker game, with its sudden, short, sharp thrill, and its ensuing sadness; better all the old forms of gambling, with their classical paraphernalia, for only a few went under.

But to convert the great rich earth into a vast gambling table, with all of nature's beautiful and necessary products as the pawns and wagers, until everything is stamped with a gambling value, and every human being drawn into the game whether he plays or not, and everyone suffering the losses whether he wagers or not, and nobody but the dealer reaping the profits—this is demoralization; this is not commerce—this is chicanery; this is not economics—this is conspiracy; this is not business—this is blackmail!

[Applause.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the pending revenue bill is to raise the necessary revenues for the support of the Government. The minority is always ready and active in voting for appropriations and even increased appropriations, but on this, as on all other revenue bills, they fight it, vote against it, protest it, and throw every obstruction in front of it within their power. True, they are in the minority and as a party carrying no responsibility in levying revenues sufficient to support the Government. Every speech made on that side of the aisle to-day in-dicates their willingness and delight to defeat and embarrass the Public Treasury of the United States. All that is vicious and partisan in American politics has been well exemplified in the debate during the last two days.

UNDERWOOD LAW APPROVED BY THE PEOPLE-PAYNE LAW REJECTED.

Nearly every Republican participating in this debate has roundly assaulted the Underwood law and has richly eulogized the Payne law. In the language of the lawyer, these two bills are res adjudicata.

At the first presidential election in 1912 after the enactment of the Payne law, William Howard Taft, the Republican nominee for the presidency, was overwhelmingly defeated, carrying but the two small States of Utah and Vermont in the entire Union and only receiving a popular vote of 3,484,956. In the same election, Woodrow Wilson, the nominee of the Democratic Party, received a popular vote of 6,293,019. This verdict speaks louder than anything said upon this floor by the representatives of the Republican Party during the last two days of the debate. This speaks in words loud and clear that the American people disapprove the Payne law-there could be no other version of it. In 1916, it being the first presidential election after the enactment of the Underwood bill, Woodrow Wilson, the nominee of the Democratic Party, received on a popular vote 9,120,757 votes, the largest popular vote ever accorded a candidate for the presidency on any ticket in any election in the history of the Republic. [Applause.]

You may pile up your denunciations mountain high on the floor of this House in this partisan debate; you may vote against this bill on a strictly party vote; you may let the center aisle divide the two parties in this House, but the thoughtful people of this Republic will not uphold you in your course. nominee for the presidency in recent campaign assumed the rôle of a carping critic, assailing every achievement of the Wilson administration, and his carpings, his protests, his objections, and his fault-finding were swept aside, and full approval given to the Wilson administration. [Applause on the

Appropriations have been large, it is true, but they have been made in response to a well-developed, well-distributed sentiment throughout the country for adequate military and naval prethroughout the country for adequate mintary and haval pre-paredness, plus the good roads bill, plus the shipping bill, plus the Alaskan Railroad bill—practically all of which you voted for and supported, as the Record will show. For example, the first preparedness bill was passed by a vote of 402 yeas to 2 nays; 194 Democrats voted yes; no Democrat voted no; 190 Republicans voted yes; 1 Republican voted no; 1 Socialist [Applause,] voted no.

The last Army appropriation bill carrying $267,595,530.10 was passed without even the dignity of a roll call. It carried an additional $13,800,000 of authorizations and contracts for which the Government stands committed. That also passed without the dignity of a roll call.

The Navy appropriation bill carrying $269,996,254 passed the House June 2, 1916, by a vote of 360 to 4; 190 Democrats voted yes; no Democrat voted no; 169 Republicans voted yes; 2 Republicans voted no; 1 Socialist and 1 Prohibitionist voted no. In addition this bill carried $225,243,000 in authorizations and contracts for which the Government stands committed.

The Alaskan Railroad bill providing $35,000,000 for the construction of railroads in Alaska to open up that unused and undeveloped Territory, passed the House February 18, 1914. One hundred and sixty-five Democrats voted yes; 68 Democrats voted no; 67 Republicans voted yes; 18 Republicans voted no.
At the risk of being burdensome I could go on and in each case show that the Republicans have voted for all of these appropriations, for all these contracts and authorizations, and now when it comes time to raise revenue to pay for these expenditures made pursuant to practically the unanimous vote of this House, you on the Republican side of the aisle refuse to respond in helping to raise the revenue to pay the bill. No thoughtful man in this House or out of it can truthfully say that the sentiment for preparedness and increased appropriations was brought about by the Democratic Party, was perpetuated by the Democratic Party, or consummated by the Democratic Party. You not only voted for the preparedness bills, but, as a rule, you tried to make them larger by amendments offered and voted for. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

You scream out a jargon of untruths about our extravagance, but no speaker throughout this debate has filed a bill of particulars or cited any particular bill, or any specific extrava-gance of which you complain. Your denunciations are evasive, partisan, beclouding, and usually untrue.

THE SHIPPING OR MERCHANT-MARINE BILL.

Much has been said against the appropriation of $50,000,000 to inaugurate and establish an adequate merchant marine in this country. You of the Republican Party for 50 years have failed to enact an adequate merchant-marine law. There was none on the statute books when we came into power. There is no adequate merchant marine in existence now. The American people are entitled to an adequate merchant-marine law. You Republicans failed them. We delivered the goods. [Applause on the Democratic side.1

There are three ways to get an adequate merchant-marine law: First, by ship subsidy. You Republicans have tried to do that and failed. Second, by private capital going in and constructing the ships and installing an adequate merchant marine. We have waited 50 years for this, and it has never materialized.

The third way is by purchasing the ships, building them, and enacting an adequate merchant-marine law. This the Democratic Congress and the Democratic administration did, and the American people have already approved it, and will continue to approve it; and as soon as the law gets into operation it will be the greatest blessing the country has ever had. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

EXPENDITURES IN MEXICO.

It is true the expenditures for border trouble have been heavy, but you Republicans have voted for every expenditure that was made for the expedition into Mexico and operations along the border, and you have screamed out against us and railed against us in season and out of season because we did not spend more and go farther into Mexico than we did. The real truth is the expenditures we have made have been in response to a welldeveloped, uniform demand on the part of the people of the country that we (1) have adequate preparedness, (2) that we have a good-roads law, (3) that we develop Alaska, and (4) that we have an adequate merchant marine. These are the main items for which the increased appropriations have been

We have responded to this demand as the people have expected to do. You helped enact every one of them; now you are unwilling to pay for them. We have enacted the laws they have expected us to enact. The revenue bill under consideration will be used to pay the bills that the American people asked us to You of the Republican side may in partisanship oppose us and protest. You of the Republican side may scream extravagance and attack our bills and our achievements; but the American people will not be misled, and are not now being misled, by your carpings, your objections, and your abuse. [Prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

REPUBLICANS ASSERT THIS BILL IS A TAXING OF THRIFT AND A REWARDING OF INDOLENCE.

The Republican side of this Chamber, on the heels of a stinging, blighting defeat, like a drowning man grasping at a straw, still clinging to your old theory of protecting the corporations, shielding the trusts and the privileged few, are asserting that this bill is a tax upon thrift and a rewarding of indolence. deny your charges; I assert them to be false and misleading. In truth and in fact, what we are doing is providing that those able to pay and whose earnings yield an income of more than $5,000 annually plus 8 per cent on their entire invested capital for the poor and poverty-stricken and for those in mental anguish and pain. You of the Republican side would at the customhouse tax the coat on the back of the toiler, tax the shoes on the feet of the school children, tax the calico dress worn by the poor washerwoman, and let big business, big incomes, and corporate wealth go free, untaxed, unmolested.

This revenue issue has twice gone to the American people within the past four years, and each time they have answered it in our favor, and they have cast disfavor upon you on the other side of the aisle. What there is in recent events to stimulate you and cause you to bring forth these discordant notes is more than common reason can fathom or understand.

I assert the rule to be as it should be, and that is that those who are able to pay should pay, and that is all that this bill does. The rule is not a new one, neither is it an unjust one, to provide that the strong shall at all times care for the weak. Under the Monroe doctrine, to which we are all committed, the strong Nation cares for the weak one. What is true of countries is true of individuals. The father in strength and ability to earn cares for the family; the strong brother cares for the weaker one. So it has always been in the past, so will it always be in the future; so it is in the lives of men, the history of nations, and so it is in this bill.

To the healthy mind and pulse of men, as well as nations, there is more pleasure in giving than in receiving. At first blush this statement seems platonic and impractical; but only on yesterday we had a golden example of this truism fully exemplified. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Olney], a small business man, took the floor in his own right and announced how happy he was to be able to earn enough so that he might be able to care well for himself, his business, and family and contribute toward the support of the government of us all. I was proud of him then, as I am proud of him now. Prouder still am I of the noble sentiment that prompted the words that fell from his lips.

MANY GOOD MEN IN THIS HOUSE THINK THE PREPAREDNESS PROGRAM TOO LARGE LAST YEAR AND TOO LARGE AGAIN THIS YEAR.

The question as to whether our preparedness program was too large last year and again too large this year is a question for future history to determine. Many good men on our side of the House are of the opinion that the program is too large. With that view I am largely in accord; but at the same breath I must in truth, in candor, and in honesty recognize the fact that the great majority in both branches of Congress does not Therefore agree with this idea and does not agree with me. it becomes my salient duty, as well as the salient duty of the other Members on the Democratic side of this House, to provide sufficient revenue to pay for the program which the majority of both branches of Congress has already enacted and will enact before the adjournment of this Congress. To do otherwise is to first promise and then refuse to pay; to do otherwise is to assume obligations and refuse to meet them. To pursue such a course smacks of dishonor, smacks of partisan politics, smacks of prank playing, for which the American people have never stood in the past and for which they will never stand in the future. To me this debt for which this bill is levied has been honestly contracted and should be honestly paid. province and perhaps the doubtful commission of the minority to protest and rail against this and everything else the majority does; but in turn it is our patent duty upon this side of the House to raise revenue to pay the honest debts and honest obligations that the Congress has created. [Loud applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. OAKEY].
Mr. OAKEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the protest of the Connectleut Mutual Life Insurance Co. of Hartford, Conn., through their attorney, Mr. Lucius F. Robinson, of that city.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record in the manner stated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

HARTFORD, CONN., January 29, 1917.

Hon. P. Davis Oakey,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

$5,000 annually plus 8 per cent on their entire invested capital stock net shall pay this additional tax and that the toilers and farmers and poor people of the country shall be exempt from it. Your long schooling in fostering the trusts, your long practice of bowing to the rich and scorning the poor is but being exemplified on the floor of this House during this debate. [Applause.]

We of the Democratic faith will, with this as with all other bills, be honest, square, and fair with capital, but at the same time we will at least pause and cast a sigh and have a care representing a margin of safety in the value of assets over estimated liabilities. The net income of these companies under the income-tax act may be very small in a given year or it may be an amount which would represent a very large percentage of the previous small book surplus. In the latter case a tax based on the excess of the so-called net income over 8 per cent of the book surplus would mean a heavy tax. Such a result is wholly inconsistent with the intent to tax excess profits and to my mind is preposterous. If the bill does apply to mutual insurance and works in the way which I have indicated we wish to make every possible effort to remedy it.

Yours, very truly,

Lucius F. Robinson.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that I can justly be charged with being one who is unable to consider these revenue bills from other than a partisan and a political In company with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], and with many others upon this side of the House, I voted for the previous revenue bill. I voted for it because I thought there was more good than bad in it and for other reasons which I stated at the time. I have considered this bill carefully and impartially, and from any standpoint I am able to that it is my deliberate judgment that it ought not to be voted for either by any Republican or by any Democrat. This bill ought to be entitled "A bill to make it a crime to organize a copartnership or a corporation, and defining the penalties It penalizes those who attempt to cooperate and therefor." organize either corporatoins or copartnerships.

The bill is prepared in accordance with no principle, no theory; indeed it violates, as I shall show, every principle of taxation and every theory of just government. It works unfairly not only between those whom it exempts on the one hand but between those that it taxes on the other, but it also worked unfairly and unjustly between the classes which it taxes, because it works unfairly between different corporations and different copartnerships. It is a bill that often strikes at the weak while often exempting the wealthy and the millionaire. It is a tax that will be difficult of collection, under which evasion and fraud will run riot, because it is a bill whose taxations will be estimated by self-assessments, each party fixing the sum which he believes he ought to be taxed upon.

Now, Mr. Chairman, such a bill as this is not in my judgment worthy of the vote of any Member of this House. I have much sympathy with my Democratic friends upon the other side, whose ranks are so sadly depleted by the last election as the results of their votes during the last session. [Applause upon the Republican side.] I want to help them, because they will need more sympathy after they have voted for this bill. I want them to be prepared for what will happen after they have given their approval to this measure, so I am going to tell them some questions that they will have to answer when they get home and some explanations that they will have to make. When they go back to their constituents they will be shown a copartnership, we will say, of four members with a capital of $20,000, which makes a profit of $10,000 a year, engaged in some general business in one of our smaller or large cities. the street is another concern of exactly the same kind, doing exactly the same business, with the same capital, and making the same profits, but which an individual owns in its entirety. The copartnership will be taxed under this bill, but the individual will not be. And what explanation will they give when the members of that copartnership ask why they should be taxed when the man across the street is exempt?

Will they say to him, as the gentleman from North Carolina said yesterday, "Oh, this is a small amount, it is a trifling sum you will have to pay." Let us see about that. If they undertake to give any such explanation as that they will find that the man with whom they are talking will take out his pad and pencil and make a few computations. We will suppose there are four persons in this copartnership. The profits of their business are $10,000 a year. Five thousand dollars will be deducted and then you will have 8 per cent on the capital. you figure it out you will find that this little copartnership will have to pay $272 a year. Will they tell that man this is nothing? Will they tell him it is a trifling sum to pay on a capital of $20,000 in addition to all the State, county, and city taxes that the partnership pays? With one "fell swoop" this bill will more than double the taxes of the partnership and put an income tax on each partner of nearly 3 per cent. Will any of our Democratic friends be able to tell him why he should pay something close to 3 per cent on his annual income, which will be less than $2,500 a year as divided among four of them? Will they explain why he should have to pay something close to a 3 per cent tax when his neighbor across the road, possibly a man who has an income of over $19,000, only pays 2 per cent? What excuse will they give for this discrimination? How will they explain why they voted for anything so unfair? Oh, I think possibly there might be one explanation which would be the explanation which was given by the landlord who was presenting a most extortionate bill to a guest at his hotel when the guest indignantly asked, "What excuse can you give for attempting to rob me in this manner? Can you give any answer, any excuse, any reason?" And the landlord said, "Yes, sir; I can."

"What is it?" "I need the money." [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] That is the only excuse that can ever be made for voting for a bill that is so unfair and so unjust in its provisions as this bill. Yes; the gentlemen upon the other side need the money, they need it to pay for the expenses of the Mexican expedition, which has made us the laughing stock of the world. They need it to pay the salaries of the 15,000 officeholders who have been added during this administration. They need it to pay for the nitrate plant to be located upon some southern river and to develop southern waterways. need it to pay for the ships to be bought at extravagant prices to sail in competition with nations that can operate at half the expense that we can. They need it to pay the bills for all of this wild extravagance that has been going on during the present administration.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Just for a short question.

Mr. FESS. What is included under this exemption "personal

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I was just coming to that and was going on to show the injustice of this bill. The exemptions allowed to a partnership are specified very particularly in section 205 of the bill, and it will be found that they are exactly the same as the exemptions allowed an individual under the incometax law. It is plain, therefore, that no allowance can be made for personal services in a partnership unless the income results entirely from personal services, so that the partnership is entirely exempted from the provisions of the bill as provided in another section.

Let us take some concrete examples and the injustice and wrong of this bill becomes very plain. For example, take a law partnership. Here the profits are derived entirely from personal services and consequently are exempted in this bill. They may make $50,000 or $100,000 a year and they will pay nothing, but across the street from them is a small commercial partnership making perhaps $10,000 or $20,000 a year, a great portion of which is derived from the personal services of the They are the ones who will have to pay this tax. and how will my friends upon the other side explain why they should exempt this wealthy firm of lawyers who may make $100,000 a year and tax this copartnership to the extent of 2 or 3 per cent upon their income?

Mr. FESS. Would a stock brokerage company fall under the head of personal services? Is not that all personal?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Unless capital was employed in the business the profits of a brokerage firm would fall under the head of personal services and even if it made $100,000 a month it would not be taxed.

This bill is not an excess profits tax. It does not tax all profits over 8 per cent, conceding they appear to be unreasonable and so high that they ought to be taxed.

It taxes such profits only in the hands of certain parties who may be connected with corporations and copartnerships and elsewhere lets them go free. The man who runs 100,000 acres of land or more, as some men do in the State of California, or 30,000 acres, which one estate operates in the State of Illinoisit makes no matter how much profit there is made from it-will pay nothing under his bill. The man who has a herd of cattle or sheep valued at half a million dollars, or even herds that are worth $1,000,000, or a copartnership owning such a herd. operating out in Colorado, Wyoming, or Montana, will pay nothing under this bill.

Mr. Chairman, if this bill had provided that one citizen out of every three who had made profits in excess of $5,000 and 8 per cent upon his capital should pay this tax, it would be just as fair between those who are compelled to pay it and those who are exempted, and would be more fair than this bill is as between those who are subject to its provisions. Do gentlemen think that they can go back home in the face of all these unjust discriminations, for which no excuse whatever can be given, and answer fairly and reasonably a question from a constituent as to why "I should pay this tax, being a member of a copartnership, and another, who is not a member of a copartnership, should go free "?

Take the example of two banks. I can see them right now, out in one of the towns of my district. Each has a capital of $50,000. We will say that they made last year $15,000, each one of them, it being a good year, and we will suppose that they lost nothing by bad debts. One is run by a corporation, in which a few men are associated; the other is run by an individual. The one that is run by an individual, doing the same business, carrying it on in the same manner, making the same profit, will pay not a cent. How much will the corporation

He pays 2 per cent on his income.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, yes; and the man that is in the corporation will also pay 2 per cent upon his income; he and his associates will pay an additional 2 per cent more because they are running a corporation, and they will pay this tax, amounting to over $700. Altogether the corporation will pay nearly $1,000 more than the other party pays who is running exactly the same business and making the same profits. [Ap-Will gentlemen be able to explain that? I think not.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I shall have to decline to yield.
Mr. HOWARD. I know the gentleman wants to be fair.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes: and I am fair.

Mr. HOWARD. Did not your party put a tax on corporations and did not tax incomes of individuals when you were in

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes: a 1 per cent tax on the net income.

Mr. HOWARD. Then, why do you say that?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Because there are certain special privileges conferred upon all corporations, and for that reason they might properly pay a tax which is merely nominal and would hardly be noticed by the stockholders. But why should they pay tax to this extent, which will seriously affect every small stockholder and every member of a corporation, no matter how small his income or how little his property?

Mr. KELLEY. May I suggest to my friend that at that time the income tax was not available.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from Michigan is quite

Mr. HOWARD. You did not confine it to corporations exercising the power of eminent domain. If you had, then you would have been in an exclusive class.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I can not yield further. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Kitchin] stated yesterday a similar tax had been imposed by foreign Governments. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. In England, France, Russia, in all of these countries, with the exception of Germany, which only imposes the tax upon corporations or associations similar to corporations, they have not exempted individuals. impose the tax in a manner that has at least the semblance of equality and fairness. In England and France the tax is upon the business whether conducted by an individual, copartnership, or corporation. It is conceded in these countries that there is much unfairness and injustice worked by its operation, although levied much more equitably than ours. I can imagine what a storm of protest would break forth in these countries if the individual was entirely exempted. Moreover, these nations do not impose the tax upon capital or a tax upon profits in excess of a certain sum made upon capital. With them the tax is a genuine excess-profit tax; that is, it is upon the excess profits over those received under normal years, and to get at the normal profit they take the average of a certain number of years before the war; and this leads me to consider how unfairly the manner of levying the tax in this bill affects all concerns subject to its provisions whether they be partnerships or corporations. That which would be a reasonable profit in one kind of business would not be in another. It all depends upon the risk which is taken. A large milling company which makes a standard product always in demand, such as flour, and is always able to go out into the open market and buy its material as cheaply as its competitor might well be contented with a profit of 4 per cent, because it could reasonably expect to make it every year. People must have flour, but the position of a big miller would be very different from that of the small manufacturer who makes some article in the nature of a luxury, the demand for which must depend on whether we have good or bad times. Such a one in good times would probably have a large profit, and in bad times will run at a loss, if he runs at all. The laws of these other nations which have levied an excess-profit tax allow for all this, but this bill, which, if it becomes a law, will always and every where work unfairly, makes no such allowance. I commend to the attention of the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means, under whose direction this bill was prepared, a study of the statutes and laws of other nations in this respect. I assure them they would be greatly benefited by such a study, as it is quite evident they have not given them even a cursory examination.

But even if European nations had adopted this plan, what excuse would it be? Mr. Chairman, I have said some very un-complimentary things at various times with reference to the financial management of the affairs of this Nation by the Democratic Party. I know, as gentlemen on this side have stated to-day, that there is now in the Treasury a deficiency instead of a free working balance. But I never have stated and I never have claimed, as some gentlemen on the other side seem to conthat the Democratic administration has brought this Nation to the financial straits of the European countries which are now at war. Those nations have squeezed the rich and ground the poor. They are grasping like drowning men for every source of revenue. Finally, they have reached out and adopted a plan for a tax not so bad, not so unfair, not so unjust as this tax, and yet which they concede to be harsh, oppressive, and unequal to some extent. Now we are told that because these nations under these circumstances have imposed this tax; that we, in time of peace, must be made to bear the same burdens as these nations which are straining every resource to obtain funds to prosecute the most gigantic war known in

Mr. Chairman, so far I have not been discussing this bill from a political standpoint. I have considered its provisions simply with reference to whether it would work out fairly and justly, as any tax imposed ought to work; whether it would tax equally those who were engaged in like business and under like circumstances. But there is one other matter concerning which I wish to speak before I close. This bill does not really touch the great issue that ought to be before this Congress. While these nations who are now engaged in Europe in a life and death struggle, while they are exhausting every effort in order to conquer if possible, still their statesmen find some time and some room for their energies in preparing for what must come when peace is declared, but we-we who ought to profit both by experience and opportunity-are drifting day by day toward the inevitable catastrophe that was pictured for us before the war began and which must inevitably come after its close. And what is being done? Nothing. What remedy do they offer? None except to further hamper business and attempt to fetter further enterprise and progress, for an unjust and unfair tax always has this result.

Our friends across the aisle are blind to the future and forgetful of the past. We remember how, less than three months after the enactment of the Underwood fariff, the business failures in this country reached the very peak, surpassing anything we had ever had known before both in volume and amount. Through the weary months of the fore part of the year 1914 we watched our exports decrease and imports increase. We saw our revenues decline; we saw our gold commence to go abroad. We saw our workmen out of employment, and depression in every rank of business. The war, and the war alone, saved us from a business panic such as we had never known before.

And now, when there will come-for it must come after this war is closed—a trade war which in its intensity will rival the present armed conflict now going on, we make no preparation for it, but leave wide the avenues through which foreign goods may flood our ports. We set up no dam and no breakwater at this time, when we might, by a proper and reasonable protective-tariff instead of this bill, raise millions to defray our expenses, protect our markets, and maintain our prosperity. The Democratic Party writes, as it always has done when any great issue has been before it, "Failure" upon the doors of this House. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Nebraska? Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If I have any further time I will.

Mr. REAVIS. I noticed in an article last week that prior to the war in Europe, or the year before the war, approximately 50 per cent of the importations into the Empire of Russia were purchased of Germany alone. With the feeling of bitterness that will exist between these nations, Germany and Russia, when this war is over, how many of German goods will Russia buy, and where, excepting in the United States, can Germany recoup that lost commerce?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Nowhere that I know of, I will have to answer the gentleman. Our country will become a dumping ground for European and Asiatic manufactures. We will be obliged to face, after the war closes, a struggle for our markets such as we have never known before. We ought to prepare for it. But this bill makes no preparation whatever. plause on the Republican side.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] if he desires to use some time?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Shall we go on?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; go on.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania, Mr. Chairman, by authority of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Fordney], I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Kelley].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Ker-

LEY] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, there is scarcely a thoughtful business man in the United States who does not look forward with more or less apprehension to the time when American business men will have to fight for trade instead of having business thrust upon them, as is the case to-day. It is a matter of common knowledge, I think, to all men in this body, anyhow, that our three great competitors across the sea—England, France, and Germany—will be more efficiently prepared for business when this war closes than they were when the war started. And yet, as the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Green] has just stated, we are to interpose no obstacle to what will probably be the sharpest competition we have ever known, except the Underwood tariff law—the lowest tariff law ever in force in America, and a law that lets in absolutely free now 70 per cent of all our imports.

Now, it has been stated by gentlemen on the other side that the Underwood tariff law will be sufficient for that day; that we are living under it now, and enjoying prosperity such as we have seldom, if ever, enjoyed in the history of the Republic. The American people should not be mislead by our present-day The man in business who goes blindly forward on the theory that present conditions are normal will be apt to wake up some morning to find his business in the hands of a receiver. We ought, like sensible people, to carefully examine the basis upon which our prosperity rests. It must be remembered that trade conditions are most favorable to this country just now, not through the operation of the Underwood law or any other law, but by the circumstance of war. Since the beginning of the war competition from abroad has ceased in many lines, and from certain countries altogether. Why, at this time a large part of the Continent of Europe is shut out of the American markets altogether by the operation of war. For two years and a half the great German Empire has not been able to come into the American market at all.

The same thing is true of Austria. It is true of Belgium. It is true of Russia, or practically so. And because of the need for war supplies Great Britain and France have had to turn their energies from competitive lines to prepare their people to carry on this gigantic war that is going on on the other side. And so it happens that there never was an hour in the history of this Republic, even under the highest protective tariff, when the American people controlled and enjoyed so large a percentage of our own domestic markets as we enjoy to-day. [Applause on the Republican side.] Why, if there ever was any doubt about the value of protection this war has furnished abundant proofs, because we are now enjoying the highest rate of protection we have ever enjoyed in the history of this Republic, not through the operation of law but because of the operation of war. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Not only that, but when this great war came on we started

Not only that, but when this great war came on we started in upon a period of exportation unparalleled in the history of modern nations. Last month our exports from the United States amounted to $517,000,000. Multiply that by 12 and you get $6,200,000,000, which will represent our export trade for the current year if we go on as we are going now. The highwater mark of our exports prior to the war was $2,000,000,000 per annum. So that we not only find ourselves in possession of a larger percentage of our own domestic trade than ever before, but on top of that a surplus annual foreign trade of approximately $4,000,000,000. Under such circumstances it would be a strange thing if we did not prosper. I do not know how much a billion dollars is, any more than you do, but it is a corking lot of money. I know that. [Laughter.]

Some little time ago I thought I would try to find out what this tremendous export trade meant in day's work for men, because, after all, that is the test of the value of any trade or business. So I took a trip for a couple of weeks along the Atlantic seaboard, starting in at Hopewell, Va. I found a town down there of approximately 50,000 people. Two years and a half ago there was no such place on the map as Hopewell, Va., although the industries of the city are now employing 20,000 men. What are they making there? Guncotton. What is guncotton? It is the first step in the manufacture of smokeless powder. They are using a thousand bales of cotton a day down there, at $100 a bale, or $100,000 worth of cotton a day in that one plant.

What kind of a looking town is Hopewell, Va.? The business district of the city is, in the main, built up in the most femporary fashion, and the resident section is made up of three and four room houses covered with tar paper. Why build a town of 50,000 inhabitants in that temporary fashion? Why, the business which supports the town is a temporary business.

The city was not there when the war started, and when the war ends it will probably disappear just as quickly as it came. The question that particularly concerns us here and which you will have to answer on that side of the aisle is what will the 20,000 men at Hopewell do when they cease their temporary employment in which they are now engaged? [Applause on the Republican side,]

Then I went up to Eddystone, just outside of Chester, Pa. I found there a new plant employing 14,000 men at a shift, and three shifts a day, making 42,000 men in that one plant. What were they making? Rifles and sabers for Great Britain and France. What will those 42,000 men find employment at when they stop making rifles and sabers for Great Britain and France?

Then I went to the works of the Midvale Steel Co., just outside of the city of Philadelphia. I saw there 20,000 extra men making guns, shells, and ammunition of all descriptions for the allies. I went into one great shop, where they were making huge shells, each requiring a thousand pounds of steel, and they were turning out a thousand shells a day. A million pounds of steel were being used in that one shop every day for the manufacture of shells.

Then I went to the great Bethlehem Steel Co.'s plant at Bethlehem, Pa. They are the Krupps of America. They make the mammoth guns for the Navy and for our coast fortifications. I found them making field guns, gun carriages, shells, fuses, and ammunition of all kinds, all ready to be shipped to the armies in the field on the French frontier. That great company has an extra force of 50,000 men. Before the war commenced they had 23,000 men. Now they employ 73,000 men. The extra 50,000 men are engaged largely upon this temporary business, this business of supplying the allied armies with munitions of war. What will these 50,000 extra men do when this temporary employment ceases? Why, they will probably be looking for jobs now held by other men. Then I went up to the flourishing city of Bridgeport, Conn. I saw there one entirely new factory, more than half a mile long, 300 feet wide, and five stories high, employing 10,000 men, and not a single American order in the plant. What were they making there? They were turning out 5,000 rifles and sabers every day for France and Russia. What will these 10,000 men do when they quit making rifles and sabers for France and Russia? Only a half a mile away this same company owns another plant employing 10,000 more extra men making ammunition, and still another plant at Ilion, N. Y., employing 10,000 more men in the same line. The Remington Arms Co. has 30,000 extra men working on orders contingent on the duration of the war in Europe, and the du Ponts have 50,000 extra men making powder for export—all temporary business.

These temporary orders are not confined to the munition business, as some seem to think. Make no mistake about that. I went farther up into New England and visited a great cotton mill in Manchester, N. H., where, under the operations of the Underwood tariff law, the better grades of business had slipped away from them. They were nearly ready to close down when the war began. When I was there they were running night and day, three shifts, and making what? Making duck for stretchers and tents for the armies of the Old World.

The same thing was true in many of the woolen mills in New England, where they are making soldiers' uniforms, woolen blankets, and all that sort of thing for the armies of Europe. I saw hundreds of men in great shoe factories around Boston making military shoes for the armies of the Old World. So that when this war stops it does not take a philosopher to understand that we are bound to lose a tremendous amount of export business. Four billion dollars of exports-what does that mean? Why, if you estimate that three-quarters of the value of an article represents labor and one-quarter material, that means $3,000,000,000 worth of labor in this $4,000,000,000 surplus of foreign export trade. If you allow a thousand dollars a year per man, you have by this tremendous extra foreign business given employment on our shores to 3,000,000 workingmen who will not have that employment when the temporary work upon which they are engaged ceases. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, it may be said by some hopeful people that we are going right on exporting just the same when the war ends; that they are going to need our products to build up the destroyed and ruined places of the Old World. But let us not deceive ourselves unnecessarily about that.

Who are our great competitors over there? England, France, and Germany. What industries have been destroyed in Germany? Why, no hostile foot has been planted on German soil since the war began. When I think of it, it is to me the marvel of the world that out of their own industries, single-handed and practically alone, without any aid from the outside world, the German people have been able, not only to take care of their peace needs, but they have been able to supply everything that their great armies have needed in the field for two and one-half years. Have you any idea that a nation with factories capable of supplying the needs of a great war, such as is going on over there, is going to come to us for great quantities of our products when peace comes? I fear that such is an idle hope:

The same thing is true of France. Of course, a few industries have been taken over by Germany in northern France. But in the main the industries of France are upon a firmer foundation than ever before. All unnecessary expense of production has been eliminated and her factories are more efficient to-day than they have ever been in the history of that wonderful country.

What factories have been destroyed in England during this war? Why, no hostile foot has been planted on English soil in a thousand years. Her industries have not been destroyed. On the contrary, they have never been so well organized as now. The other day Mr. Hurley, chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, a commission appointed by President Wilson, told the bankers in a speech at Cincinnati, when he warned American business men as to the character of the competition which they must be prepared to meet at the close of the war, that England has made more progress in industry, has cut more corners, and has increased her industrial efficiency more in the last 30 months than in 30 years preceding the war. That is the opinion of an expert appointed by President Wilson to study just this sort of thing, but I fear our Democratic friends are not profiting much by the warning sounded by Mr. Hurley. And, men representing the people of the United States, do you not think that at a time when we are bound to lose a tremendous amount of foreign business, approximating something in the neighborhood of three or four billion dollars, we ought to have sense enough to at least see to it that our American business, our normal domestic trade, should at least be preserved for the people of the United States? [Applause on the Republican side.] Just one more thought in conclusion. When the First Congress met in this country, two great governmental policies were inaugurated which have vitally affected the life of the Republic through the century and a quarter of its existence. One of these policies related to our domestic affairs and the other to our foreign affairs.

Under Washington we set out to build up here a new and better civilization by protecting ourselves against the cheaper conditions of other less favored lands. The first important step of the new Republic was the enactment of a protective tariff. [Applause on the Republican side.] Now, I have always believed that when the Lord gave us the heart of this great continent, rich in natural resources beyond the dreams of men, somehow or other He intended that there should be built up here under a new sky, in a new land, under a new flag, a new civilization which would be higher and cleaner and freer and more enduring than any other civilization in the world. [Applause.] And I have always believed that we should protect that civilization against all cheaper and meaner civilizations throughout the world. [Applause on the Republican side.]

throughout the world. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The other grent policy that Washington left us as a rich legacy of wisdom to guide us in our international relations was that while we should maintain friendly and cordial relations with all the nations of the world, we should make alliances with none. [Applause.] And so, gentlemen of the House, it seems to me that these two great historic doctrines may well command our continued allegiance—doctrines adhered to by our people through stress and storm and prosperity alike during the whole of our national existence, and through the observance of which our country has steadily advanced from the lowlands until it occupies a commanding place among the nations of the earth. [Prolonged applause on Republican side.]

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the time allotted me is an exceedingly brief period in which to call attention to the monumental faults and follies of this Democratic Congress in its appropriations and expenditures, and to discuss its seemingly measureless incapacity to wisely or equitably provide the funds to fill the abysmal and yawning chasm of deficit which its reckless expenditure has created, and yet it must suffice.

The enormous additional burdens which the American people are to be called upon to bear immediately and in future years under this tax bill is the first installment of the price the people are to pay for the continuation in power of this Democratic régime. Few expenditures or appropriations, however enormous or indefensible, were refused or denied which held out the slightest hope or promise of contributing a few votes to the support of the Democratic candidates. This scheme of wholesale legislative and appropriation persuasion, amounting almost to bribery, having produced a bare majority for the administration, the people are now called upon to pay the price.

Preparedness is the stock excuse and apology for the abysmal Treasury deficit; and to make preparedness do service as the all-covering mantle for a countless multitude of sins a hundred millions squandered along the Mexican border, another hundred millions worse than wasted in shipping boards, nitrate plants, and unnecessary and superfluous West Indian islands are included under the all-embracing title of "preparedness."

cluded under the all-embracing title of "preparedness."

But assuming for the sake of argument that every dollar of the expenditures made and contemplated, on account of which these taxes are to be levied and hundreds of millions of bonds issued, was necessary, the plan proposed in this legislation for meeting these enermous expenditures still reveals the colossal inaptitude of the Democratic Party to wisely, fairly, or equitably levy and assess the burdens of government. Had the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill remained on the statute books, with its percentage of average duties on imports, our Treasury to-day in stead of exhibiting the pitiful picture of bankruptcy glossed over by forced entries and misleading bookkeeping, would contain a sum large enough to meet all present obligations and carry the Nation far in the future, even under present enormous expenditures, without additional revenue legislation.

The enactment of a fair and reasonable tariff law at this time, notwithstanding all that we have lost by reason of our failure to have such a law on the statute books the past three years, would still produce, under our present volume of importations, enough to largely, if not entirely, pay for even the extravagant appropriations of this Congress.

Such protective tariff legislation would tend to reduce the cost of living by encouraging domestic production to compete with foreign imports. It would lay the burden of unusual expenditures very largely upon those in foreign lands who seek our markets, rather than, as in the case of this bill, upon those whose energy and enterprise are the bone and sinew of our industry. Such legislation would constitute a bulwark of true and absolutely essential preparedness. It would arm and equip the Nation industrially and financially to meet the inevitable industrial invasions which the coming of international peace will precipitate. Such is the legislation which the Republican Party would present as the alternative of this measure.

This measure, having its genesis in reckless and spendthrift extravagance, accentuates the burdens thus accumulated by mortgaging the future to meet the obligations of the present, and by laying the burden of the residue not upon the foreigner seeking our markets and our citizens generally as they may be assumed or adjudged to have been benefited by the expenditures which have been made, but upon thrift, intelligence, and capacity as exercised and exemplified by citizens engaged in certain lines of business.

The measure is, however, in entire harmony with the general attitude of the Democratic Congress, which, ignoring the principles of sound statesmanship and appropriating with reckless and almost criminal extravagance, now lays the tax burden present and future unfairly and inequitably through crude and temporary makeshifts devoid of all semblance of a fixed, permanent, or defensible fiscal policy.

I admit that one is scarcely justified in expecting even a semblance of legislative wisdom and sanity from the Democratic majority, but the way of wisdom is in this case so plain and the necessity of a policy of preparation against the fierce competition of our industrial rivals at the close of the European war has been so widely and so generally admitted by men of all political parties, including men on the Democratic side in this Congress, that there did seem reasonable ground to expect that in providing for the deficits which their appropriations have produced the Democratic majority would to a certain extent at least avail itself of the extraordinary opportunity for securing revenues through customs duties which the present hour presents and the future will even more largely afford.

But it seems that the Democratic majority, whatever may be the views or opinions of certain of its members relative to the wisdom and advisability of increasing certain tariff rates, is still under the control of the bourbon free-trade element of the party and refuses in the present as in the past to be guided by reason or taught by experience. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. O'SHAUNESSY].

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I wish to add my testimony to that of the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gallivan], who gave us a correct account of what took place in the Democratic caucus the other night. It seems a pity that the press of the country should misrepresent so patriotic, so distinguished, and so honest a Representative as the gentleman from North Carolina, CLAUDE KITCHIN, [Applause.] I wish to say that at no time in the consideration that the caucus gave to this Democratic measure was there anything said by the gentleman from North Carolina which would inject into the discussion of this proposition the narrow sectionalism which is always hungered for by some people in their endeavor to create and to maintain a difference between the different parts of this country, a thing that I unreservedly condemn as unpatriotic, unmanly, unjust, and unfair. [Applause.] To me as an American the South is as great a section as the North or the East or the West, and those people who give garbled accounts of what takes place in Democratic caucuses would be better engaged if, instead of crying out in their Oliver Twist fashion for more protective tariffs, they would fasten their eyes upon the American flag rather than upon the cash box. [Applause.] We have had in this country a splendid propaganda for preparedness, and as a Democrat I want to say that I believe in preparedness. I believe in a navy that shall be a real, efficient first line of defense. I believe in the strengthening of our Army. I differ very much with some of my colleagues on this side of the Chamber in my conception of the necessity for preparation. I have as yet for realize that human nature has changed very much. I have frequently stated that I do not believe any prophylactic has as yet been discovered for the arena thirst. In other words, men will fight, and, much as I applaud the lofty sentiments contained in the masterful address of the President of the United States to the Senate, hoping for the day when armaments shall be no more and when peace shall reign upon earth, to me it is almost futile to expect it. But I want to applaud him now for the majesty of his reasoning, for the beneficence of his thought, for the wonderful feeling he gives out in that address for humanity and its burdens. [Applause.] Yet I believe in preparation,

I suppose I voted for those great measures with as much pleasure as any man in this House. I was glad to see our Army increased. I was glad, above all things, to see the Navy increased. How these appropriations have jumped! From $250,-000,000, I believe, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, $258,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, $613,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and the estimates for the year ending June 30, 1918, $777,000,000, for preparation. Our last naval bill alone carried $313,000,000, and the naval bill that has just been reported carries $351,000,000. For the protection of our country and the perpetuation of its institutions I would vote twice that amount, if necessary. [Applause.] And I say to you gentlemen who criticize this bill, I am not a pessimist. I take no stock in the doleful views of the gentlemen upon the other side of the Chamber who say that when the war is over our factories will collapse. The head of the great United States Steel Corporation, supposedly familiar with business, and speaking for an industry which is presumably the barometer of trade, tells us that that company is booked up with orders for 1917 and 1918, and the Bethlehem Steel Co. says to the United States Government: "We can not build your ships. We are overloaded with orders, and we are praying for a cessation of this prosperity in order that we may do some of your work.'

Mr. FARR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I will.

Mr. FARR. The Bethlehem Steel Co. is willing to build these ships at the Fore River yard. The gentleman is making an erroneous statement.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I saw the statement that they were loaded up with orders. Perhaps they have had a change of heart. I hope so. The hearings before the Navy Committee established the truth of it.

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Yes.

Mr. EAGLE. I noticed a statement by President E. H. Gary, of the United States Steel Corporation, a few months ago in which in substance he stated that more than 75 per cent of the bookings of the United States Steel Corporation were for domestic consumption and not for foreign export.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman, I was just about to refer to what the gentleman from Texas has so well said, that it is not war contracts to-day upon which they are predicating their great prosperity, it is for peaceful industries. I am a New England Democrat, proud to vote for this bill, and I want to say to gentlemen upon the other side that I have met many men, Democrats-and, yes, many Republicans-down in my section of the country who rejoice that they are privileged to pay an income tax to the Government of the United States, and speaking for myself, small though my possessions may be, I am glad that I shall have the opportunity soon to pay twice the amount this year that it was last year in order to show my fidelity to the Government.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Would the gentleman be willing to pay three taxes?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Yes; if need be for this Government of ours for preparedness. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is a peculiar situation, an anomalous one, indeed, and if I were to give political advice to the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber I would tell them to look to the future for their political positions. How are you going to explain to your constituents, my friends, that you went out and fought for pre-paredness; that you sang with the multitude in America the hymn of preparation; that you witnessed with joy the great and majestic processions moving through our cities, and, forsooth, when the bill came before the House of Representatives to provide the funds you ran away? Oh, what a theme for the Democrat looking for the seat of a Republican! I give you this advice gratis [laughter], and I trust that when the roll is called your patriotic spirits will dominate your commercial instincts. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I hope that instincts. [Applause on the Democratic sue.] I hope that you will remember that we should be prepared, that the taxes have to be gathered. Oh, what a pitiful spectacle you will the stump when you go forth and say, "I tried, present upon the stump when you go forth and say, "I tried, my fellow workingmen," when you meet them near the factory doors, where hands are soiled with toil, "to put the tax upon your broad shoulders, my fellow workingmen; I wanted to take it from your pocket in the guise of increased tariffs, repudiated by the American people when they turned the Republican Party out of power and condemned Mr. Taft for his supine indifference to the needs and necessities of the American people.

Ah, that will be a sad day when you will try to justify your case, and then you will say to them, "I will tell you what the Democrats wanted to do instead. They had a bill down there and they wanted to tax the excess profits of corporations and copartnerships. They were running wild with their financial schemes to recuperate the Treasury. They wanted to levy a tax on industry after the industry had made 13, 14, 15, 16, 18, 20 per cent, and yet, as the friend of the workingman, I protested and said, 'Do not touch that sacred pile made by American industry.'" Where will you get off? [Laughter.] Oh, say you, leave this sacred pile of wealth created by American industry alone. These captains of industry and the people associated with them cried out with all their voice and strength for preparedness; they wanted a mighty Navy and an efficient Army, but when the time comes to pay the bill they say, "Do not touch my sacred pile of gold, but go to the workingman and get it from him." I think you mistake the temper of the American business man. I would feel ashamed of my country, I would feel that their eyes were forever upon profits, that they were recreant to the Stars and Stripes if they were to say, as you say they are ready to say, that they are not ready and willing to contribute to a fund that shall make us invincible before the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.]
Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to th

Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON].

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, as the son of a Union soldier I regret this continual bringing up of sectionalism in this House. I do not protest against this bill because it may be sectional. What I do protest against is that of the tax that is attempted to be levied in it and is levied in it 95 per cent is to be paid by Republicans, North and South. Bugles are sounding taps along the Rio Grande to-night, taps to the glory of the flag, taps to the honor of the Nation. thus ends what was inaugurated a few months ago by a Democratic President for political expediency. This little political expediency matter cost the country over $160,000,000, and represents the contribution of the American people to the Democratic campaign fund. It is now admitted by the withdrawal of these National Guardsmen, without accomplishing the purposes for which they were sent, that it was unnecessary to send them to the border.

Nothing has been accomplished by this enormous expense to the people. This army that was sent forth a few months ago to uphold national honor is now in full retreat, the objects and purposes for which it was sent forth unaccomplished.

Before all the nations of the earth we stand marked as The Democratic Party, in order to procure the muchneeded revenue, instead of using Congress to enact legislation that not only would produce revenue but at the same time advance and protect the citizens of this country in their lawful pursuits uses the methods used by the pickpocket and takes from the citizens of this country, and mostly from Republicans, for 95 per cent of this profit tax will be paid by Republicans, money which justly belongs to them.

Not content with the methods of the pickpocket, they are using the methods of the grave robber and taxing the estates of those who have been so unfortunate as not to have died before this law was enacted.

What protection does the Democratic Congress give these people for this additional tax that they do not now enjoy?

It has been very cleverly devised, however, so that it will fall very lightly upon those who voted to reelect our illustrious President and to fall very heavily upon those who dared vote against him. But the Democratic Party knows where to place the taxes so that it will be borne most heavily by those who do not dance to its music. My city alone will pay over $12,000,000 in additional taxes because of this bill.

If the Nation was at war this might be justifiable, but for a party that kept itself in power because of the fact that it kept us out of war, I see no justification for this bill

Mr. Kitchin says this bill was devised to place the tax upon those who were most enthusiastic for "preparedness," but is that the real reason? Is not the concealed reason the fact that this tax will be born mostly by Republicans?

This is class legislation, against the institutions of a free government, such as ours founded in equal rights to all and special privileges to none. Other methods could have been devised to raise this tax, but our good Democratic friends decided that the best way was to place it where it would do the least harm to the Democratic Party. Our fathers taught us that taxation without representation was tyranny, but the teachings of our fathers have no terror for the "unterrified Democracy."

If it cost $160,000,000 to carry on this war with Mexico, in which one battle was fought, what would it cost to carry on a war with a first-class power under a Democratic administration? As far as the bond issuing feature of this bill is concerned, I can simply say issuing bonds is a Democratic habit.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hamilton].

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, it was a favorite aphorism of the late P. T. Barnum, who for many years ran the greatest show on earth, that the people like to be hum-

In the last election the people were called upon to decide whether from then on we should have "intellectualized emoexpressed in language or plain business sense; whether we should have protection or more kinds of direct taxes-and the people decided in favor of more language and more taxes.

This is a government by majorities. As a man thinketh, so is he, and as a majority think, so goes the Republic.

It was a good deal of a billboard campaign, this last campaign, and one of the most moving and emetic pictures was that of an emotional female in the foreground with arms extended toward the Chief Executive thanking God for Wilson "because he kept us out of war," and it worked; Barnum was right. [Laughter.]

A gentleman connected with the Chicago Tribune, Mr. B. L. Taylor, also proposed a vote of thanks to the Lord for Carranza "because he kept us out of Mexico" [laughter on the Republican side], but his suggestion arrived too late in the campaign for adequate consideration.

This billboard feature of the campaign was supplemented by an executive publicity service which in four years had gained high efficiency

There is nothing like a publicity bureau.

I have known statesmen with no other asset above mediocrity than a well-financed publicity bureau to advertise themselves from day to day until not only the people thought them indispensable but they themselves thought so. Barnum was right. [Laughter.]

One of the specialties of the Executive publicity service has been "crises," in which the Chief Executive dominated each situation with supernatural intelligence—and it worked.

"The changing circumstances of the world" lent themselves to headline politics until we had a crisis nearly every morning before the election; and last summer, when for a moment there was nothing else "to holler about," as the newsboys say, the President's publicity bureau took advantage of an epidemic of sharks up along the New Jersey coast and announced in glaring headlines that the President would suppress all sharks within the 3-mile limit and hold them to strict accountability. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Not only did these billboards and these headlines stir emotional people to extravagant thanksgiving for the continuity of Mr. Wilson in a wicked world, but every job-holding Democrat lifted up his voice in glad, melodious acclaim until even plain people, whose only function is to pay taxes, felt it a privi-lege to be assessed to advance the "new freedom" and other things they did not understand.

Mr. Wilson is a good deal of an expert in political and crowd psychology. He knows the value of suggestion and has exemplified it on his party and the emotional fringe around it.

Once, when the Washington Post March was popular, John Philip Sousa, passing an organ grinder on the street, was disturbed at his inartistic rendering of the march and stopped to show him how. Passing that way an hour later his attention was attracted by a crowd gathered around the organ, on which was hung a huge placard, on which were written these words, "The Washington Post March as played upon this instrument by John Philip Sousa, the composer." And the organ was playing to good business. Barnum was right. [Laughter.]
In-discussing party policies it has always been thought necessary to ascertain first whether a party has any policies, and if it has any policies to-day it has always been thought advisable to ascertain whether it is likely to have any policies to-morrow.

And in trying to determine whether it is likely to have any policies te-morrow, it has always been considered advisable to ascertain what it did with its policies day before yesterday.

But in view of the vote of last November, it is obviously futile to inquire what the policies of the Democratic party were yesterday, or what they are likely to be to-morrow. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

In view of the result it was of no avail in the last campaign to discuss the administration's Mexican inconsistencies.

It was of no use to quote the President's Indianapolis declaration that because the nations of Europe had taken as much time as they pleased to shed as much blood as they pleased, the right to shed blood should not be denied to Mexico because she was weak.

It was of no use to quote his declaration that so long as he was President no one should "butt in" in Mexico, because "we can not in the circumstances be partisans of either party in Mexico," and his constant violation of his own announced policy.

It was of no use to call attention to the fact that having driven Huerta out he set Villa up because "we could not in the circumstances be partisans of either party in Mexico." [Laughter on the Republican side.] And having pulled Villa down he set Carranza up because "we could not in the cir-cumstances be partisans of either party in Mexico." [Renewed

And it was of no use to call attention to the fact that because we could not in the circumstances be partisans of either party in Mexico" he supplied each bandit in turn with arms and ammunition by removing the embargo on munitions and that thereupon each bandit turned our guns upon us.

It was of no avail in the last campaign to remind the people that the Democratic party had gone into power on the declara-tion that protection was the unconstitutional cause of high prices, which they proposed to reduce by reducing duties with-out injury to any legitimate industry; and it was of no avail to remind them that the Democratic Party had not kept its word.

It was of no use to remind the people that the Democratic Party had promised "simplicity and economy and the rigid enforcement of the civil-service laws"; and it was of no use to remind them that the Democratic Party had not kept its word.

It was of no use to remind the people that the Democratic Party had declared in its platform that its "promises were made to be kept in office as well as relied on before election," and it was of no use to remind the people that the Democratic Party had not kept its word.

To argue the question now would be an argument after the verdict.

The public memory seems to be short. There is no argument that will have convincing effect except the argument of disaster. Barnum was right. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Roswell G. Horr, of Michigan, used to say the Republican Party was different from the Democratic Party. He said if the Republican Party was not different from the Democratic Party, there would not be any difference.

Well, one difference between the Republican Party and the Democratic Party is that the Republican Party had the habit of putting more into the Treasury every day than it took out, and the Democratic Party has the habit of taking more out every day than it puts in.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Does the gentleman desire more time? Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Oh, no; let it go. [Cries of Mr. FORDNEY. I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The Democratic Party went into power with a balance in the Federal Treasury of $153,-000,000, left there by the Republican Party after 16 years of prosperity, during which we had been paying our debts out of normal revenues derived from duties levied for the protection of American labor and American industry.

Then, the country ran itself for seven months on the balance left in the Federal Treasury by the Republican Party and the proceeds of Republican legislation.

Meanwhile an extra session of Congress was busy preparing a bill for the introduction of the "new freedom," and on the night of October 3, 1913, at 9 o'clock and 10 minutes, eastern time, foreign goods of the estimated value of $170,000,000, which had theretofore been held in bonded warehouses, came in to displace the products of American labor and American industry under the invitation extended by the Underwood law.

This was the beginning of a flood of foreign importations which, notwithstanding the war in Europe, has kept on increasing until the importations for the fiscal year ended June 30 last amounted to $2,198,000,000, exceeding the importations for the fiscal year 1915 by $524,000,000 and exceeding the average annual importations under the Payne-Aldrich law from 1911 to 1914 by $476,000,000.

Importations for the fiscal year from July 1 last down to and including December last, have been coming in at the rate of more than $184,000,000 a month and at the rate of more than $2,000,000,000 a year.

Notwithstanding the importations under the invitation extended by the Underwood law, the revenue has kept on falling off and this bill is the third of its kind to supplement the failure of the Underwood law to yield sufficient revenue to run the

On September 4, 1914, 11 months to a day from the date the Underwood law went into effect, and 35 days after the war began, the President came before Congress and asked for a tax of $100,000,000 on the people because he said the falling off of revenue was "in chief part" due to the falling off of importations caused by the war in Europe.

But there had been no falling off of importations; on the contrary, importations had exceeded the importations of the corresponding months the year before by $94,000,000; and there had been no war in Europe during 10 months of the 11 months of the Underwood law, and therefore the war in Europe could not have caused a falling off of importations, if there had been a falling off of importations; but there was no falling off of importations. Otherwise, the President's statement was correct. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Again, December 7, 1915, the President came before Congress and asked for new methods of taxation, and again the tax screw was applied to the American people. And now again a new turn is given to the tax screw and in addition to the tax screw, bonds are authorized to the amount of $322,000,000, and in addition to that an unbonded debt of $300,000,000 is authorized, and in addition to that the inheritance tax is raised 50 per cent. But judging from the last election, the people like it.

Barnum was right.

Gentlemen seek to justify this heavy tax by war and pre-paredness expenditures, but they have constantly violated their promise of "simplicity and economy" and "unnecessarily piled up the public expenditures" against the protest of the Democratic chairman of the Appropriations Committee.

They have gone on spending money enough to ballast a railroad with $20 gold pieces from here to New York, without knowing or caring much where the money was coming from; but, as Senator Taggart, a Democratic Senator from Indiana, said on August 12 last, "These increases in appropriations can not go on forever. There must and will be a day of reckoning." Some people thought there would be a reckoning last November, but the people voted the other way. Barnum was right.

Along about Thanksgiving time two friends of mine met and one said: "Bill, what's that yaller all up around y'r ears?" And Bill said, "Bin eatin' punkin' pie and I reckin'
I bit a little too fer in." [Laughter.]

Gentlemen have been biting a little "too fer in."

We are prosperous, but to boast of our prosperity would be like a convention of undertakers referring feelingly to an epidemic of cholera.

Eleven hundred miles of trenches in Europe are red with the blood of thousands killed, maimed, and disabled with shot and shell made in America, the manufacture of which has revived the fires in our furnaces which a Democratic tariff law put out. In the fiscal year ended June 30 last our exports amounted to $4,345,000,000, and they have continued during the last six months at the rate of more than $470,000,000 a month. A large part of these exports are munitions exports.

But when they stack arms in Europe all this must end. Our munitions market abroad will end, and our people now engaged in the munitions business will go out of the munitions business and our workmen employed in the munitions business will go out of work

Then the men in the trenches will go back to work, go back to work burdened with debt, go back to work at low wages.

And the nations now at war will seek markets for their products. They will not trade on terms of amity with each other for a time.

Germany and Russia, Germany and Great Britain, Germany and France, will not be likely to trade on terms of amity for some time

The prows of the ships of the nations of Europe now at war will turn this way, not only because this is the great, affluent market of the world, but because the Underwood law invites their coming, and these foreign importations will displace the products of American labor.

We shall be hit going and coming. The Secretary of Commerce admits that this flood of importations will "threaten the very existence of our industries."

This is what he says:

When the war shall close the public control of railroads in foreign lands, the semioficial chambers of commerce, the publicly fostered organizations, which control great industries will all exist and will all be used in an effort to recover lost commerce.

The outreach of American industries—nay, their very existence in our own land in some cases—will be resisted to the full, and every stratagem of industrial war will be exerted against them.

And nothing is being done to meet this condition except to levy more taxes and contract more debts.

But the people like it, judging from the last election. Barnum [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

was right. [Appliates and laughter on the Republican side.]
Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Mosgan].
Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, the object of the bill under consideration—H. R. 20573—is to provide additional revenue to meet the expenditures of the Federal Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918. For this year the Ways and Means Committee estimates that the total expenditures of the Government will be $1,711,000,000 and that receipts of the Government will be $1,111,000,000 and that receipts under Government will be as follows: From customs receipts under the Underwood tariff law, $230,000,000; from ordinary internal-revenue receipts, $325,000,000; from emergency revenue and re-ceipts from munition manufacturers and estate tax, $134,000,000; from corporation income tax, $133,000,000; from individual income tax, $111,750,000; from miscellaneous sources, $56,000,000; from Panama Canal tolls, $10,000,000; and from deposits from postal savings bonds, $2,000,000. The Ways and Means Committee estimates that Congress must provide additional revenue for 1918 to the amount of $402,389,939.

PROVISIONS OF THE BILL.

Under the provisions of this bill an "excess-profits" tax is levied upon corporations, joint-stock companies, insurance companies, and partnerships of 8 per cent after allowing an exemption of $5,000 in profits and an exemption of 8 per cent profit on the actual capital invested in any concern taxed. It is estimated that $226,000,000 will be raised under this tax. The estate tax, in force under existing law, is increased 50 per cent. Under this provision it is estimated that $22,000,000 additional revenue will be provided. Under these two provisions it is estimated that $248,000,000 additional revenue will be provided The bill further authorizes the issuance of bonds to the amount of $303,418,000. Under existing law the Secretary of the Treas ury has power to issue certificates of indebtedness to the amount of $200,000,000. The proposed act authorizes the issuing of additional certificates of indebtedness to the amount of $100,000,000.

POSITION OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

The Republican Party is not opposed to direct taxation. When in power it enacted laws which authorized such taxation. The Payne-Aldrich Tariff Act, enacted by a Republican Congress and signed by a Republican President, contained a provision levying a tax upon the profits of corporations. That provision, in a modified form, is in force to-day. A Republican Congress passed the resolution proposing the income-tax amendment to the Constitution. By virtue thereof the present income-tax law of to-day is valid. The Republican Party is not opposed to the taxation of wealth. It believes that the great wealth of the country should pay its just share of taxation. It believes that the rich rather than the poor should bear the chief burden of Government-National, State, and local.

The Republican Party is not opposed to the individual or corporation income tax or to any other form of direct taxation by the Federal Government, when levied under proper circumstances and conditions.

The Republican Party is opposed to all forms of direct taxation by the Federal Government:

 When the object or effect of such taxation is to displace, supplant, or destroy the policy of protection and to establish permanently in lieu thereof a tariff-for-revenue-only policy.

When such taxation is relied upon as the chief source of revenue for the National Government.

3. When existing tariff laws afford neither adequate protection nor sufficient revenue.

The conditions set forth in the three foregoing paragraphs exist to-day. Therefore the Republican Party can not support the pending bill authorizing large additional direct taxes. As our names are called on the final passage of this bill Republican Representatives will vote against this measure. In this way we will register our solemn protest against the abandonment of the policy of protection which has contributed so much to the greatness of our country and to the welfare of the American people. In this way we will express our emphatic dissent against committing this Government permanently to a policy of tariff for revenue only, combined, as it must be, with vexatious, onerous, burdensome, and oppressive direct taxes which will grow, increase, expand, and multiply at each succeeding session of Congress.

The present Democratic administration has made a record for introducing and passing bills through Congress "to provide revenue for the Government." Four such bills have been presented. The first was the Underwood tariff bill, which became a law the 3d day of October, 1913; the second was the emergency revenue measure, which was approved October 22, 1914; the third was the general revenue act, which was signed by the President and became effective September 8, 1916; and now, before six months have elapsed, we are to enact a fourth revenue measure which imposes annually more than $200,000,000 additional direct taxes upon the people and authorizes the President, in time of peace, through the sale of bonds and the issuing of certificates of indebtedness, to increase the national debt by $400,000,000.

In the number of revenue bills and in the total amount of taxes authorized to be levied and collected thereunder, the four years of Democratic rule. extending from March 4, 1913, to March 4, 1917, will stand absolutely without a parallel in history of our country. Mr. Chairman, in all sincerity I express the hope that never again in the history of the Nation will there be another four years in which Congress will pass so many revenue bills, authorize such large expenditures, make such large appropriations, and increase to such an enormous and alarming extent the direct taxes upon the people of the United States.

REPUBLICAN PARTY FOR PROTECTION.

The Republican Party is in favor of a protective-tariff policy, for the economic benefits thereof, and because it is the most effective and least burdensome method of national taxation.

It has stood for this policy since 1860, when it promulgated the platform upon which it won its first national victory and elected the first Republican President, the immortal Abraham Lincoln.

The two great political parties of the Nation differ as to the purpose or purposes for which a tariff may be levied. It has long been one of the chief doctrines of the Democratic Party that there is no constitutional authority to levy a tariff duty except for one purpose-to provide revenue. Fortunately for the country, the founders of the Republican Party, statesmen and patriots as they were, took the position that a tariff could be levied for purposes other than that of raising revenue. They declared that the tariff should be made a shield to safeguard the interests of both labor and capital-an armor to protect our industrial forces from destructive competition from abroad-and a sun in our industrial world, sending forth its invigorating and life-giving rays to promote growth in our industries, to extend our trade, to expand our commerce, to enlarge our business, to develop our natural resources, to increase our wealth, to secure industrial and commercial supremacy and independence, to give strength, security, and power to the Republic, and to carry blessings to the homes and firesides of our people throughout the length and breadth of the land.

The Republican Party believes that the Underwood tariff law now in force:

1. Is a failure as a revenue producer.

That it does not afford adequate protection to American labor and American capital.

3. That it cripples our commerce, restricts our trade, and without compensation or benefits surrenders our home market to the manufacturers, merchants, and producers of other nations.

DIRECT TAXES OF PEDERAL GOVERNMENT CONFLICT WITH STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENTS.

The Republican Party believes that direct taxes levied by the Federal Government interfere with the system of taxes used by State and local governments, and when levied the vast cost of such governments and the character of taxation used to provide revenue therefor should be considered.

Congress controls the expenditures of the Federal Government. Within the limitations of the Constitution it determines the amount and character of taxes levied for national purposes. Congress has no control over the State and local governments; it is not responsible for their expenditures or debts, and does not determine the amount or character of taxes levied by these governments.

But whenever there is a measure before Congress which contemplates the enlargement of national expenditures, which authorizes a large increase in the national debt, which proposes to augment and multiply direct taxes to obtain national revenues we should have in mind what it cost the people to run the State and local governments, the amount, kind, and character of taxes levied by such governments, and the existing outstanding indebtedness of such governments. Furthermore, we should take in consideration the amount of individual, corporate, and other private indebtedness. In 1913 it cost the people of this country $2,014,369,626 to run their State and local governments. port of such governments they paid an annual tax of $22 per To meet this immense expenditure required a property tax of 1.94 per cent upon all property taxed upon an ad valorem To meet the expenses of their State and local governments the people of the United States are to-day, on an average, paying 2 per cent upon the assessed valuation of their property. An eminent English authority recently estimated that the total annual savings of the people of the United States were $4,500,-000,000. According to this authority, the people of the United States for the support of their State and local governments are each year expending an amount almost equal to one-half of their annual savings. It is a stupendous blunder to go on from year to year increasing the expenditures of the Federal Government and multiplying the direct taxes levied thereby, and ignore the stupendous cost of State and local governments, which must be met by direct taxes in some form.

INCREASE OF NATIONAL DEBT.

The proposition to increase the national debt through the sale of bonds and the issuing of certificates of indebtedness must be considered in connection with the existing public and private indebtedness. In 1913 the total debt of all our governments—Federal, State, county, village, town, city, and other incorporated places—was $4,850,460,713. Making allowance for a small increase during the last four years the amount to-day exceeds $5,000,000,000. This means an annual interest charge upon the people of $200,000,000. It is a per capita debt on the people of $49.97. On an average it is a debt on each family of about $250. Of the total public indebtedness in 1913 the State and local governments owed $3,821,896,658. The amount now owed by these governments unquestionably exceeds $4,000,000,000. The State and local governments are levying direct taxes upon the people to pay the annual interest charge on this indebtedness and to provide for the liquidation of the principal in the future.

Still, Mr. Chairman, our public indebtedness, vast though it is insignificant compared with what our people owe individually and through partnerships, associations, and corporations. High authority estimates that our farmers owe $6,000,000,000, an average of about $1,000 aplece. Our business corporations, in bonds and other indebtedness, in 1913 owed $37,000,000,000. This corporate indebtedness alone is a per capita indebtedness for the people of the United States of $400 and a debt for each family of about $2,000. After all, the debts of our corporations are primarily debts of the people. corporations have no way of paying either the principal or interest of their indebtedness except by levying a tax in some form upon the industries, the products, the business, the earnings, and savings of the people. The total of public and private indebtedness, including debts of all our Governments, as well as the debts of individuals, partnerships, associations, and corporations, is certainly not less than $50,000,000,000. This is equal to one-fourth of the entire national wealth. Upon this stupendous debt the people pay an annual interest charge of $2,500,000,000, an annual per capita cost of $27, requiring a yearly contribution from each family of $100.

Think, will you, that the payment of interest upon our public and private indebtedness requires one-half of the annual savings of our great people. It seems to me that the Democratic Party, that has control of our affairs to-day, the party that brings this bill in here for us to vote upon, utterly fails to comprehend the great burden of taxation that is now resting upon the people of the United States. [Applause.] There never has been a time in the history of this country, even in the stress of war, when our people were taxed so heavily as they are this very day and hour, and that taxation has increased by leaps and bounds during the last four years. So we Republican Representatives as our names are called on the final vote on this bill will answer "no" as a protest against the abandonment of the policy of protection. [Applause.]

of the policy of protection. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. May I have a few minutes more?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, as Republicans we will answer "no" as a protest against the abandonment of the great American policy of protection, against increasing the burden of direct taxes upon the people, against enlarging the amount of public and private indebtedness which rests upon the industries, the property, and the earnings of the people of this country.

the people of this country.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER]. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I heard the eloquent Repre-

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I heard the eloquent Representative from Rhode Island and Providence Plantations say how much he rejoiced and what pride it gave him to find that he could contribute by his income tax to the cost of this Government

Well, a year or two ago the gentleman from Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, and the rest of the Democratic side of the House, were given the opportunity to extend that blessed taxation privilege by reducing the amount of income which is exempt from payment of the income tax. As the income-tax provision passed the House, persons possessing $4,000 income or less were exempt from the income tax. Afterwards, to be sure, the exemption was reduced to $3,000 by the Senate, but even that amount as an exemption is unreasonably high. If the gentleman from Rhode Island and Providence Plantations really means that he believes that the people of this country would be proud and glad to contribute to the income tax, I for one shall cheerfully join with him in getting the exemption reduced so that it will only apply to incomes of $1,500 per annum or less.

I have heard to-day a great deal of discussion about the principle of taxation. There is no such thing as a principle of taxation. Some philosopher has said that the only sound principle of taxation is the greatest amount of feathers for the least amount of squalling. Apparently that is so, nowadays. Translated into the action of the Democratic Party, the true principle of taxation is the greatest number of ducats for the least loss in votes. I do not suppose that any of you, demagogic as some of the speeches in this House to-day have been, expect to gain any votes by any form of taxation.

I voted for your revenue bill last year raising the income tax and inheritance tax away up. I voted for it because I believed it was necessary to raise the money for preparedness. On the other hand, this revenue bill now before us is contrived for the purpose of raising extra funds, because you have been spending money like drunken sailors.

Whatever anyone may say about these proposed taxes, they are going to be collected in the North. "Yes," some gentleman says; "but it was in New York where this great cry for preparedness centered." Well, if the doctrine of preparedness was wrong, you ought to have voted against it, gentlemen. If it was right, the whole country ought to pay for it. To say that because the agitation centered in New York, that therefore New York ought to pay the bill, would be like saying that because the agitation against slavery centered in Kansas, therefore Kansas ought to pay for the cost of the Civil War. The agitation for good roads centered in the country districts. Would that circumstance have been a good reason for making the country districts exclusively pay for those good roads? The movement for Civil War pensions started in the Grand Army of the Republic. According to the principles of the wise men of the southern side of this House, you ought to have made the Grand Army of the Republic pay the taxes to raise the money with which to pay those pensions?

You say, "But why should I who live in far Texas vote for these preparedness measures? I neither wish to vote for them nor to pay the bill. You northerners must vote for them and pay the bills, too." Down in Texas, to be sure, you people are out of the way of attack from the armies and navies of Europe. You are safe. But safe as you are from the attacks of the armies and navies of Europe, you are nothing like as safe as my constituents were from the attacks of Villa and Carranza, and yet we New Englanders must pay a huge share of $162,000,000 to protect the borders of Texas, Arizona, and New Mexico from Villa and Carranza. For heaven's sake, why not impose on Texas, Arizona, and New Mexico, by your line of reasoning, the entire cost of protecting the borders?

Now, my friends, there is no reason on earth for exempting the great sugar concerns of Louisiana, and the great cottonplanting concerns, and the great cattle concerns of Texas from the incidence of this tax on corporation profits, except that you do not want to make those southern interests mad by requiring them to pay their share of this tax.

I heard the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Kitchin] explaining how in Europe they remit the taxation of the poor peasants. He told us that that was the reason why we ought to exclude from taxation these southern corporations which are engaged in agricultural pursuits. I should like to hear the observations of some of my friends down in Texas in these large cattle corporations when they read the account of the gentleman's speech and find themselves spoken of as "peasants." The "peasantry" from the great cattle section of Texas ought to be taxed just as much as anybody else.

This sectionalism breeds sectionalism, my friends. There would be no sectionalism in this country if somebody did not start the ball rolling. And if you want sectionalism you will get enough of it by and by. Down in Florida last November 81,000 white men voted for President of the United States. In New York 1,698,000 white men voted for President of the United States. Over 20 times as many white men voted in New York as in Florida, and yet the representation of Florida in the United States Senate is exactly the same as the representation of New York. If you are starting something on sectionalism, do you suppose that New York is going to tolerate forever the fact that the vote of one white man in Florida counts 20 times as much as the vote of one white man in New York?

Oh, somebody says that the Constitution reserves to the States the right to equal representation in the Senate. Some one points out that it requires the unanimous vote of the States to change that particular part of the Constitution which deals with representations in the United States Senate. True enough, but we shall amend the offending clause of the Constitution first. In other words, we shall first alter Article V of the Constitution so as to make that entire instrument amendable by a vote of three-fourths of the States. With that amendment once adopted we shall have little trouble in making the Senate representative of the people in proportion to population. Speaking of the Constitution, have you forgotten that the fourteenth amendment imposes on us here in Congress the duty of reducing your representation, if you southerners do not allow a vote to your negroes, that is, to your unorganized labor? You do not let the negroes vote in the South.

If you want to force this talk about sectionalism, here is what is going to happen. Why, my friends, you think that you can count on the Democratic Party in the North. You can not do so. They believe in exactly the opposite things from what you believe in. You in the South have disfranchised your common laborer, the negro. You in the South pass laws permitting hours of labor and conditions in your factories which we will not tolerate in the North. Why? Because your votes are cast by your planters and your labor vote is disqualified because it is black.

As I have heard it claimed that the Constitution can not be amended so as to give a fair deal in the Senate to the big States, I submit herewith a proposed amendment to the Constitution which will put us on the track of securing in the Senate representation in proportion to the size of our States. You know that Article V of the Constitution now provides, among other things, "that no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of equal suffrage in the Senate." Well and good; we shall begin by repealing that particular part of Article V. When it is repealed and a reasonable way provided for amending the Constitution so far as representation in the Senate is concerned, our next step will be to take advantage of this change in the Constitution to secure still another change granting representation in the Senate to the various States in proportion to their population.

Here is the first constitutional change which has been suggested, to wit, joint resolution (H. J. Res. —) proposing an amendment to Article V of the Constitution of the United States for the purpose of rescinding the provision that proportional representation in the United States Senate shall not be established against the protest of any State adversely affected:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein). That the following amendment be proposed to the legislatures of the several States, which, when ratified by three-fourths of said legislatures, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution, namely, in lieu of Article V of the Constitution of the United States of America the following shall be proposed as an amendment to the Constitution:

"ABT. V. The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by Congress."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. HELVERING. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

nized for 10 minutes.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, in 10 minutes, speaking on a subject of this magnitude, one can give expression to a sense of pain only. All taxes, whether they are called income taxes or whether they are taxes paid in the form of a tariff, are paid by the men and women who work. matter who sends the check for the tax to the tax collector, the taxes are paid by the people who contribute useful service. Therefore all this talk of the Republicans to the effect that if a high protective tariff were imposed the people would not be taxed is logically as indefensible as the argument of the Democrats that because in the first instance the tax is payable by the rich, the poor people will not be called upon ultimately to pay them.

Income is derived either from property or from service, and in order that there may be income from property somebody must be rendering service, so that it is the man who renders service that pays the burden of taxation. The man who works for a living is very seldom rich. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON] is right in his statement that he is opposed to the proposed tax because the Republicans will have to pay it, then according to my theory very few Republicans work for a liv-

know that my voice is like the voice of one crying in the wilderness. I am not an obstructionist, and I would cheerfully aid the party in power, responsible for the conduct of the Government in this Congress, to carry through necessary revenue legislation. But when I read the title of the bill, "A bill to provide increased revenue to defray the expenses for the increased appropriations for the Army and Navy and the extension of fortifications," I can not get myself to vote for it.

You on the Republican side talk deprecatingly about the promise to reduce the high cost of living having been disregarded by the Democrats, and the Democrats, of course, have no remedy to offer for the high cost of living. What is the Republican remedy for the high cost of living? A protective tariff? Can you imagine that a protective tariff will reduce the cost of living? Is anybody bold enough to suggest the thought that Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Has the gentleman heard any Republican say that a protective tariff will reduce the high cost of Mr. LONDON. No; they are not as stupid as all that. [Laughter.] All I say is that the argument they advance, that a protective tariff is the solution of all ills, is not a sound argument.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. GARLAND. Have you not heard the Democrats say that a lowering of the tariff would reduce the cost of living?

Mr. LONDON. Oh, neither the Republicans nor the Democrats know how to tackle these problems. [Laughter.] The high cost of living will not be reduced as long as a minority of the people have it within their power to tax the great masses by owning the means of production and transportation. As long as a minority of the people control the means of production and distribution they will charge such prices as they can get. They who own and control the means necessary to keep people alive own and control the lives of the people.

Now, I am opposed to this bill because every man, woman, and child will be taxed $10 a year to pay for preparedness which there is no earthly use for. The people ask for bread and shoes and clothing and shelter, and you give them cannon, fortifications, and artillery. As I predicted on the 18th of January, 1915, the Democrats have fallen into the trap which the Republicans prepared for them. Some Democrats say they are opposed to the preparedness expenditures because they l are reckless, unreasonable, and criminal, but that they are compelled to vote for a measure to raise the revenue so long as a preparedness program of huge dimensions has been adopted. Why should you act as accomplices to a crime?

If the preparedness agitation is criminal and reckless and exorbitant and imposes burdens upon the people which the people should not be called upon to bear, why do you vote for these appropriation bills? How can you vote to raise revenue for a thing that you are opposed to?

Then there is one more danger, one more menace, that I want to warn you against. For years the protectionist interests have ruled the country. They were powerful; they were giants financially and industrially. Now you are facing a new menace, a new danger, a new aristocracy of cash, a new power of finance. One billion dollars will be poured out of the pockets of the people of the United States and out of Uncle Sam's Treasury into the pockets of the war traffickers. They will be supplied with a billion dollars, which will be used to corrupt, to defile, to dictate the editorials of your newspapers, to make and unmake men, and to shape public opinion. A new aristocracy, a new power, a new danger is being created by this $1,000,000,000 appropriation out of the pockets of the people. If you were serious, if you were earnest about the interests of the people, the problem of the high cost of living should occupy your attention now. Stop fortifying. You are not in immediate danger. No German professor has invented a powder which will dry up the Atlantic so that the Kaiser may march an army upon Boston and New York. Up to 1898 you had only 24,000 soldiers. You had more police officers than soldiers. You were not invaded by anybody; you were not menaced by any power. You were not in any danger. What is this all about? You Democrats know that there is no reason behind the cry for preparedness except the artificial cry stimulated by munition interests, as a great many Republicans know. But the trouble with both of you is that your are hidebound by machine rules. You have to vote as your leaders tell you to vote, and you subordinate your reason, you eliminate your independence, you do away with your own thinking. The President was frightened by the impetus that was given to the preparedness campaign, and he in turn frightened the Democrats, and they yielded against their own judgment and their own sentiments. Gentlemen, I ask you to call a halt to this preparedness compaign. I call upon you to devote the remaining days of this session of Congress to the problem of the high cost of living; I call upon you to legislate for the people instead of legislating to create an aristocracy of munition interests. [Applause.]

Mr. HELVERING. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from hio [Mr. Gordon]. [Applause.]

Ohio [Mr. GORDON]. [Applause.]
Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, since this debate commenced I have been endeavoring to get some information by interrupting some of the Republican speakers, but I have not succeeded in getting any up to date. They all declined to yield. Therefore I ask not to be interrupted while I endeavor to furnish the House with a little information upon the bill which is now pending before us.

I had hoped that no additional taxation would be necessary this year. After the increase of last year I had hoped that perhaps the expenditures in the Army, Navy, and fortifications bills might be kept down, so as to render new and additional taxes unnecessary. I still hope that there may be some reduction in these enormous estimates for these purposes. But judging the future by the past I confess that I am not very sanguine of such a result.

The question before the House is the imposition of taxes to raise revenue to maintain the Government. It seems to me that it is beside the point to insist, as the preceding speaker did, that he was opposed to some of these appropriations which have been made, and therefore he would refuse to vote taxes to pay the expenses of the Government. Applying his logic, however, to our friends upon the other side who have consistently and persistently endeavored to increase these appropriations away above and beyond what have been made, they ought to be estopped at least from charging extravagance upon this side The truth is that this debate on the Republican of the House. side has degenerated into a mere partisan harangue. Gentlemen get up here and read speeches that are senseless, filled with partisan malice, and that throw no light at all upon the question before the House. [Laughter.]

Twenty-three years ago this month, Mr. Chairman, one of the greatest men who ever occupied a seat in the American Congress, the late Tom L. Johnson, of Ohio, uttered a great truth upon this floor on the subject of taxation when he said, "Any tax upon what men have is to be preferred to a tax upon what men need." I commend this utterance to our Republican friends who are advising the laying of tariff taxes upon the necessities of life, which men, women, and children paid under the Payne-Aldrich law upon nearly everything they ate, drank, and wore. What intelligent American citizen really believes we ought to reimpose these taxes upon consumption, and thereby further increase the high cost of living?

1 endeavored to elicit from one of the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee, who complained of the deficiency in revenue under the Underwood law, a statement as to the amount of revenue raised by that law up to the commencement of the European war as compared with the revenue raised under the Payne law for a similar preceding period. He denied that the revenues raised under the Underwood law were greater than those under the Payne law. I have obtained from the clerk of the Committee on Ways and Means the exact figures upon this subject, and they are as follows:

Total (Underwood law) _____ 306, 061, 927. 30

260, 881, 088, 32 35, 049, 748, 48

Total (Payne-Aldrich law) _____ 295, 930, 836. 80

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman yield? 'Mr. GORDON. No.

Mr. KELLEY. Did he not say tariff revenues?
Mr. GORDON. I did not. This distinguished member of the Ways and Means Committee [Mr. Sloan] said in reply to my inquiry that he still believed the foreigner paid the tariff. He was answered by one of the oldest and most distinguished Members upon the other side this morning, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore], who also declined to yield, and who said in his address that the manufacturers of condensed milk paid a tariff on the sugar and tin with which they put it up. Strange that these Pennsylvania manufacturers do not know how to make the foreigner pay the tariff. [Laughter.] All the light this House needs upon this measure, in my judgment, was furnished by the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] in his opening speech in the debate on this bill. The political gadflies on the Republican side succeeded in stinging him sufficiently to stir him up, and he afforded us a most exhilarating, intelligent, and comprehensive analysis by his observations and in the answers to the questions as to the terms and provisions in this bill. He has not been replied to. believe his speech is unanswerable.

A MEMBER. Where is it?

Mr. GORDON. My distinguished colleague from Ohio [Mr. Longworth], who is the only gentleman on the Republican side who has not withheld his remarks for revision in the debate of yesterday, said that he had voted for the bill offered by the gentleman from North Carolina last June, and he says:

I did it, as I then announced, for two reasons: In the first place, because I believed the revenue it was designed to raise was necessary to pay for the preparedness program we adopted; and, secondly, I believed its method of raising the revenue, even though it did not include the obviously correct way of raising revenue—a duty on competing products of imports—it was based in the main upon what I conceive to be Republican principles.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner] made about the same statement a few minutes ago. Now, if the bill of last year, which imposed an inheritance tax and a tax upon incomes of partnerships and corporations, was a just and proper measure, consistent with Republican policies why is not this bill that simply increases those taxes also wise and consistent and in line with Republican policies? It seems to me these observations, gentlemen, disclose the utter hypocrisy of the contentions of those who are opposing this bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield? I would not if I were he. [Laughter.]

Mr. GORDON. No; I think not. [Laughter.] The truth about it is, gentlemen, of course taxes are always unpopular. It is foolish talk indulged in by gentlemen on that side of the House that in some way, somehow, taxation may be made pleasant to those who are required to pay the taxes. It is ridiculous. I do say that these taxes imposed by this bill are very much to be preferred to the taxes which you gentlemen would impose upon the consumption of the necessities of life. I believe as between these two methods of taxation we can go before the American people as we have during the past seven years and defeat you A facetious newspaper correspondent became humorous in describing in a Republican newspaper of this city the result of the recent election in Ohio; in that "slaughter of the innocents"

huge Republican majorities melted away like snow before the noonday sun, and in all parts of the State were enormously reduced or disappeared entirely. The largest Republican ma-jority in any county outside of Hamilton was 1,548. Wilson carried the State by over 90,000, receiving 604,161 votes, the largest vote ever cast in the State for a candidate for President, and in his comment this correspondent said the Republicans were routed all along the line and retreated to Hamilton County, "where they dug themselves in." Judging from the recent partial report of the United States grand jury in Cincinnati, returning indictments against 99 defendants for election frauds, with more likely to follow any day, they must have dug themselves into the ballot boxes pretty deep.

The outrageous methods resorted to in the late campaign to defeat President Wilson for reelection seem to have stimulated and encouraged a resort to misrepresentation and calumny in the discussion of public questions. This is demonstrated by the character of the discussion of this bill on the Republican side of the Chamber, and is further illustrated by the campaign now being waged in Ohio for what is called "presidential suffrage for women." If Ananias and Sapphira had risen from the for women." If Ananias and Sapphira had risen from the tomb and assumed the management and control of the suffrage columns of certain Ohio newspapers, the misrepresentations would not be more flagrant than they have been. It is contended that both political parties in Ohio are pledged by their platforms of last year to enact a law authorizing women to vote for presidential electors, when in truth and in fact neither party is pledged to any such thing. The only platform declaration by either party in Ohio having any reference to the question are the national platforms, the principles of which were generally indorsed in the State conventions of the two parties. The Democratic national platform adopted at St. Louis June 16, 1916, reads on suffrage as follows:

We recommend the extension of the franchise to the women of the country by the States upon the same terms as to men.

The Republican national platform adopted at Chicago on June 10, 1916, reads on suffrage as follows:

The Republican Party, reaffirming its faith in government of the people, by the people, for the people, as a measure of justice to one-half the adult people of the country, favors the extension of the suffrage to women, but recognizes the right of each State to settle this question for itself.

Not one line in either of these platforms or in either of the Ohio platforms of the political parties on the subject of presidential suffrage for women, and, except a general indorsement of their national platforms by the two leading parties, not one word was said on the subject of suffrage by either of them.

And in the light of the State's history it is no wonder; in 1912 the State constitutional convention recommended woman suffrage and other amendments on suffrage; all were defeated at the polls. In 1914 an amendment granting full suffrage to women was again placed upon the official ballot, and in the largest vote ever cast in the State up to that time, it was voted down by 183,000 majority.

In the light of these undisputed facts an attempt to confer upon women the privilege of voting for presidential electors by an act of the general assembly, and without a vote of the people, would be treason to the principle of representative government, a fraudulent usurpation of power on the part of the general assembly, and an attempt to force upon the people of the State a proposition which they have not only never indorsed, but have overwhelmingly rejected at the last opportunity they were afforded to speak upon the question.

The power to enact this legislation is claimed under the language of the Federal Constitution, which provides that—

Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the legislature thereof may direct, a number of (presidential) electors, equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress.

But the constitution of Ohio provides that "no person shall be appointed or elected to any office in this State who is not an elector," and elector is defined in the same instrument as "a male white citizen 21 years old."

The authority to join in the "appointment" of presidential electors, by authority of the legislature, is an office and a very important one at that, and the general assembly is prohibited from conferring it upon any other than "male citizens 21 years

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Dillon].

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Chairman, I will first call attention to the excess-profit tax. Under the provisions of this bill corporations and partnerships must pay a tax on their excess profits. The corporation, whether large or small, is entitled, first, to an exemption of $5,000 and, second, to an exemption of 8 per cent of the actual capital invested. On the balance of the net income a tax of 8 per cent is levied. Likewise foreign corporations and partnerships are taxed in the same manner on the amount of the net profits derived from business transacted in the United States.

Will it not be impossible to carry out the administrative features of this bill? The corporation will make its return. Its valuation is simply a mere matter of opinion. No administrative officer has any power to fix the valuation. Exact justice can not be done unless a physical valuation of all of these corporation and partnership properties is made. No one can be charged with perjury for fixing an excessive valuation on his property, because he merely expresses an opinion as to value. Therefore the tax will rest unequally against the taxable corporations and partnerships.

It would be easy for a large corporation to add a million or two to its valuation, and no administrative officer could dispute This bill invites the corporations to water their stock and bonds. By increasing stock and bonds the net income on which the tax is based would be reduced. It also would invite the directors to increase salaries of officials holding stock in order to reduce the net taxable income.

The portion of this bill that seeks to levy an excess-profit tax against foreign corporations and partnerships is somewhat We reduce our tariff duties and invite the foreigner to bring his cheap-labor products into the best market in the world and take away our gold. Then we say, "For this concession we will expect you to pay a tax on net income derived from business in this country above specified exemptions." We love the foreigner so much that we give him the same exemptions as we give our own people, but we will not require him to pay any municipal, county, or State taxes. We leave those burdens to be borne by our own people.

Further, the business of a foreign corporation or partner-ship can be carried on by an individual without any tax what-ever. Do any of you believe that the provision relative to foreign corporations and partnerships can be made effective? The plan is to have the foreign corporation or partnership send its goods here, and we are to allow them to pass through our customhouse practically without custom duties. They are surrendered to the agent of the foreign concern, who is invited to make all the profit he can in the United States. After they get the profits in their pockets we send them a blank, telling them they must pay us a tax of 8 per cent on their profits above exemptions.

Would any of you do business in that way? The time and place to get our money is at the customhouse, because we then have a lien on the property. To send the blank to the foreigner and ask him to pay taxes is a huge joke. Suppose they refuse to make a return, how are you going to punish them? Will you punish them by black listing? The only true system is to get the money at the customhouse. [Applause on the Republican side.1

If it shall be our national policy to levy an excess profit tax we should immediately pass the Rayburn bill to regulate the issue of stocks and bonds of all corporations and companies doing interstate business. As a reminder I might call attention to this important bill.

In the Sixty-third Congress it was heralded as an administration measure. I was glad to support it, believing it would do the business. It passed the House on June 5, 1914, by a vote of 325 to 12. It then went to the Senate and on July 23, 1914, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. Newlands], chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, presented a unanimous report recommending the passage of the bill.

Possibly some Member who is transfer in the control of the contro

Possibly some Member who is in touch with the administra-tion could tell us why this important measure was peacefully put to sleep in the middle of the second session of the Sixtythird Congress, since which time there has been no real resurrection of the administration program. Where are the shouting cohorts who proclaimed that this was to be the towering achievement of the administration?

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] reintroduced his meritorious bill in the Sixty-fourth Congress and it has now been on the calendar nearly one year, but its backers have taken to the woods. It is no longer labeled an administration bill. It is no real secret that Senate joint resolution No. 60 got its inspiration from an effort to sidetrack the Rayburn bill. Let us all get in behind the Rayburn bill and secure its passage and give to the country an act that will effectively regulate the issue of stocks and bonds. By so doing we can form a basis for the new and novel system of taxation proposed in this bill.

THE ESTATE TAX.

I wish briefly to call the attention of the House to the inheritance tax features of this bill. When the revenue bill was before the House in July, 1916, I said:

before the House in July, 1916, I said:

The authority conferred upon Congress by section 8 of Article I of the Constitution, namely, "To lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises," is a sufficient grant of power for levying a tax on succession to property of a decedent. Uniformity is required by the following provision: "That all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States. The Constitution further provides," Direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States."

If this tax is on the property, it would be a direct tax and would be unconstitutional because there is no apportionment provision in the bill. In 1894 an act was passed laying a tax on incomes from all classes of property, but no apportionment was made. Its validity rested upon the assumption that it came within the classification of taxes, duties, excise, and imposts which was subject to the rule of uniformity but not subject to the rule of apportionment. The act was held unconstitutional on the ground that it was a direct tax on property.

held unconstitutional on the ground that it was a direct tax on property.

The Supreme Court, in Pollock v. Farmer's Loan & Trust Co. (158 U. S., 161) held that the income tax provided for a direct tax and was void for want of apportionment. To get away from this effect the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution was adopted, which provides, "the Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes from whatever source derived without apportionment among the several States and without regard to any census or enumeration. It is evident that the sixteenth amendment applies only to incomes and takes incomes out of the apportionment rule.

The tax on inheritance should be a tax upon succession, a tax on the right to succeed to property. It is not a tax on property. There being no natural right to inherit, the legislative department of Government has the right to fix the conditions upon which the succession may be permitted.

The tax percentages are imposed upon the amount of the net estate, en masse, after having deducted cost of administration, debts, and an exemption of $50,000. No provision is made for a tax on legacies or on the distributive shares nor is there any tax on the right of the heirs or legatees to succeed to the same. The tax is on the aggregate amount of the decedent's property and not upon the amount of the distributive shares.

The inheritance tax has never been regarded as a direct tax on property, but has always been levied against the right of succession. Under the laws of France, Germany, and other European countries the inheritance tax is enforced by way of stamp The first Federal inheritance-tax act of July 6, 1797, and the subsequent acts of June 30, 1864, and June 13, 1898, all recognize the levy as against the successor.

In Knowlton v. Moore (178 U. S., 41) the court, in passing upon this statute, used this language:

An inheritance tax is not one on property but one on the succession. The right to take property by devise or descent is a creature of the law and not a matter of right, a privilege, and therefore the authority which permits it may impose conditions upon it.

The court further says:

The statute clearly imposes the duties on legacies or distributive shares and not upon the whole personal estate.

In United States v. Perkins (163 U. S., 625) it is said:

The tax is not a tax upon the property itself but upon its transmission by will or descent.

In Snyder v. Bettman (190 U.S., 249) it is held:

The taxes are not imposed upon the property itself but on the right to succeed thereto.

The tax is now imposed upon the mass of the estate and not upon each legatee or beneficiary. The exemption of $50,000 is likewise an exemption on the whole estate. No provision is made for an exemption for an heir or legatee.

It is a tax against the property held temporarily by the executor or administrator, and is a direct tax, because it does not levy the tax upon the right of succession. No one would claim that this tax could be imposed upon the decedent if living. right of the administrator or executor in the property is that of trustee for the beneficiaries. If he pays the tax, no provision is made for a charge against the beneficiaries. How is he to settle the rights between numerous beneficiaries where the tax is increased in proportion to the value of the estate? If it be argued that the administrator would be required to pay the tax in the first instance and collect it from the heirs or legatees, then it becomes pertinent to know in what ratio he is to assess the heirs and legatees.

All legatees and heirs are jointly assessed regardless of the amount of their shares. If there be but one legatee, he would be entitled to $50,000 exemption, while if there are 100 legatees and heirs they would be jointly entitled to but one exemption.

There would be no difficulty if the tax was levied on each legatee or distributive share, but when the rate each is to pay is increased by the value of the property received by other legatees you have all kinds of confusion. We tax separate legatees, regardless of the property received. The tax is measured by the value of all property received by the numerous legatees or heirs. For instance, the tax on the house of A, a legatee, valued at $1,000, would be determined by the value of numerous other houses, and the tax on A's house would be increased in proportion to the increase of the value of the property of the other legatees.

Suppose that a decedent willed all of his property, of the value of $60,000, to a hospital. Deducting the exemption, the hospital would pay $150 inheritance tax. If a millionaire across the street willed the same hospital $60,000 and distributed among numerous legatees the balance of his estate, valued at $4,940,000, the hospital would have to pay an inheritance tax of $4,293. To obtain these bequests the hospital would be required to pay over twenty-eight times as much tax for the second bequest as for the first of the same amount.

The exemption of $50,000 should apply equally to those succeeding to the estate, or be a classification to each person similarly situated. Every issue of a decedent who may receive property should be entitled to the same amount of exemption, because the property he is to receive is to bear a share of the tax

In Black against State. One hundred and thirteenth Wisconsin, page 205, and Ninetieth American Statutes, page 853, it was held that a statute authorizing an inheritance tax where the whole estate was of a specified amount or more, but not authorizing such tax where the estate was less than that amount in value, the beneficiaries being in the same class and the tax being levied without regard to the amount received by the individual beneficiary, was unconstitutional as being arbitrary and unlawful discrimination between beneficiaries of the same class.

If the tax can be taken from his distributive share, the heir ought to be entitled to a definite, fixed amount of exemption. As it is, if the decedent leaves his entire estate to one son, the son has an exemption of $50,000. If, on the other hand, the decedent leaves surviving him 10 sons, they have to join in an exemption and each son has only $5,000 exemption.

The framers of the act overlooked all the congressional acts heretofore passed imposing a tax upon the right of succession to property, and have overlooked the fact that the tax must rest against the legatee or heir who receives the distributive share of the estate. The tax not being levied on the succession to property of the decedent, but on the property itself, becomes direct tax, which must be apportioned among the several States.

The people of the United States have been heavily taxed by municipal, county, and State authorities. The disposition of the present administration is to seize all of these sources of revenue heretofore employed by the States and to levy additional direct taxes.

In time of peace we must have a stamp tax, an income tax, a corporation tax, a munition tax, an inheritance tax, an excessprofit tax, a foreign-corporation tax, and we must constantly be increasing these taxes. We must, in addition, issue bonds; we must sell our Panama bonds, and we must issue certificates of indebtedness, all to take care of the extravagant expenditures of public money. It seems that this administration has shown an incapacity to operate the fiscal affairs of the Government. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Reavis].

[Mr. REAVIS addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. HELVERING. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Quin].

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, in the 10 minutes allotted to me I propose to discuss the bill and not to discuss sectionalism. It was, indeed, a matter of grievance to me to hear some of the gentlemen upon this side and our friends upon the Republican side inject sectionalism into this discus-I brush aside with contempt the statements of the distinguished Republican, Mr. GARDNER, of Massachusetts. would not waste my time to answer the charge that he attempts to make against the South. The South is always able to ignore such petty, narrow, contemptible threats as the gentleman made on this floor. This bill was brought out here for the purpose of paying a debt, a debt that the gentleman from the State of Massachusetts was the chief exponent in making. This is a portion of the debt of preparedness. It is proposed to raise $226,000,000 from the excess profits of copartnerships and corporations, and $22,000,000 as an inheritance tax from the mighty and powerful in finance who die; and who objects to I wish to say that the gentlemen on this floor who object to this bill want to go out into the farms and workshops of America and place the burden for increased preparedness on of America and place the burden for increased property the men who did not bring it about. They want to go to the man who sweats and toils and place on his back this $248,-000,000 that is to pay the increased portion of preparedness.

shall continue to fight to keep that tax from falling on the farmer and laborer. Let us place it on wealth, where is belongs. We took out of the wealthy class last year $175,000,000, and we must raise in addition to that sum this year $248,-000,000. We have three years more to increase this program. I was not one of those who made it necessary to bring about this excessive taxation. I fought against this. It was the great corporate interests, the great wealthy class of this country who forced the propaganda of preparedness upon this Re-It was the erstwhile leader of the Republican Party, ex-President Roosevelt, who went about over this country preaching the doctrine of preparedness, and now, my friends, if those who followed him, if the chief cohorts of the great and powerful interests, if predatory wealth in this country have forced Congress to bring upon it this debt, I ask who should pay it? I think the bill that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] and his committee has brought out placing this tax on wealth, $226,000,000, on the excess profits of corporations, and the rest of it upon inheritance, embodies the most sensible and reasonable way to raise the revenue. Is it possible that any corporation in the United States, after declaring 13 per cent dividends above all expenses, above its overhead charges, above all other charges, would object to paying one-twelfth of the profits in excess of that to the United States Government to pay for preparedness that the corporate interests of this country wanted? Certainly it would be criminal for us to raise this money by taxing the toiling millions who now are carrying all they can stand up under.

Some of our Republican friends are very much disturbed because the farmers are exempted from this tax. I feel thankful that the Democratic Party can feel for the farmer and forces that sentiment into law. The farmers and all other laboring men have their eyes on Congress. Will you gentlemen on that side go back to your districts and tell the farmers you desired to place this preparedness burden on them? That is what you must do if you vote against the bill you have been speaking against all day. Are you protecting the corporations and the rich and powerful? Do you desire to make the toilers pay all the taxes? Why do you oppose the inheritance tax? Is it possible that any man who during his life has made the sum of $5,000,000 or $4,000,000 or $3,000,000 or $50,000,000 would object to a portion of that up to 15 per cent being taken to pay for protecting those whom he leaves behind, those who inherit this fortune, those who did not toil or spin to make that great fortune? I claim that it is sensible and practicable, that it is right, honest, and just. To my mind there could not be a fairer tax than one which comes from corporations and copartnerships that we guarantee shall be free from this tax until they have had 13 per cent net revenue. Certainly it would be fair to the man whom this Government is protecting with all its beneficent laws, with its Army and Navy, with its fortifications, with its swords and guns and ammunition, which has allowed him to build up a fortune of $50,000,000 or $100,000,000, to take away a small per cent of that after he is dead and gone. honest man who has an income of $50,000,000 could object to the Government taking a fair percentage for the Government's expense and see that it is safely handed to those to whom he wishes to hand it. The American people indorse our revenue bill, and in response to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON], who said that they wanted to be humbugged, I will say that they were not humbugged when they reelected a Democratic President. They knew all the facts. They knew the outrageous program that the Republicans had enacted for the last 20 years. They knew the outrageous humbug that the Republican Party had perpetrated when they put the protective tariff on the American people. They knew what a humbug it was that the Republicans proposed to take $8 out of the pocket of every farmer and laboring man in the United States and give it over to some plutocratic, wealthy manufacturer, and only one single dollar out of every eight dollars collected with the eagle on it found its way into the Treasury of the United States. That was the humbug which the American voter voted against. The people rejoiced over our progressive legislation. voted that sentiment all the way from the Gulf of Mexico to Minnesota. They voted that honest sentiment against Republican humbuggery all the way from the rock-ribbed State of New Hampshire clear over to California.

The American people indorsed the program of the Democratic Party. They indorsed the program to which my good friend from Michigan [Mr. Forder] alluded of spending $162,000,000 for keeping the soldiery on the Mexican border to elect a Democratic President. That was the best investment the American people ever made. If they were put there for the purpose of keeping Mr. Hughes and the Republican Party out of high places of power for four years more, that $162,000,000 saved the American people many billions of dollars. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It saved from enactment many outrageous laws that we know Mr. Hughes and those who stood behind him as his shadows proposed to put upon the statute books to override the rights of the plain people of America. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That is the reason the people of this country indorsed the Democratic Party. That is the reason that the man who drives the hack voted against the Republican Party last fall. That is the reason that the American people are going to insist upon Democrats organizing the House of Representatives this next time, I will say to my friend from the State of Nebraska [Mr. Reavis]. That is the reason that the American people propose that wealth shall bear its just share of taxation instead of burdening the man who really produces the wealth of this country. None of you gentlemen on that side have shown that a protective tariff bill could pay the enormous appropriations that are being made. Any sensible and practical man knows that the Payne-Aldrich bill could not pay all of the appropriations that have been made upon the Treasury of this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If these can not be raised except by direct taxation, can you find a better source than an income tax? Can you find a better source than an inheritance tax? Can you find a better source than to tax excess profits of those who are securing more than a reasonable profit? Can you find a better source than these have enumerated to raise this revenue in the North, the South, the East, or the West? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. QUIN. I thank you, gentleman. Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. OLNEY].

Mr. Chairman, I just want to correct an impression which I gave the House last evening in my speech that the United States received from Australia for many years a half of the Australian clip. That is an exaggerated statement, which I desire to correct. In normal years we use from 100,000,000 to 150,000,000 pounds of wool raised by Great Britain and its colonies; but this correction does not destroy the argument that we would really receive but little revenue the imposition of a tax on wool, on account of the embargo of Great Britain and the little wool being shipped by the warring nations. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MILLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the bill before the House, submitted by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee [Mr. Kitchin of North Carolina] January 29, 1917, and now under discussion, proposes to assess and collect from citizens of the United States, by direct taxation, $1,417,444,029. Every citizen of the United States who performs labor—menial, skilled, or professional, with hand or brain—will be compelled to help pay that amount, either directly or indirectly. It takes money out of the pocket to pay the tax; it does not put one cent back in the pocket.

A custom or tariff duty is also a tax, and the consumer pays it indirectly. The foreign importer of foreign-made goods pays the duty into the Treasury for the privilege granted him in getting his wares into the United States. If the wares come in competition with goods made in this country it enables the manufacturer to get a better price, and thus enables him to compete with the foreign manufacturer. It enables him also to pay a higher wage to his employees than the foreign laborer gets. It gives increased sales to the home merchant. It gives a better and a home market to the farmer. It enables the lawyer, the doctor, and every professional man in the United States to get better and surer returns and larger fees. It gives every child, native and foreign born, an opportunity to attend better schools. has developed industries. It has helped to make the United States, in the past 50 years the richest and most prosperous country in the world, and has enabled the laborers to band together in brotherhoods and unions and not only demand but obtain some of their rights, as no other laborers anywhere else can do or has done. Even the President and the Congress of the United States recently gave a quick ear to its demands and obeyed its commands. In every truth the laboring people of the United States are "the people." Politicians listen to them.

Mr. Chairman, off and on for 50 years I have been making political speeches and during all that time I believed in a protective tariff as enunciated by the Republican Party, but I never in making a political speech claimed that the foreign manufacturer paid the tax; I never claimed that. on the Democratic side.] I admit that the consumers pay the tax just as the people pay the post-office stamp tax, just they pay the internal-revenue taxes, and just as they pay the other taxes assessed and collected by the Government. also claim that aside from the post-office stamp tax that there is not a single tax levied by the Government that puts a dollar in an American's pocket except a customs tax. The foreign manufacturer receives less for his goods than he would if there was no customs duty; there is some revenue added to the Treasthe American manufacturer is protected in his home market, and I believe both manufacturer and laborer in the end have each more money in their pockets than they would have if the foreign goods that come in competition with American-made goods came into the United States free of duty.

Can you indicate a man whose pocket will be enriched by the passage of this bill? Every dollar of it comes out of the people. I agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON | that it is not the rich alone who pay these taxes. It is every man in the United States, be he rich or poor. I expect there will be assessed against me for the coming year over $100 of income tax, including the surtax. Am I going to pay it? Not by a long shot. The people who have me doing their legal business will pay it. The Government of the United States. that put some money in my pocket this year as a Congressman, will pay some of it. And who put the money into the United States Treasury? The people. Many of us have not made a dollar last year outside our salary. I have been near to fooling my time away during the past year. [Laughter.] How am I going to pay it? I am going to get it from the people who give me something. As a rule, when I talk standing on my feet, somebody pays me for it. I would get along as well and make as much money if I did not talk at all now, and would accomplish as much for my constituents.

I am opposed to this bill for one particular reason and that is that many of the purposes for which it is proposed to use the money to be raised are not necessary. We appropriated last year $600,000,000 for the Army and Navy. What was the total of appropriations? About $1,600,000,000. How much more did we appropriate for the Army and Navy last year than before? About $250,000,000. Where did the balance of the money—$350,000,000—go to? Into rat holes, river and harbor bills, armor-plate and nitrate plants, merchant marine, catching Villa "dead or alive," and fooling with Carranza and others.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Quin] stated a moment ago that the people of the United States indorsed the Democratic policies in November last. I deny it, They indorsed Woodrow Wilson but not the legislation of the Democratic Party. If Woodrow Wilson had been no stronger than the Democratic policies, he would have been defeated overwhelmingly. Why do I say that? Four years ago this side of the House—the Democratic—had over 100 majority. Now they have less than 30. In the next Congress, Mr. Chairman, they have not any. [Applause.] Why did the people change the majority? Because they were dissatisfied with what was done by Congress. That is why they threw the Republicans out of power some years ago [laughter], and we deserved it. not deny that. We had been acting badly, but not nearly as badly as the Democratic majority. [Laughter and applause.] Why, our appropriations never got to the measly sum of a billion. We never could reach a billion with all our extravagance, and yet you jumped $100,000,000 over the last Republican Congress the first year you got into power, and you jumped last year $700,000,000 larger than ever the Republican Party dared to.

Mr. GORDON. Did you not vote for some of them?
Mr. MILLER of Pennsylvania. Yes; I was bamboozled into voting for the merchant marine. I was led to believe that if I voted for the merchant-marine bill there would not be so much appropriated for the Navy. That was where I was bamboozled. [Laughter.] That is where you were bamboozled. [Laughter]

And I tell you, gentlemen, that when you pass this bill you will not only have 3 less than a majority in the Sixty-fifth Congress, but you will have 50 less than a majority in the Sixty-sixth Congress. It will not be a question of the independents organizing the House, as it is now. The Republicans will have such a majority that they will organize it easily, and they will just do what they please with you, gentlemen, just what you have done with them. [Laughter.]

What are the excess taxes that the Democratic Party has been putting onto us? The country does not know it. ought to have a publicity bureau, to let them know what these increased taxes are. Let me enumerate some of them. I am directing this particularly to the Democratic side of the House, because you will be on the mourners' bench in 1919. three years of 1914, 1915, and 1916 the Democratic Party levied and collected by the so-called war tax, in round numbers, $136,000,000; and they collected in excess in those three years of what the Republican Party had collected on incomes, individual and corporation, $132,250,000. From those two items in the three years they collected, in excess of what the Republican Party ever collected from such sources, $273,198,000. That is going some."

But that is not a patch as to what you are doing now. What do you propose now? You propose by this bill and by revenue acts already on the statute books to collect this coming year $134,000,000 on incomes, corporate and individual. You propose to collect on munitions and estate tax $133,000,000. And you propose to collect on individuals $111,750,000; or, in those three items, $378,750,000.

That is not all. In addition to all that you propose to put your hand into Uncle Sam's pocket and extract $222,000,000 of Panama Railroad bonds, that the Republican Party thought they had laid away. What they ought to have done was to have burned them. That is where they made a mistake.

You also propose to collect from corporations on all receipts profits over 8 per cent $226,000,000. You propose to issue Treasury notes of $100,000,000. In those three items in this bill, in addition to what was levied heretofore and was annually collected, you propose to collect $548,000,000. Add that to the other items of excess taxes, of new taxes that my friend from New York [Mr. London] said the people had to pay-and he is right-add that to those taxes, and what does it amount to? It amounts to the round sum of $1,417,444,029-almost a billion and five hundred millions of dollars. Do you suppose the people will stand Do you suppose that in 1918 you will not hear from the people from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the Lakes to the Southern States, and from the farmers in every agricultural State, who will condemn you, and will assist in turning you out of office. [Applause.]

Personally I have great respect for many gentlemen on the Democratic side of the House. I have formed many acquaint-ances that are dear to me, but your policies are reprehensible. If the Republicans will vote against this bill solidly, as I believe they will, enough Democrats may join them to defeat it. The country will not suffer, and at the extra session which will be called, if this bill is defeated, the Republicans and independents will organize the House, and pass a bill that the people will approve.

The taxes proposed to be assessed and collected by this bill, as enumerated by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee [Mr. Kitchin] in the report submitted by him with the bill, are as follows:

Balance to be assessed and collected______ 1. 417. 444. 029 I submit, Mr. Chairman, that such an extravagant, unjust, and unwise bill should be defeated.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Garland].

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of this committee, I do not think that all of the eloquence that has been heard here or all the figures that have been compiled here will make one tota of difference when it comes to a vote on this question. The Republicans are going to vote, and rightfully, for what they believe in, a protective-tariff measure, and against this measure. The Democrats are going to vote for this measure, because it is a "get-by" measure only with them, and has been so stated time and time again. It is only for the present, something to pass us by.

When you come to measuring the difference between a proposition that will give protection to American industries and American workmen and a "get-by" measure of this kind, for the moment I want to retrospect to the time when these things the moment I want to retrospect to the time when these things were in operation and prove their conclusions.

I remember from 1892 to 1896, when we had another Democratic administration in the White House and at both ends of the Capitol, and they worked their sweet will, so far as passing measures for revenue were concerned. They omitted to protect the working people of this country and the industries of this country, and as a consequence pestilence, famine, chaos, and distress came over the land. At that time I was the head of a great labor organization, and it became my duty to go over the country trying to get employment for the men I represented. I remember we had to voluntarily reduce our wages, and from the incoming of that administration until the outgoing of it four years afterwards, year after year, yea, month after month, we were called together of our own accord in the hope of getting something to do.

But the mills remained idle; the wheels stopped; the mines closed, and the grass and the weeds grew up around and even into the doors of the factories. The whistle no longer sounded, and men stood in knots and groups, in distress, questioning the possibility of ever seeing better times again. then, when 1896 came, men were eager for an opportunity to go to the polls again, and they went there and voted; and the entire administration was changed and a protective-tariff bill passed, and, miraculously as it may seem, in six months' time every old tub of a manufactory was working again, labor was fully employed, wages were leaping higher and higher all the time, and the bells rang and the whistles blew for people to come to work, and happiness reigned in the land.

That went on until four years ago, in 1912, and then came a catastrophe in which there was a split in the Republican Party. No other cause in God Almighty's world changed the complexion of this country. The Democrats came into power again, and they went at it as usual-blindly for the time beingout looking forward, and they passed another low-tariff bill, and from the moment that it passed things started backward. And two years after that great successful event that they heralded here on the floor-two years after that all we had to do was to walk around and look at the people, idle, in order to be elected to the Congress of the United States, and we cut down your great majority 75 in that one year. Then two years passed by, and now you quote the election just passed as being a great victory! Was it? You elected one man, but the great mass of the people of the United States repudiated you by sending a larger number of Republicans into the Congress than there were before. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Everyone will admit that the war in Europe can not be kept going very much longer, and just so sure as the saying goes. "After the flood comes the deluge," just so sure will we see this country overrun with cheap foreign-made goods unless we protect the industries of this country and the workingmen of this country by passing a protective tariff, and it seems to me that now is the proper time to do it; and if the Republicans of this House had the power, they would pass that kind of a bill instead of the one that you offer here. We must not forget that the men in foreign countries have been taught a lesson of economy in living in the trenches in the last 2½ years that will be one of the elements of their possibility of working cheaper, to reestablish the industries in their countries, and, in addition to that, the factories and the mines and the mills have taken from the homes the women and children and employed them and have given them the skill that belonged to only man's hand before this war, and they will add their assistance to the cheapening of foreign-made goods. There will be no provisions there as to child labor or hours which women work, and we will have this to contend with.

I note that it delights some Democrats to allude to the fact that at times articles may be sold abroad cheaper than they are sold here in this country, and they attempt to use that as an argument against a protective tariff. They do not take into consideration that the drawback established by a protectivetariff bill and which is in all protective-tariff bills is yielding to the importers in this country who bring in raw material or materials only partially made up for the purpose of manufacturing those materials, and giving employment to our workmen in doing so, into a finished product, from five to seven million dollars a year. In other words, anyone who brings in from foreign countries raw material or partially raw material and employs workingmen to make up that raw material into a finished article, in whole or in part, to be shipped abroad, receives from the Government a drawback on the tariff duties that they are required to pay of 99 per cent. In other words, the Government only retains 1 per cent to pay clerical work in the transaction. These articles go abroad and are sold into foreign countries as of American manufacture.

Our Democratic friends do not tell you that these articles are sold abroad after having been manufactured here in that way. Mr. Chairman, I think that now is the time for the Democratic Party to take heed of their action, if they expect to be returned to Congress by the people of this country, and in taking heed pass a new protective-tariff bill whereby to collect needed revenue.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yi gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH.] Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the

nized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I did not have a very good opinion of this bill after reading it, but in order to prove that it is a bad bill I call your attention to the fact that as soon as the gentleman from New York [Mr. London] read the title of the bill, he said he was going to vote against it.

Now, that must prove it to be a pretty bad bill. The catchy part of the bill, it seems to me, is that which says it is a tax upon the excess profits of corporations. That is what will catch the people. Now, I want, before I undertake to present it to you, after the method in which the President presents his messages, to see if I have a correct understanding of this tax on excess profits, and if I am wrong I would like to be corrected now, because I think the country will want this informa-And so I will take as an example a corporation of $100,000, which was used here yesterday as an illustration; and, first, as I understand the facts, the corporation will figure up its entire income for the year, and it will deduct from that, first, the cost of operation. Next, it deducts all taxes paid. Third, it deducts $5,000 from its capital stock or its capital invested.

Mr. MADDEN. From its profits.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Deducts it from its profits.
Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; $5,000 from its profits. So much more in favor of the corporation. And fourth, the corporation deducts 8 per cent upon its capital stock or property invested in the corporation.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS. You have omitted one element. In addition to what has been recited it deducts 8 per cent on the capital stock, undivided profits, and surplus, and then it pays 8 per cent on the excess over that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes. I thank the gentleman for the correction. That is 8 per cent further. Now, if that where all that the corporation had to-pay, it might be that there would not be serious objection. But as shown further on we all know that a corporation pays a tax to the State upon the original capital. It pays a further State tax upon all the increase of the capi-In Michigan it pays a commission on all new stocks and bonds authorized, and once a year is levied a State, county, school, district, and highway tax, and other special taxes. Once a year also a tax is levied by the city and municipality. Then along comes Uncle Sam with a tax on special stock. Again he appears and taxes the earnings above a small amount. Then in case any of the earnings of the company are distributed, either as dividends or as capital, and certificates issued to the stockholders, Uncle Sam again levies a tax on the individual if he happens to hold any considerable amount of interest in the company; and then on top of all this a corporation is the target for all sorts of charities, including foreign relief funds, local charities, hospitals, churches, celebrations of all kinds, ad infinitum.

Mr. Chairman, in the consideration of the pending bill I do not overlook the fact that it requires money to carry on this great Government of ours. I was about to say that the greatest question before the American people at the present moment is how to raise sufficient revenue to carry on the Government. It certo raise summent revenue to carry on the Government. It certainly has furnished perplexities without number for our Democratic brethren, and the end is not yet. How to raise the revenue for simply carrying on the Government and paying the expenses of running the Government are questions to be met, and it is a problem about which there are party and individual differ-

But great as this question is, it is not as important to the United States as the question of whether or not we ought to embroil our Nation in European affairs, European politics, or the European war. To avoid entangling alliances was the advice of Washington; and while that great and beloved American patriot has long since passed from the scene of action, and there have been many changes in our domestic affairs since his day, still time has proven the value of his advice and wisdom, and we have felt safe in following his dictation.

It is not original with me to say that if we ever form, engage, or enter into European politics, that if we ever form an alliance with European nations, that if we become a party to preserve their national existence, it will be permanent, and we will never as a Nation be able to withdraw or be released from our obligations. Here we should hesitate long and be sure of our gations. Here we should hesitate long and be sure of our ground before taking the step. We started out to be an independent Nation. We are an independent Nation. Our forefathers of Revolutionary times endured hardships almost indescribable to cleave us from our mother country, and then told us to keep independent and alone. President Monroe not only set his approval upon such a course, but has promulgated a doctrine that has further marked out and defined the course we should pursue.

Grover Cleveland even in the matter of settling a boundary dispute between nations on the Western Hemisphere claimed it would be a violation of the Monroe doctrine to permit a foreign country by force to interfere in extending such boundary into the domain of an adjoining country, and threatened to declare war to maintain the principles of the Monroe doctrine.

Why we should now engage in the politics and affairs and undertake to dictate terms to foreign countries, make a treaty, or agree to become a party to the conduct of their affairs is not altogether plain, however praiseworthy.

Should we become a party to an agreement to preserve the integrity of Turkey? It has been the dream of the Christian world to rescue the sepulcher, and yet this is one of the Nations . who would come in first under such an agreement, protocol, treaty, convention, or concert of nations as would provide for the stability of their boundary and the autonomy of government in foreign countries.

After the domain of Turkey shall have been secured, next might come Manchuria, Tripoli, Abyssinia, Fiji, or the Cannibal Isles. Are we to fight for them? And who would call out and direct the army? Ought we under present conditions to use the strength of our Army and Navy to enforce peace in Europe, even "without victory"? Washington, the greatest of patriots, the one premier American, whose conscious presence is ever about us and whose country and Republic we are sworn to uphold, in his farewell address stated:

The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations to have with them as little political connection as possible.

I know Tennyson has pictured such a time, and we have all prayed for that time to come ever since, but he first prophesied

Heard the heavens fill with shouting, and there rain'd a ghastly dew From the nations' airy navies grappling in the central blue.

I notice that there is much mentioned in the press that if we wish to vindicate our rights we should take a peep over into Mexico. I am for peace and order. I think we have had a greater reason for going into Mexico with our Army and preserving peace and order and assisting in maintaining a protectorate government there than we did in Cuba or the Philippines.

It did not cause any heart thrill of a warm-blooded American citizen to send our Navy to Vera Cruz and shell a helpless city, or to march our soldiers into the heart of Mexico and march them out again. Our Mexican policy has been one of ignominous failure, and it has done its share to deplete our Treasury. In future generations this will be known as the war of the President, with the most powerful Nation on earth on one side and the most distracted on the other.

This talk about corporate misdeeds and unjustifiable American investments in Mexico may do to prejudice a nonthinking public, but the slaughter of American citizens is not the way to adjust American investments either in foreign or domestic If we are for peace, and speed the day, Mexico is a affairs.

I admit that it is easier to tell what ought to have been done by looking back over past experiences than it is to tell what should be done in the future. Now it is easy to see that Huerta should have been recognized. Why he was not looks more like putting up a bluff against Huerta at this angle than it did to consummate a diplomatic adjustment of our obligations to protect American citizens in foreign countries or strengthen our relations with that sister Republic situated here on our own We did not even have the satisfaction of a salute from him. We have done more for Villa and Carranza than we did for Huerta, and we owe them less respect. Huerta may have obtained the Presidency by revolution, but so did every President of the Republic from the conquest of Hidalgo to the present time. And it will be so with the next ruler, whether it be Carranza or Villa. But we have now marched our soldiers out of Mexico; here comes the flag and here comes the fife and drum. We have finally determined upon a Mexican policy, "Go to it" interpreted to mean "let them fight it out among themselves." Every one of the soldiers going into that country went there to do his duty; every one of them was a hero; but in time to come he will not be proud of the experience or achievements of the American Army or Navy on that occasion. The net result—Villa shot in the leg, a long hike, and a $150,000,000 addition to the deficiency of the Treasury.

The appropriations needed to carry on the Government for the next fiscal year, and which must be provided for, exceed $2,000,000,000. They exceed the estimate submitted at the beginning of the last session by $368,961,845, and exclusive of deficiencies and miscellaneous items exceed the appropriations for the current fiscal year by $181,936,211. This is the statement put into the RECORD by the minority chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and with the added remark that every appropriation bill is increased over the amount carried for the current year, with the exception of the river and harbor bill.

We are and have been at peace with all the world. now engaged in providing ways and means of raising this vast How are we to raise it and how should we raise it? are the questions. The present bill, among other ways, provides for the issuance of Government bonds. Some of this bond money will be used to pay current expenses. With that I am not in sympathy and do not agree. While aiming to reach the overreaching corporations, it metes out a staggering blow to the legitimate manufacturer and sends a shock through our domestic concerns engaged in close competitive trade and pursuits, employing labor and paying a just wage. The tax is measured by the amount of business done. I am not in accord with this method of direct taxation. I stand for the American manufacturer against the foreign manufacturer. I am for the American laborer and for a fair wage and a legitimate return to the employer of labor. I believe in a protective tariff. My district stands for it, and the State of Michigan stands for a protective tariff, not for the protection alone but as the best way of raising our revenue.

Among the items going to make up the deficiency of the Treasury and calling for the issue of bonds and a new method of taxation are to be found:

To purchase ships 5 For constructing a nitrate plant 2	2, 000, 000 0, 000, 000 0, 000, 000 0, 000, 000
--------------------------------------------------------	----------------------------------------------------------	--

In all

Of course, having spent the $162,000,000 already in Mexico, we must now raise it somehow, but we could by hook or crook defer the others to a more opportune time. Until the Republicans are restored to power, and then it will not be necessary to raise it at all.

My colleague, Mr. FORDNEY, of Michigan, demonstrated yesterday very clearly that under a Republican protective tariff properly levied, carrying no greater rate than the Payne bill, would have paid even for these expenditures, and the sale of the Panama bonds would have met the additional appropriations now proposed. When the Republicans went out and the Democrats came into power there was a cash balance of $130,000,000 to the credit of the Government in the Treasury of the United States. Now, we have a deficiency of $300,000,000. This change was brought about since the change of administration, and we have been at peace with all the world all the time. So say our Democratic brethren.

THE PROPOSED BILL.

The proposed bill is divided into four separate parts called titles, viz, Title I, which specifies that the revenue collected under Title II of this act and one-third of the receipts collected under Title III, together with the additional revenue collected under the act of September 8, 1916, to the extent of $175,000,000, shall constitute a special preparedness fund; Title II, the excess profits tax; Title III, the amended estate tax; and Title IV, miscellaneous, which provides (1) for a bond issue, (2) for the issue of additional certificates of indebtedness, and (3) that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may have authority, within his discretion, to require a corporation to state in its return to whom it has paid dividends and the amount thereof.

TITLE I-SPECIAL PREPAREDNESS FUND.

This title provides that the receipts from the excess profits tax and one-third of the receipts from the estate tax provided in this bill, together with $175,000,000, the additional revenue collected from the taxes levied in the revenue act of September 8, 1916, shall be set aside as a special preparedness fund to be used toward defraying the expenses for the Army and Navy and fortifications. It is provided, however, that should there be no other money available in the Treasury to meet current obligations that the Secretary of the Treasury may use this fund for other purposes, but any sums so disbursed must be returned to this fund.

TITLE IL.

Which is too long to quote, provides for a new and additional tax on corporations and is called "excess-profit tax" on its net income.

Under it a corporation first determines its gross profits. Then from these gross profits deduct, first, the cost of operation; second, all taxes paid; third, $5,000 in cash; fourth, 8 per cent on the total value of the capital stock or property invested in the corporation; fifth, then 8 per cent goes to the Government.

Then the corporation must pay to the Government 8 percent on the balance after the above deductions are made. This might seem reasonable, but when we take into consideration what corporations now pay, it will be found to be an added burden and takes from the surplus earnings of the association.

But it is said that a corporation making more than 8 per cent upon its investment ought to be willing to pay this additional Already corporations are singled out for meeting many local demands. A letter just received states on corporations:

- 1. A tax is levied by the State on the original capital at the time of

- incorporation.

 2. A further tax by the State is levied on all increases of capital.

 3. The Michigan Securities commission have to be paid a tax on all new stock or bonds authorized.

 4. Once a year a tax is levied for State, county, school district, country roads, and other special objects.

 5. Once a year a tax is levied by the city or municipality.

 6. Along comes "Uncle Sam" with a tax on capital stock.

 7. Again he appears and taxes the earnings above a small amount.

 8. Then, in case any of the earnings of a company are distributed, either as dividends or kept in the company and capitalized, and certificates issued to the stockholders, then "Uncle Sam" again levies a tax on the individual, if he happens to hold any considerable amount of interest in the company.

9. On top of that, corporations are the targets of all sorts of charities, including foreign relief funds, local charities, Young Men's Christian Association, Young Women's Christian Association, hospitals, churches, public celebrations of all kinds, etc., ad infinitum.

We all have our burdens, and corporations and manufacturers are not exempt. I am opposed to this bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. REILLY] 10 minutes.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, the pending bill is correctly entitled "A bill to provide increased revenue to defray the expenses of the increased appropriations for the Army and Navy and the extensions of fortifications," because without these increased appropriations there would be no occasion for a special revenue measure.

The revenue bill of the last session of Congress should also have been thus entitled, because if it were not for the increased appropriations for national defense made during that session there would have been no occasion for new revenue legislation.

The Underwood tariff bill, with its income-tax feature, has surpassed the expectations of its framers as a revenue producer. In the first year of its existence, before the war, it produced $10,000,000 more revenue than the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill did in its last year. If the European war had not intervened, the Underwood tariff bill would have met every revenue requirement of the Government.

From the beginning of civil government two systems of taxation have had their advocates, and it might be said that many of the great contests of the world have been waged around the question of taxation. The right to tax and the method of exercising that right have been two great issues that have often resulted in conflicts. One of these systems is known as the direct and the other as the indirect system of taxation. The indirect system of taxation has always been favored by the wealthy classes, and is represented in legislation by tariff duties which place the tax upon consumption, while the direct system of taxation, represented in this country by the income tax and the inheritance tax, taxes a man according to his ability to pay.

The Republican Party has always stood for the indirect system of taxation-the taxing of a man's necessities-while the Democratic Party has always been the advocate of the direct system of taxation, which taxes a man according to his ability to pay,

During the present administration the Democratic Party has demonstrated its friendliness for the direct system of taxation by the enactment of an income-tax law and an inheritance-tax law, and by proposing for enactment into a law of the pending measure, which provides for an excess-profit tax.

These three great taxation measures, whereby the wealth of the country will be compelled to pay its just share of the taxes necessary for the support of the Government, will during the next fiscal year bring into the United States Treasury approximately $500,000,000 that our Republican friends would have raised through tariff duties, under which, according to distinguished leaders of their own party, the tariff barons would be able to collect $3 for every dollar that found its way into the National Treasury. In other words, if our Republican friends could have their way, the people of the United States would have to pay $1,500,000,000 as consumption taxes in order that $500,000,000 of revenue might be placed in the National Treasury.

Our Republican friends would raise this huge sum needed to finance our program of preparedness by going back to the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill, a bill that was so iniquitous as a taxing measure as to call forth the most strenuous opposition and denunciation from many of the leaders in their own party. The Hon. H. E. Miles, of Racine, Wis., a distinguished Republican and leading manufacturer, and who at one time was president of the National Association of Manufacturers, declared that the tariff graft was the greatest steal in the world, and that it robbed the American people of five hundred millions a year. The Hon. Francis E. McGovern, twice Republican governor of the State of Wisconsin and once a Republican candidate for the United States Senate, declared that the Dingley tariff law robbed the people of $500,000,000 a year, and that during its 10 years of existence had unjustly taken from the consumers of this country $5,000,000,000. The Hon. Albert Cummins, twice Republican governor of the State of Iowa and now Republican United States Senator from that State, declared that—

All of the robberies committed by all the insurance companies in all times past did not amount to one-fifth of the robberies committed under the Dingley law in a single year.

The late United States Senator Dolliver, of Iowa, a brilliant and distinguished Republican leader, made a terrific attack in the United States Senate on the Payne-Aldrich bill, denouncing it as the high-water mark of iniquitous taxation and viciously upbraiding his party for its perfidy in passing the same.

Let me inform you, my Republican friends, that even if you were disposed to go back to the service of the tariff barons and write another Payne-Aldrich bill, you could not come within a gunshot of raising the necessary revenue to finance the preparedness program of the present Congress, the enormous appropriations for which you are equally responsible with the Democratic membership of this House.

Why, your dear old Aldrich law, that represented protection run mad, raised through customs duties only $333,000,000 in 1910, its first year; $314,000,000 in its second year; $311,000,000, its third year; and only $318,000,000 its last year. At no time during its four years of existence did it come within $15,000,000 of collecting the receipts of its first year. And why? Because in your desire to serve the tariff barons you had put the tariff rates so high that many of them were prohibitive.

If the Payne-Aldrich bill had remained on the statute books during the war until the present time, and no new revenue legislation had been enacted, the National Treasury would be confronted with a much larger deficit than it has to contend with to-day, for the reason that since the war began the importations of tariff-bearing articles or articles that carried tariff duties in the Payne-Aldrich bill has fallen off, with the exception of wool, which was placed on the free list in the Underwood bill.

The contention of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Fordner] that his party would raise the necessary revenue to support the National Government to-day by a tariff is ridiculous, in view of the fact that when his party was in full control in this House at a time when the expenditures of the Government were hundreds of millions annually below what they are to-day it confessed its inability to raise sufficient revenue under tariff duties by levying a tax upon business in the shape of a corporation tax—a tax that the gentleman now rails against as a tax on thrift.

It seems that some of the Republican Members of this House are in favor of tariff duties because they believe that the foreigner pays the tax. I really did not expect to hear the argument, that the foreigner paid the tax, advanced in this debate. And I was much gratified to hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Miller] state a few moments ago that he had been making Republican speeches for 50 years, and that he had never attempted to argue that the foreigner pays the tax. I congratulate the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and I assure him that it is a real pleasure to the Members on this side of the House to learn that there is at least one Member on the Republican side of this Chamber who refuses to sit still and permit members of his own party to argue that the foreigner pays the tax, without entering his solemn protest against such a line of argument.

Everybody knows the argument that the foreigner pays the tax has done valiant service for the tariff barons in many a political campaign, but I assumed that by general consent among Republicans the argument had been abandoned as unworthy of presentation to intelligent human beings. And I take it that this abondonment took place when the Republican Party promised the people of the United States, in its 1908 platform, to reduce the tariff if returned to power. Of course, if the foreigner paid the tax, no party, not even the Republican Party, would have been justified in reducing the tariff, and thereby transferring the burden of taxation from the shoulders of the foreigner to the shoulders of our American citizens.

I want to say to our Republican friends that if you believed in 1908 the bunk that some of you talk to-day, that the foreigner pays the tax, your platform plank on the tariff in 1908 was a treasonable betrayal of the people of this country.

The pending bill increases by 50 per cent existing rates in the present inheritance-tax law; it levies an excess profits tax on corporations, co-partnerships, and joint-stock companies of 8 per cent on the net earnings; in excess of 8 per cent on the capital invested, plus $5,000. It is estimated that these two provisions of the present bill will bring into the Treasury annually about $240,000,000 in revenue.

The bill also provides for the issuing of $303,000,000 of bonds. These bonds are to take care of the expenditures incurred in the mobilization of our troops on the Mexican border, in the building of the Alaskan railroads, in the purchase of the Danish West Indies Islands, in the building of a nitrate plant, in the construction of a Government armor-plate plant, and in the upbuilding of a merchant marine.

While this measure in all its particulars does not meet with my approval, still on the whole I believe that it provides the best method for raising the revenue necessary to take care of our preparedness program. Under its terms the tax burden of preparedness is placed where, in my judgment, it ought to be placed—upon wealth, upon those who are best able to pay, and not, as our Republican friends would have, upon all who consume, without regard to their ability to pay.

There has been much said in this debate about the reckless extravagance of the present administration, and it has been charged that if the Democratic Party had been as economical in its administration of the affairs of the Nation as the Republican party was there would be no occasion for emergency revenue legislation.

There is only one real way of determining the question as to whether or not the Democratic Party has been more extravagant in the expenditure of public funds than the Republican Party, and that is by a comparison of records. I marveled as I sat in this debate and listened to some of my friends on the other side of this aisle extolling the economical record of the Republican Party, and I wondered if the gentlemen who were speaking of their party's record in the matter of appropriations really knew what that record was, or were they speaking as they hoped it was.

In the 12-year period beginning with Grover Cleveland's first administration and ending with his last administration, two-thirds Democratic period, appropriations for a single Congress were increased from $655,000,000 in the Forty-eighth Congress to $954,000,000 in the Fifty-fourth Congress, or about 50 per cent increase, while in the 12-year period of exclusive Republican rule, under Presidents McKinley and Roosevelt, appropriations were increased for a single Congress from $954,000,000 in the Fifty-fourth Congress to $2,114,000,000 in the Sixtieth Congress, or an increase of more than 100 per cent, and during President Roosevelt's last four years the appropriations were increased more than $750,000,000 over the appropriations for his first four years.

It might be observed in passing that the enormous increases in appropriations of $750,000,000 during Roosevelt's last term over his first term occurred when our country was at peace with the world and when there were only ordinary appropriations made for the national defense.

If we eliminate expenditures for the maintenance of the Post Office—which, by the way, should be eliminated in all comparisons of appropriations for the reason that as a general proposition the Post Office is self-sustaining under Democratic rule—we find that the present administration during the Sixty-third Congress increased expenditures of the Government about $50,000.000 over the limit reached in the Sixtieth Congress, a Republican Congress, Mr. Roosevelt's last Congress, six years prior. While the said Sixtieth Congress, a Republican Congress, increased the appropriations, eliminated appropriations for post offices, more than three hundred and fifty millions over the total appropriations for the Fifty-seventh Congress, six years prior.

appropriations for the Fifty-seventh Congress, six years prior.

As a further comparison, if we take the Sixty-second and Sixty-third Congresses, the first two Congresses in which the Democratic Party was in full control in this House, and compare the appropriations of these two Congresses with the two immediately preceding Republican Congresses, we find, eliminating Post Office appropriations, that the total appropriations for these two Democratic Congresses were only seventy millions more than the appropriations for the two immediately preceding Republican Congresses, while during the said two preceding Republican Congresses appropriations were increased more than four hundred and fifty millions over the two immediately preceding Republican Congresses.

Increased appropriations in both Democratic periods herein compared with former Republican periods are made up largely of appropriations for the support of the Post Office, for the upbuilding of the Navy, and the strengthening of the Army, and for more liberal pensions for the old soldiers.

I take it that none of our Republican friends who have denounced the Democratic Party as a party of extravagance will stand on the floor of this House or elsewhere and condemn the Democratic Party for its liberal treatment of the veterans of our wars, for increasing the appropriations for the Army and the Navy, and for the expansion of our postal facilities.

Thus it would appear that if we eliminate the increased appropriations of the present administration concerning which there is no conflict or dispute the Democratic Party during its first four years of complete control in this House has kept the ordinary expenditures of the Government down to about what they were under Republican rule at periods of four and six years prior to the Democratic Party's control in this House, an accomplishment that points to economy and not to extravagance in appropriations in view of the record of the Republican Party in increasing by leaps and bounds appropriations for the support of the Government.

However, while the Republican Party during its 16 years of power paid practically no attention to economizing in national expenditures and left a record of reckless extravagance in appropriations unequaled by any party in the history of this Government, it is a fact that during President Taft's first two years an effort was made by that party to economize, and strange as it may seem, the party that prides itself on being the party of national defense began its record of economy by cutting down the appropriations for the Army and the Navy. During the first two years of President Taft's administration appropriations for the Navy were reduced from $136,000,000 in the last session of the Sixtieth Congress to $131,000,000 and $126,000,000 in the first and second sessions, respectively, of the Sixty-first Con-gress, and the appropriations for the Army were cut down from $101,000,000 in the last session of the Sixtieth Congress to $95,000,000 and $93,000,000 in the first and second sessions, respectively, of the Sixty-first Congress, President Taft's first Con-The reduction in the Army and Navy appropriations in President Taft's first Congress, together with decreased appropriations for pensions, were largely responsible for the showing of economy made by the Republican Party in the Sixty-first

I believe that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] made a statement to-day that the Republican Party made the American Navy the second navy in the world. Whether that statement be true or not, the fact remains that the Republican Party began to unmake our Navy and our Army in the first and second sessions of President Taft's first Congress by cutting down appropriations for the support of both of these arms of our national defense.

We have heard much in this debate about Democratic pork—river and harbor and public-buildings bills. Let us appeal to the Record again, which shows that President Taft during his administration signed river and harbor bills and public-buildings bills—pork bills now, but wise and economical appropriations then-that carried almost $90,000,000 more than what President Wilson during his first term will sign if he signs the public-buildings bill and the river and harbor bill recently passed by this House. In other words, my dear Republican friends, your Republican President Taft, as chief of your economical party, permitted legislation carrying $250,000,000 of so-called river and harbor and public-buildings graft to become laws, while President Wilson in the same length of time, as the head of what is termed an extravagant Democratic administration, will permit, if he sign all of these bills passed by this House to date, only $159,000,000 of such legislation to pass

Now, my Republican friends, are you not really ashamed of yourselves to be talking about this administration as a porkbarrel administration, in view of the record of your own party along the line of pork?

The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] stated a few moments ago that he had not voted for the public-buildings bill or the river and harbor bill, and that he was not responsible for all the increased appropriations of the present Congress. I congratulate the gentleman on his vote, and will state that I have not voted for a river and harbor bill or a public-buildings bill during my almost four years' service in this House; but I desire to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in his opposition to large appropriations he is very lonely on his side of this Chamber. He has but few associates in his fight for economy, because it is a matter of common knowledge and of record that practically every effort to reduce appropriations during the present Congress has met with the almost solid opposition of the Republican side of this House.

I venture the statement that no party in the future will be able to reduce the ordinary expenditures of this Government. The Government is growing, growing rapidly by the establishment of bureaus and boards. People are demanding that the Government do so many things for them not heretofore considered governmental duties that the ordinary governmental expenses must necessarily increase, and all that any party can hope to do as the watchful guardian of the Public Treasury is to keep the ordinary appropriations from increasing unrea-

While I do not claim that the Democratic Party has done all that it should do in the way of curtailing and economizing in public expenditures, it does appear from the record, to use the language of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Gen. Hulings, who occupied a seat on the Republican side of this Chamber in the Sixty-third Congress, that "it lies not in the mouth of the Republican Party to charge the Democratic Party with extravagance.'

I have made no reference to the appropriations of the present, the Sixty-fourth, Congress for the reason that more than $1,000,-000,000 of the increased appropriations of this Congress already made or to be made are and will be the answer of Congress to an apparent public demand for increased expenditures for the national defense, and for these increased appropriations the Republican side of this Chamber must share equal responsibility with the Democratic side.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GARLAND] indulged the House this afternoon with a tariff argument that must have caused some of his colleagues on his side of the Chamber to retire to the cloakroom so that they could indulge in a quiet laugh.

I presume the gentleman thought that, inasmuch as others on his side had seen fit to urge in this debate the argument that the foreigner pays the tax, he was justified in bringing forth from the political grave of the past another of the tariff barons' arguments, to wit, that the Wilson Democratic tariff act of 1894 brought on the panic of 1893.

I have no doubt at all but that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has heard the 1893 tariff panic argument so often from Republican campaign speakers in the past that he has really come to believe that there is something in it.

Of course, all who are familiar with the history of the great panic of the nineties know that the said panic began in May, 1893, about 2 months after Benjamin Harrison left the White House, and 14 months before the Wilson tariff bill became a law.

According to the argument of the high-tariff advocates, the panic of 1893 was caused by a reduction of the tariff duties in the Wilson tariff bill, which reduced duties permitted our markets to be flooded with foreign-made goods and caused our factories to be closed and our laboring men to be thrown out of employment. This argument sounds well, and it has rendered great service to the Republican Party in several campaigns, but unfortunately the argument is based upon supposed facts and not

There was no flooding of our markets with foreign-made goods during any part of Grover Cleveland's administration or during the life of the Wilson tariff bill.

During the four fiscal years of Cleveland's administration and the life of the Wilson tariff bill our total imports were $400,-000,000 less than during the four previous years of Harrison's administration under the McKinley tariff law, and for the fiscal year ending 1894, the first year of Cleveland's last administration, our imports of manufactured articles and articles for further use in manufacturing, the only two lines of imports that competed with American factories and American laboring men, were $133,000,000 less than our imports of the same kind of articles for the previous year under Republican rule.

During President Cleveland's last four years our imports of manufactured articles and articles for further use in manufacturing were $221,000,000 less than the imports of the same kind of articles during the previous four years of President Harrison's administration; during each of the fiscal years of President Cleveland's last administration, before and after the passage of the Wilson tariff bill, our imports of manufactured articles and articles for further use in manufacturing did not equal for a single year, not to say exceed, the imports of the same kind of articles of the corresponding years of President Harrison's administration under a Republican tariff law.

The record of exports during the Cleveland second administration and the life of the Wilson tariff law does not indicate that our factories and our laboring men could have suffered any loss of business or employment because of the passage of the Wilson Tariff Act.

During the first fiscal year of the second Cleveland administration our exports of manufactured articles and manufactured articles for further use in manufacturing, exports that meant employment for American factories and American laboring men, increased $24,000,000 over the previous fiscal year under the Republican tariff and Republican rule, and the total exports of manufactured articles and articles for further use in manufacturing, during the four fiscal years of Cleveland's second administration and the Wilson tariff law. show an increase of $249,000,000 over the previous four years of Republican rule under a Republican tariff law. The last year of the so-called free trade Democratic Wilson Tariff Act our exports of manufactured goods and manufactured goods for further use in manufacturing, reached the high-water mark of $311,000,000, an increase of 75 per cent over the last year of Benjamin Harrison's administration, and our total exports for the last year of the Wilson tariff bill also reached the high-water mark of $1,032,000,000, or $17,000,000 more than the best Republican fiscal year of 1893.

In view of the foregoing record of decreasing imports and increasing exports of manufactured articles and manufactured articles for further use in manufacturing, during President Cleveland's second term and during the life of the Wilson Democratic tariff law, it is no wonder that the late Senator Doliver, an able Republican leader, declared in the 1910 tariff debate in the United States Senate that he never believed that the Wilson tariff law brought on the panic of 1893.

What sane man could believe that a law that was not passed until 14 months after the panic began could have been responsible for the panic? What sane man could believe, in view of the customhouse record of that period, which tells of fewer manufactured goods coming into our country and more manufactured goods going out from our country to other markets, that such conditions could be responsible for a panic?

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Garland] also charged that the Underwood tariff bill had ruined American industries and deprived millions of our workingmen of their jobs, by permitting through lower duties foreign manufacturers to flood our markets with their wares. Again the gentleman from Pennsylvania is simply repeating the arguments of the tariff barons, arguments based upon supposed and not real facts.

With all due respect to the distinguished gentlemen who have been talking about the rulnous effect of the Underwood tariff bill upon our industries, let me state that the records of imports and exports do not show that there has been any unusual increased importation of the manufactured products of the world into our country to compete with our factories and our laboring men since the enactment of the Underwood tariff law. The fact of the matter is, the record shows that our factories and our laboring men have had less competition from the manufactured products of foreign countries since the Underwood bill became a law than they would have had if the importation record of the Payne-Aldrich bill had continued down to the present time.

During the fiscal year 1913, the last fiscal year of the Payne-Aldrich bill, our imports of manufactured articles ready for use and manufactured articles for further use in manufacturing increased more than one hundred millions over the imports of the same kind of articles for the previous fiscal year. the fiscal year 1914, the first fiscal year of the Underwood tariff bill, our imports of manufactured articles ready for use and manufactured articles for further use in manufacturing increased only eleven million over the imports of the same kind of articles in the fiscal year 1913, the last year of the Payne-Aldrich bill; during the fiscal year 1915, under the Underwood tariff bill, our imports of the same kind of articles amounted to one hundred and eighty million less than the imports for the last fiscal year of the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill; and for the fiscal year 1916 our imports of the same kind of articles, manufactured ready for use and manufactured articles for further use in manufacturing, amounted to eighty-two million less than the last year of the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill, the fiscal year of Where are the manufactured goods the product of foreign cheap labor we have been told came to this country after the passage of the Underwood bill that closed so many of our factories? Is it possible that these importations of foreign goods existed only in the imagination of the high-tariff advocates? Well, it looks very much, from the record, that such is the case. Increased importations? No; decreased importations to the amount of more than two hundred million is the record of the Underwood bill down to the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, in the matter of manufactured articles ready for use and manufactured articles ready for use and manufactured.

factured articles for further use in manufacturing, two lines of imports calculated to take business from our manufacturers and work from our laboring men.

It has been charged in this debate, not only that the Underwood bill had seriously crippled American industries before the war broke out but also the charge has been made that when the European war is over, judging by present imports, our markets will be flooded with foreign-made goods and our industries ruined. In this after-the-war argument we recognize an old friend of the recent campaign. During the political battle that has passed into history the Republican spellbinders, when they did not think it safe to announce to an intelligent audience that the foreigner paid the tariff tax, put in their time in telling the laboring men, the business men, the manufacturers, and the farmers what was going to happen to this country when the war was over.

The Republican stump orator would exclaim, if our imports from foreign countries can increase $500,000,000 in a single year, when 20,000,000 of the workingmen of Europe are engaged in destroying each other upon the fields of battle, what will become of our industries when the war is over and these millions of men are returned to the workshops of Europe?

Of course, such an unqualified statement was calculated to terrify American manufacturers and American workingmen. There can be no doubt at all but that the after-the-war argument was worked to the limit by our Republican friends, and in many places it was a success as a vote winner.

The record, as I have shown, disproves completely the charge that our manufacturers received any ruinous competition from foreign countries before the war, as a result of the passage of the Underwood tariff bill. The record also disproves the charge that our industries are menaced or will be menaced when the war is over, because of the fact that we imported last year $500,000,000 more of foreign goods than we imported a year ago.

It is true that our imports during the last fiscal year increased $500,000,000 over what they were a year ago, but what kind of products made up this enormous increase of imports? Manufactured products ready for use or consumption? Manufactured products to be used in further manufacturing? No. The record discloses that this large increase of $500,000,000 in our imports in a single year was made up largely, if not entirely, of raw materials for use in our factories, and as shown by the records during the fiscal year, of this enormous increase in our imports of all classes of articles, $82,000,000 less of manufactured articles ready for use and manufactured articles for further use in manufacturing were imported than the last fiscal year of the Payne-Aldrich bill. In other words, while our total volume of imports for the last fiscal year exceeded by several hundred million dollars our total volume of imports for the last year of the Payne-Aldrich bill, our manufacturers and our laboring men had to contend with $82,000,000 less of competition from foreign countries.

There is a vast difference between importing into our country raw materials for use in our factories and the importing of manufactured articles ready for sale. The importing of manufactured articles ready for sale may take work from our factories and laboring men, while the importing of raw materials gives work to our factories and our laboring men. You can not close the factories of this country by importing large quantities of raw materials.

Both parties in the past have stood for free raw materials as essential for our industrial development. The fact of the matter is, the large increased importations of raw materials during the past fiscal year, and which fact was taken advantage of by our Republican friends in the recent campaign for the purpose of terrifying the business and laboring world, made it possible for our factories to break all records in turning out manufactured products, and without the hundreds of millions of increased importations of raw materials many of our factories would have been idle and hundreds of thousands of workingmen out of employment.

I do not know what will happen after this terrible European war is over. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Kelley], who made an eloquent speech this afternoon, telling of the large number of our men that were employed to-day on foreign orders, orders resulting from the European war, does not know what the industrial conditions will be when this great war is over. No living man can foretell what economic industrial conditions are going to follow in the wake of Europe's mad war. History furnishes no parallel by which to judge of coming events. However, I do know that in the Underwood tariff bill we have the highest tariff rates of any protective-tariff country in the world, except Russia, to protect our industries from foreign competition. I do know that we have an antidumping law designed to prevent the flooding of our markets with cheap, foreign products after the war, and I do know that the present administration has pro-Tariff Commission with powers to investigate and to advise Congress as to the tariff rates necessary to meet any changes in economic conditions that may exist when Europe once more becomes a land of peace.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, if you want to please a man, tickle his stomach; if you want to displease him, strike his pocketbook. When you come to the raising of taxes, you always affect the pocketbook. The question that is before us for consideration is whether or not the bill that the ma-jority has offered is such a measure as we can support, notwithstanding it will affect the pocketbook.

H. R. 20073 is only another instance of the incompetency and extravagance of the present administration in its handling of our domestic affairs. This makes the fourth revenue bill that it has adopted within four years-something that has never happened before since the creation of the Government, not even during the Civil War—and the strange thing about it is that each of your revenue bills is less scientific and more unsound than its predecessor. Judging by your last attempt either you have not tried to frame an intelligent measure or you do not know how. You have taken the simplest way, and that is to tax a few fellows whom you think have some money. You claim this to be the effect of your bill. In this you are incorrect as usual. Under your administration of affairs the Federal Government will have to collect $2,300,000,000 in taxes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, to pay for your recklessness, while the American people under a Republican administration in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, were only required to raise $664,000,000 to defray the expenses of the Federal Government and $1,466,000,000 to defray the expenses of State. county, and municipal governments. You are now compelling county, and municipal governments. You are now compelling the American people to pay more than $200,000,000 more for carrying on the Federal Government than it cost in 1913 to pay all the expenses of running the Federal Government as well as the State and municipal governments. Prior to your taking over the administration of affairs the amount of State, county, and municipal taxes was twice the amount spent for carrying on the affairs of the Federal Government, but since you got control it has cost the Federal Government $833,000,000 more to carry on its affairs than it cost the States, countles, and municipalities of this country to carry on their governments in 1913. In view of these facts it is not surprising that you are ready to cover up your shortcomings, be what they may.

The imposition of an inheritance tax by the Federal Government will work a great injustice to the laboring classes of our country, because it will rob them of the ability to maintain a home, which is just the reverse of what the authors of this bill claim for it. They claim that its great merit lies in the fact that it taxes the rich and lets the man of average means go scot free. I take issue with them on this proposition, and I am confident that I can demonstrate beyond question that a Federal inheritance tax will work a hardship on the masses of our people, because it will materially increase their State, county, and city taxes.

As a general proposition I am in favor of an inheritance tax. No one familiar with the subject of taxation would in this hour of progress proclaim against it. However, I am opposed to the Federal Government imposing such a tax, because by doing so it robs the States of the ability to obtain revenue from inheritances. Forty-two of our forty-eight States are now deriving a considerable revenue from this tax.

It is not a new legislative invention for raising public funds, but, on the contrary, has been in vogue since very early times, Gibbons, the historian, claims that Emperor Augustus originated this method of taxation to support the Roman Army. It was introduced into Great Britain in 1780 by Lord North, and has been resorted to by nearly all of the European countries. 1826 Pennsylvania adopted it, since which date 41 other States of the Union have made it a part of their tax system. From the standpoint of those who agree with the French tax commissioner, that "the science of taxation consists in plucking the most feathers with the least squawking," it is perfect,

The ability or faculty to pay has come to be the test in determining the justice of this tax, as has been well stated by the Supreme Court of Minnesota in State against Bazille, Ninetyseventh Minnesota, page 11. Seligman, in his excellent work on taxation, has this to say in reference to the ability-to-pay test:

That it is not only the basis of taxation but the goal toward which society is steadily working. It lies instinctively and unconsciously at the bottom of all our endeavors at reform.

Notwithstanding we are in full accord with this method of raising revenue, we recognize a very serious objection to it when it is resorted to to fill the coffers of the Federal Treasury at the expense of the small property owner, as does the present bill. When the Federal Government attempts to impose new and additional taxes upon the people it should take into consideration the tax burdens that its citizens are already carrying in the support of their municipalities, counties, and States.

Under our dual system of government State and local taxes greatly exceed in amount Federal taxes, except when the Democrats are in power, and this condition will prevail so long as the States continue to perform their part of the contract of union, which was to do everything possible for the enlightenment, comfort, and happiness of the people within their borders not expressly delegated to and undertaken by the Federal Government. Realizing their obligations to their citizens, the States have vied with each other in establishing and maintaining excellent public-school systems, extending to rich and poor alike on terms of absolute equality the opportunity to get an education; in building asylums, reformatories, and prisons for the unfortunates; in establishing and maintaining free hospitals for the sick and infirm; and in a thousand other ways helping the people in their battle against the vicissitudes of nature. The things that affect us in our everyday life can be better performed by the States and municipalities; they are closer to the public. Through their personal touch and intimate knowledge, local officials can better discharge their duties and obligations to the people than the Federal officials, who are far removed from the home life of the average citizen and who are more chiefly concerned with formulating and initiating our foreign Until recently the officers of the Federal Government gave but little of their time to foreign affairs.

But since the Spanish-American War the isolation of the United States is past. With its passing a colossal responsibility has been imposed upon the General Government which at times monopolizes its attention to the exclusion of everything else. Therefore, instead of surrendering to the Federal Government matters of local concern, as has become the custom of late, we should resist every effort which, if successful, will deprive the State of exercising power and control over matters inherently Those functions of government that are local in their character belong to the States and should be jealously guarded. For the last 127 years we have adhered to this basic principle, and in the light of the success that has come to us, it would be an act of folly to abandon it. Instead of decreasing the activities of the State they should be materially increased, and as they are increased there will be a corresponding increase of local taxes. In 1913, under existing conditions, the American people paid in taxes for all governmental purposes—Federal,

State, and local-the following sums:

General Government____ State County Municipalities Municipalities

It will be seen from the foregoing that the head of the average American family is compelled to pay $75.50 per year for the support of his State and municipality, and $32.30 for the Federal Government, making in all a tax of $110 per family. fore the bulk of Federal taxes have been derived from duties on imposts, and excise duties, such as that imposed on tobacco and liquors. When the majority of the State constitutions were framed the only form of taxation provided for was that on property. The authors of these documents were more concerned about "the rule of equality of taxation" than they were over a new source of revenue, as the old sources were then but slightly tapped. HOME OWNERS.

Taxes were not burdensome as now. In our modern city the mechanic, artisan, and man of small means could afford to own his own home. Alas! That time is rapidly passing and the enactment of this measure will materially hasten it. It is claimed by the proponents of this bill, the Democratic Party, that it is designed to make those who can best afford it pay this tax. If this is its only effect, then the only objection that could be urged against it is that it is unnecessary. While I am satisfied that under anything like an economic and business administration of our public affairs this tax would be unnecessary, I am not going to attack it on that ground, but on the ground that it takes from the States their only indirect source of revenue, which they must retain if they expect to remain a community of home owners.

By the Constitution of the United States the great source of revenue to be found in duties on imports was reserved to the General Government alone, and it was the policy of the founders of the Government to use the duties on imposts as the normal source of the national revenue. The field of direct taxation was left to the States, and it was tacitly understood that this field was not to be invaded by the General Government except in times of stress. As the activities of the State and municipal governments broadened and increased additional revenues had to be secured, and 42 of the 48 States have passed inheritancetax laws to meet this ever-increasing demand for funds with which to not only carry on the ordinary functions of government but to perfect and extend the public-school system, to provide more liberally for dependents, and in other ways to bring home to the people more of the blessings of a wise and munificent Government.

Every dollar raised by the States in this way relieves the small property owner of a part of his tax burden and tends to keep the tax at a point where he could meet it and save his home. The effect of this bill will be to deprive the States from ever-increasing inheritance-tax rates, and thus limiting this source of revenue to its present amount. The excuse offered for such a performance is that the States never have derived a very large revenue from this tax. Neither did the Federal Government derive any tax at all from incomes until very recently.

If the Federal Government forecloses the State's opportunity to increase its revenue from inheritances because it has not as yet worked this field to the limit, can not the States follow the same line of argument with equal justification and demand that the Government limit or abandon its tax on incomes because it failed to impose an income tax until very recently? If under a wise national policy State, county, and municipal taxes amount to nearly three times Federal taxes, as I have clearly shown, should the only special source from which the State derives a part of its revenue be appropriated by the Federal Government when the latter has at its command a number of sources from which it can derive revenue without interfering with the State tax system?

ADMINISTRATIVE FEATURES ARE BURDENSOME.

The administrative features of the Federal inheritance-tax law are unjust in that they place an unnecessary burden upon an estate. Under section 208 of the revenue act passed by the Sixty-fourth Congress the collector of internal revenue is forced to sell the property of an estate within 14 months after the decedent's death, unless the tax has been paid prior to that time. Many times this would result in considerable loss to the estate.

It is often a question of judgment when a piece of property will bring most. On such questions the judgment of the representative of the estate is worth far more than that of the average collector of revenues, who is apt to know but little or nothing about local conditions or the value of the property. Thus the court may decide there is reasonable cause for delay, but this is after suit is brought and expenses incurred. Neither the collector nor the representative of the estate has the power under the present law to determine when a reasonable cause for delay exists. That is left to the court. Section 208 can be stricken from the law without in any way impairing the chances of the Federal Government getting the tax due it in the orderly administration of the estate under State laws. There is no necessity for such drastic legislation as this, for under State laws the court has power to order the property sold to pay any charge against the estate and to remove a representative should he fail to obey such an order of the court. The collector has access to the State court the same as any other party inter-ested in the administration of the estate. Then why compel the collector to interfere with the administration of an estate when such interference is bound to work hardship on the estate and an interference with and a supersedence of State laws and courts? The collector must bring suit in the Federal court. He is not permitted to apply for relief to the court in which the estate is being administered, but must seek relief in a Federal court. I trust that at least section 208 will be amended so as to make it possible for the collector to intervene in the State court having jurisdiction of the estate. You are demonstrating beyond any question of doubt your incompetency to administer the affairs of this great Government. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Callaway].

Mr. Callaway].

Mr. Chairman, I am not going to vote for this bill, but I am going to vote against it for wholly different reasons than any given by the Republicans. I am going to vote against it because I know there is no necessity for spending the money to be raised by this bill to increase the armaments of this country at this time. I am a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs. We had months of hearings a year ago from experts to enable us to determine the necessities for increases in the Navy, and I challenge any man to go through the 4,000 pages of hearings and, taking them as a whole, honestly say that any necessity for additional naval equipment to meet any emergency

Notwithstanding that, last year the appropriations amounted to $313,300,555 for the Navy, $262,596,530 for the Army, and $25,774,550 for fortifications. This does not include what was carried in the urgent deficiency bill, which ran the appropriations for military purposes up to $660,338,923, nearly three times as much as had ever before been spent in the history of this country; and this year they have been increased over last year to such an extent that the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, Mr. Kitchin, in presenting this bill says that if we would only confine ourselves to the expenditures that we made last year, which were nearly three times as much as ever before in the history of the country, we would not have to impose this tax. For that reason I am against this bill. Not only is the tax a burden on the people, and on the whole people talk about different people escaping the tax; it is always shifted down from the man up the ladder to the man at the bottom; he can not shift it [applause]; we are burdening the people and every industry with this additional tax to enlarge the Army and Navy; that is not necessary, and jeopardizes the very existence of the institutions that our fathers fought to establish. If we had to have this revenue this would be a better mode of taxation than the tariff. If we had to have the revenue it is about the best method of levying it we can find, and I want to congratulate the committee on their method. But I do not congratulate them on yielding to the pressure from the Appropriations Committees and bringing in this bill, and I do not congratulate them when they tell me that they were not in favor of the appropriations, that they know they ought not to be made; that they know if the Democrats had economized even in their preparedness bills this year it would not have to be made, but they can not help it, because the different committees have made the appropriations, or all prepared to make the appropriations, and we are necessarily bound to raise the fund. The Ways and Means Committee is a general committee selected from the whole country. They know what the needs are, and they know there is no need of these additional expenditures, but the Committees on Naval and Military Affairs are made up differently. These committees are self-constituted committees, coming from localities that are directly benefited by the appropriations for military purposes. Look at the Committee on Naval Affairs made up of men from the different localities con-Naval Affairs made up of men from the different localities containing navy yards, ordnance factories, and so forth, that are forced by the demands of their constituency to make every effort to raise the appropriations higher and higher and higher.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALLAWAY. You can look to the other committees—just in a moment—of this House. I analyzed the Committee on the committee of the committee o

Rivers and Harbors and showed how it was made up from places that had rivers and harbors they wanted to appropriate for, and the people from their respective districts pressing them for the highest appropriations; and then the Ways and Means Committee, calling itself logical, says that now, of course, "we know these appropriations were not and are not necessary, but these committees have made them, and when they have been made necessarily we are bound to raise the funds to meet them." If the Ways and Means Committee would say to these different committees, "If you make appropriations that you can not justify you can not get the money to carry them out "; and if you had iron down your backs and they knew you meant what you said they would not make such appropriations. What do you say to them? "Now, if you committees make appropriations and pledge the Congress and the country necessarily we will have to go on and raise the revenue." Tell them that your rear is open, attack you there, and drive you from your economic stand.

I now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TILSON. I know the gentleman wishes to be accurate, and I wish to challenge the gentleman's statement so far as the Committee on Military Affairs is concerned. So far as my own appointment on that committee is concerned I have no interests in my district that ever asked for any military appropriation whatsoever.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Oh, that is true. I do not come from a naval section either; but the majority of the committee you serve on do, and the majority of the committee I serve on do.

Mr. FIELDS. Has the gentleman considered what district and what sections of the country the Committee on Military Affairs comes from?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. FIELDS. Has the gentleman analyzed it?

Mr. CALLAWAY. I analyzed the different committees, because this is a thing I have argued in this House before. It is the truth. The Democratic Party, when it met at St. Louis last June, recognized the very thing that I have suggested here today, and in platform said:

We favor a return by the House of Representatives to its former practice of initiating and preparing all appropriation bills through a single committee chosen from its membership, in order that responsibility may be centered, expenditures standardized and made uniform, and waste and duplications in the public service avoided. We favor this as a practicable first step toward a budget system.

They saw the storm was rising then. As a gentleman on the Republican side said, we have had to deal four times with revenue bills made necessary by these awful expenditures that never occurred to us at the time we brought in the first revenue measure and could not have been foreseen, because there was no reason or foundation for them.

The St. Louis 1916 platform is the first platform of the Democratic Party since 1876 that did not pledge us to economy and denounce extravagance.

In 1876 we said in our platform:

We denounce the improvidence which in 11 years of peace has taken from the people in Federal taxes thirteen times the whole amount of legal-tender notes and squandered four times their sum in useless expense without accumulating any reserve for their redemption.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Give me five minutes more.

Mr. KITCHIN. I hate to give a Democrat who is going to vote against the bill any more time, but suppose I compromise with you and give you two minutes more?

Mr. CALLAWAY. I can not do anything with this awful proposition in two minutes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Then I will give you three minutes.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. CALLAWAY. What had been the expenditures of that year which we denounced in the Democratic platform? They were $338,128,199 for all departments of Government. the Army for that year they were $27,933,830, for fortifications they were $850,000, for the Navy they were $17,001,006.

In 1880 we congratulated the country upon the honesty and thrift of a Democratic Congress because it had reduced the total expenditures $40,000,000 a year.

In 1884 we said in our platform:

The Democracy pledges itself to purify the administration from corruption and to restore economy in the public expenses.

And that year the Republicans had spent on the Army $24 684,250, on fortifications $670,000, and on the Navy $15,894,434. Their total expenditures for that year for all purposes of Government was less than the naval appropriation bill carries for this year as it passes the House, and God knows where it will be when it comes back from the Senate. The total expenditures that year were $355,297,875 for every department of Government.

In 1896 we said in the Democratic platform:

We denounce the profligate waste of the money wrung from the people by oppressive taxation and the lavish appropriations of recent Re-publican Congresses, which have kept taxes high, while the labor that pays them is unemployed.

In that year-we spent $23,225,608 on the Army, $1,904,557 on fortifications, $29,416,245 on the Navy, and the entire expenditures for all departments of Government were $457,088,344 less than was expended last year on the Army and Navy alone.

In our platform of 1900 we said:

We denounce the lavish appropriations of recent Republican Congresses, which have kept taxes high and which threaten the perpetuation of the oppressive war levies.

And that year the Republicans spent $80,430,204 on the Army, $4,909,902 on fortifications, $48,099,969 on the Navy, and spent for all purposes and for every department of the Government $690,667,188, $200,000,000 less than will be appropriated this year for the Army and Navy alone.

In 1904 we denounced the profligate waste of the Republican Party and said in our platform:

Large reductions can easily be made in the annual expenditures of the Government without impairing the efficiency of any branch of the public service, and we shall insist upon the strictest economy and frugality compatible with vigorous and efficient civil, military, and naval administration as a right of the people too clear to be denied or withheld.

That year the Republicans spent $77,888,752 on the Army, $7,188,416 on fortifications, and $81,826,791 on the Navy and for all purposes and to take care of every department of Government the expenditures were $736,578,402, less than will be spent this year on the Army and Navy alone.

In 1908 we even went so far in our platform as to specify the enormous amounts of the people's money that the Republicans had wasted. We said:

The Republican Congress in the session just ended made appropriations amounting to $1,008,000,000, exceeding the total expenditures of the past fiscal year by $90,000,000.

The expenditures that year for the Army were $78,634,582, for fortifications $6,889,011, on the Navy $98,950,507, and the total expenditures, as named in the platform, were very little in excess of what will this year be appropriated for the Army and Navy and fortifications alone.

In 1912 we said:

We call the attention of the patriotic citizens of our country to the Democratic Party's record of efficiency, economy, and constructive legislation.

And it has passed the great supply bills, which lessen waste and extravagance, and which reduce the annual expenses of the Government by many millions of dollars.

That was the record the Democratic Party went before the country on in 1912 as an earnest of what they would do if they were elected. They were elected by an overwhelming and un-precedented vote. That year the Republican administration had spent $93,374,755 on the Army, $5,473,770 on fortifications, $126,478,338 on the Navy, and for all purposes of government $979,382,852, very little more than this Democratic administration will spend on the Army and Navy and fortifications this year, and I predict decidedly less than they will waste on the Army and Navy and fortifications in 1917.

The fortifications bill for last year as it passed the House carried $21,997,000. When it came back from the Senate and passed the House it carried $25,747,000. This year as it passed the House it carried two and one-half times as much as it did when it passed the House last year, or $51,396,593. If the Senate raises that in the same proportion as it did the fortifications hill a reason of the same proportion as it did the fortifications hill a reason of the same proportion as it did the fortifications hill a reason of the same proportion as it did the fortifications hill a reason of the same proportion as it did the fortifications hill a reason of the same proportion as it did the fortifications hill a reason of the same proportion as it did the fortifications hill a reason of the same proportion as it did the fortifications hill a reason of the same proportion as it did the fortifications hill a reason of the same proportion as it did the fortifications hill a reason of the same proportion as it did the same tions bill a year ago, it will carry over $63,000,000 when it comes

The naval bill has been reported from the committee, carrying $351,453,000. Last year as it was reported from the committee and went through the House on first passage it carried $241,-449,000. As it came back from the Senate and finally passed the House it carried $313,384,000. I predict that it will be increased in greater proportion this year by the Senate than it was a year ago. If so, when it comes back from the Senate and passes the House it will carry $475,000,000, and there is not a mortal son of Adam that can give a reasonable and sensible reason for the most of the expenditures in the naval bill this They are for battleships and battle cruisers that can not possibly be completed within less than three to four years, and no sane mortal who is honest can give a decent reason for an appropriation at this time for something that we can not get within less than three or four years.

Yet the Ways and Means Committee allows these military expenditures to be hoisted by the newspapers of this country and the clamor from the ammunition manufacturers to force them to bring in this revenue bill saddling additional burdens on the already bent backs of the American toiling masses.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FULLER].

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I have been much interested in listening to the gentleman who has just addressed the committee [Mr. Callaway] in his reading of extracts from Democratic platforms of former years, wherein the Republican Party was charged with extravagance in appropriations and the Democratic Party promised retrenchment and reform by reducing appropriations and administering the Government on an economical basis. I observe that the gentleman's colleagues on the other side of the House did not relish reference to those platform promises, in view of the fact that since they came into power appropriations have increased by hundreds of millions of dollars over any former years when the Republican Party was in control.

However, it is well to remember that Democratic platforms are always like the platforms of railway cars-made to get in on and not to stand on.

For instance, here is an extract from the latest national Democratic platform, the one adopted at St. Louis last year. It is as follows:

We reaffirm our belief in the doctrine of a tariff for the purpose of providing sufficient revenue for the operation of the Government, economically administered.

If that platform declaration meant anything, then in view of the fact that their tariff act of 1913, the Underwood Act, does not produce sufficient revenue for the operation of the Government; in view of the fact that customs revenues have decreased under that act more than a hundred million dollars a year, although imports have greatly increased; and in view of the fact that there is a constantly growing deficit in revenues of something like a million dollars a day, I want to ask our Democratic friends why they do not carry out their platform declaration and provide a tariff "sufficient for the operation of the Government" instead of still further burdening the people by new systems of direct taxation, as provided in this Can it be possible that they are afraid if the tariff question is opened up at all that there might be in the outcome some protection given to American industries, American labor, and American interests? Are they still of the opinion that American interests are entitled to no consideration, no protection, against competition from foreign interests that invade our markets and pay nothing for the support of this Government?

In my judgment it is high time that we should all agree that American interests should have adequate protection against foreign competition instead of being constantly penalized more and more, while foreign competitors go scot-free, so far as contributing anything to the support of this Government or for the privilege of entering our markets in direct competition with American industries.

I am for America-America first and America efficient.

Now, I am in favor of preparedness—preparedness for possible future wars, which I hope will never come. But I am much more in favor of immediate preparedness for peace, which certainly will come, and for the conditions, whatever they may be, which will certainly follow when the terrible war across the sea comes to an end, whether by peace with victory or peace without victory. The worst possible way to prepare for peace and the commercial war that is sure to follow is to further penalize American industries, as is proposed by this bill. These industries are already highly taxed; many of them are taxed almost to death in the localities where they exist. They are taxed for State purposes, for county, for city, for roads and bridges, for schools, and every other conceivable local purpose. Then an income tax of 1 per cent was put upon them by Congress for Federal purposes; then you proceeded to double that tax and made it 2 per cent; and then you taxed them again upon their capital stock, surplus, and undivided profits; and now you propose by this bill to hit them again; and if by any possibility propose by this bill to firt them again; and it by any possibility they are able to live and make any profit after paying all these taxes you propose to levy a further tax on such profits. I wonder if our Democratic friends ever stopped to think that ultimately all taxes are paid by the people, the workers who produce all wealth. Not directly, perhaps, but in some way or other corporations must get from the people, and do get from them all and everything they are compelled to new So, bow. them, all and everything they are compelled to pay. So, how-ever you may say that you exempt the great body of the people they are the ones who in the final analysis create all wealth and pay all bills. You have said and reiterated time and again in platforms, on this floor, and everywhere that the tariff was the direct cause of the high cost of living. You said you would reduce the high cost of living by repealing Republican tariff laws. You kept part of the promise. You repealed the Republican tariff law, and you substituted the Underwood law, but the cost of living kept on soaring, and after three and a half years of that law is now higher than ever before. You do not say anything now about the tariff being the cause of the high cost of living. That claim has been very emphatically disproved, and at tremendous cost to the people. I will tell you one reason for the high cost of living: It is the constantly increasing cost of government and the burdensome taxes levied on the people, and this bill, if it becomes a law, will inevitably still further increase the cost of living.

The corporations will pay, of course, and to get the money with which to pay they will levy toll on the people—the consumer of their products. The more taxes the manufacturers of food products, of clothing, or of any general necessity, the more they are compelled to pay, the higher will be the price of food, of clothing, of all necessities which they manufacture, which the people must have, and for which they must pay. I must be brief in the time I have. The only reason I can conceive for this method of taxation—a method never heard of before and never advocated by any political party in this country-is derived from the idea that corporations have no souls, and that you are hitting only a few and exempting the great body of the people from the payment of these taxes. But the people will not be deceived. They know they are the ones who must pay, if not directly, then indirectly; but none the less certainly they are the ones who must pay. For instance, you tax life insurance companies, mutual companies, as well as stock companies. Who suffers from the payment of such tax? Let me read a telegram which I have received from the president of one of these companies. He says:

Proposed emergency revenue measure is unjust and unfair to holders of life-insurance policies. Three pertinent fundamental facts apparently ignored: First, ever 70 per cent of life insurance is mutual; second, including participating business of stock companies, over 86 per cent of life-insurance policies are participating; third, the burden of all taxes on the income of life-insurance funds falls upon the policyholder. The average size of an ordinary life policy decreased from $2,580 in 1894 to $1,850 in 1915, showing that over 7,000,000 ordinary life policyholders upon whom tax would fall are providing only this modest sum for their beneficiaries. The 25,000,000 industrial policyholders would also be taxed on their average policies of only $134 each for their families. We believe this measure as it affects life insurance is wrong in principle, and if enacted into a law will place an unjust burden upon over 32,000,000 policyholders of the United States. We earnestly hope you will see your way clear to secure the exemption of life insurance from this measure.

This gives a fair statement of the number of people affected

This gives a fair statement of the number of people affected by the tax proposed on life insurance companies, but which in reality falls on the policyholders.

It is much the same with many other corporations, stock companies, and copartnerships. The stock, or interests, are largely held by people of very moderate means, who depend on the income derived therefrom for their living and the support of their families.

The wage earner, too, in all industries, will also suffer, for if the industry giving him employment can not make a reasonable profit, after payment of taxes and other expenses, then either wages must be reduced or the business must cease, causing either reduction of wages or loss of employment.

And how about the justice of levying this tax on copartnerships and not on individuals. Here, we will say, side by side are two establishments engaged in the same line of business. One is owned by two or more copartners, the other by one indi-The copartnership would be taxed under this bill and the individual doing precisely the same business, making precisely the same profit, is not taxed. What justification can there possibly be for such discrimination?

This entire measure, in my opinion, is wrong in principle, unjust in its discrimination, unfair to the business interests of the country, and has no other argument in its favor but the desperate need of money to make good that which has been lavishly and extravagantly appropriated by a Democratic Congress and to bring into the Treasury a part of what has been lost to the Government by the repeal of the Republican tariff act and the substitution therefor of the Underwood Democratic tariff law. If the Republican protective-tariff law had been in force until this time, and if importations had been no greater than they are now, there would have been no necessity whatever for this legislation. The remedy is apparent to anyone who will give the matter unprejudiced thought. That is to restore to the statute books a protective-tariff law, which will not only produce "sufficient revenue for the operation of the Government economically administered" but which at the same time will afford to the industries of the country that protection which they enjoyed under Republican administrations and which made this country the most prosperous of any country on earth.

I believe in the time-honored American doctrine of a protective tariff, and I believe in the doctrine announced in the last national Democratic platform-

A tariff for the purpose of providing sufficient revenue for the opera-

This is good American doctrine, and has been such from the days of our first President, the Father of our Country. may well, in these times, recall the wise advice of Washington, who advocated this doctrine and advised that this country at all times should put America and American interests first, expecting favors from no other country, treating all fairly, interfering not at all in their political entanglements, entering into no league with any, but in substance to "paddle our own canoe" and avoid entangling alliances with any other nation on earth, [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SAUNDERS). The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, while the measure before us is one to raise revenue and probably ought not, therefore, to be discussed as a partisan issue or from a partisan standpoint, yet on both sides of the Chamber it is emphasized that this bill does differentiate the two parties upon the matter of raising revenue, The policies are to be contested, because they differentiate one political party from the other. Facts undisputed may suggest one thing to one group and another thing to another group.

But I want to call the attention of my Democratic friends to what has taken place. The protective tariff was superseded on October 4, 1913, by the revenue-only tariff, the nearest approach to free trade; and when that was put on the statute books certain things were promised, not one of which has been fulfilled. One of the things promised was sufficient revenue to run the Government. And while Democratic Members have been saying that they object to a protective tariff, there is one thing that my Democratic friends must recognize: We never were compelled to issue bonds during a protective-tariff régime to get the money necessary to run the Government. The burdens on the consumer were never so heavy under a protective tariff as under free trade. [Applause on the Republican side.] And you have never held control of the Government that you did not have to issue bonds, not since the Civil War. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The protective system first stimulates American business, invests American capital, employs American labor at the standards of American living, and, in addition to that, it always collects enough revenue to run the Government and, even under the Payne law, we collected enough to build the Panama Canal, in addition to running the Government. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Our Democratic friends come in and say, "We will supersede it by a tariff measure to collect revenue," and gave the country the Underwood bill October 4, 1913. Just 11 months to the day after you put it on the statute books the President stood at this place and confessed its failure and asked us to pass an emergency bill, and called it "a war tax" at the very moment that he was boasting that we were at peace with all the world.

That was on September 4, 1914, and on October 22 of that year you put the infamous stamp tax upon the American people, calling it "a war tax," when it was a Democratic deficiency tax and ought to have been so named. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Then in December, one year later, you came again and voted to continue this tax for another year. That was the third move confessing the weakness of the Underwood bill. That was in December, 1915. Then you came in on the 8th of last September and made a fourth confession that your bill had broken down and asked us to pass an additional measure, and said, "We will increase the rate on incomes, and we will put certain classes of our citizens under special taxation." That was done at the behest of the President of the United States. The President appeared here in this place on the 7th of December, 1915, and said, "We will not issue bonds," and gave his reasons why we should not issue bonds. We Republicans had said that you would issue bonds, because that is Democratic. [Laughter on the Republican side.] You have never run the Government without doing that. The one time since the Civil War you had control you issued bonds—1895. You can not run the Government without borrowing money. You never have. [Applause on the Republican side.] You Democrats said you would not issue bonds. I have the speech of the President, December 7, 1915, in my hand. He said:

The obvious moral of the figures here is that it is the plain counsel of prudence to continue the present taxes under the present revenuestamp tax.

I for one do not believe that the people of this country approve of postponing the payment of their bills. Borrowing money is short-sighted finance.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield a moment just there?

Mr. FESS. In a moment. He continued:

It seems to me a clear dictate of prudent statesmanship and frank finance that in what we do we should undertake to pay as we go. The new bill should be paid by internal taxation,

This was the statement of the Democratic head, that we will not issue bonds because it is not good finance.

Mr. SLOAN. What was the date of that speech? The date of a presidential speech becomes a very important item in recent years. Mr. FESS. December 7, 1915, was when this speech was made, right here. Now, a year later a bill comes in here proposing to issue bonds to the amount of $600,000,000, long and short term bonds.

Mr. MADDEN. Six hundred and forty million dollars.

Mr. FESS. Six hundred and forty million dollars; $100,000,000 in addition to the Panama bonds, $300,000,000 shorttime bonds, certificates of indebtedness, with the understanding that while you fell short a year ago, another year you will fall short again, and we will be called upon to issue bonds to make up the deficit. So your short-term will be equivalent to

Will the gentleman put in at this moment the things that the President suggested should be taxed to raise that deficit?

I will.

Mr. MEEKER. And then what actually was taxed?

Mr. FESS. I will put that in. That is mighty good stuff. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] He said:

We will continue the tax on sugar.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

That is a confession that your Underwood bill broke down, because free sugar was by presidential decree the test of Democratic policy.

A tax of 1 cent per gallon on gasoline.

Mr. MADDEN. Did they do that?

Mr. FESS. No: they were cowards and would not do it. That is why they did not do it. [Applause on the Republican

A tax of 50 cents per horsepower on automobiles.

Mr. MADDEN. Did they dare to do that?

Mr. FESS. They did not dare to do that. Why did they not? There were many votes that they wanted. Why do they not put a tax upon agriculturists in this bill? Because they are cowards and they are afraid to do it. While I oppose this sort of legislation, if I favored it I would treat all alike. would not show favors to win votes.

The President continued a stamp tax on bank checks, which also was resisted from same reason.

Mr. HILLIARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. HILLIARD. We got the votes, did we not?

Mr. FESS. You won this election on a triple deception. You said the country was prosperous, due to your legislation, and any man who can think two thoughts in a row, knows there is nothing in that. Had it not been for the war in Europe it would have been quite a different story. You said, "We have kept you out of war," and you are asking in this bill for $162,-000,000 and the issuance of bonds to that amount now to take care of the Mexican war. This was the second deception.

The third was your pretended eight-hour-day law which has no eight-hour feature in it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. A majority of 100,000 in Ohio voted different from you, did they not? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FESS. Ohio was flooded with as much and similar bombast as the wicked, shameful surrender of the American Congress to the four brotherhoods, whose votes were asked in that election in 1916. That is why Ohio went wrong.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. FESS. I will yield to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. KITCHIN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio 2 minutes more to let him answer some of these questions.

Mr. FESS. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr.

Mr. LONDON. I will ask the gentleman whether it was under Republican rule that the majority of the American people were made so stupid that they believed the Democrats and could be fooled by Democrats?

Mr. FESS. I will say to my friend from New York that the Republicans are never responsible for Democrats. They do not undertake such a responsibility.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes; I will yield.
Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Does the gentleman mean to say that the people of Ohio are so unintelligent that they can be deceived by the bombastic arguments he has referred to?

Mr. FESS. The people of Ohio temporarily united and lined up with South Carolina. They will not do it later, mark my words. They will go with Illinois and Michigan and Pennsylvania and New York and New England, and not with South Carolina and Mississippi, sir.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Have not the people of Ohio by their votes said with whom they would line up, notwithstanding the expression of opinion of the gentleman from

Ohio? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FESS. There will be another vote that will be an intelligent vote, and you will see the result.

Mr. CROSSER. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. FESS. After the evaporation of the socialism and the single tax and the other isms and funny things that will pass away, Ohio will get back on her feet again.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. FESS. I yield to my friend from Arkansas. Mr. CARAWAY. When that intelligent vote is cast in Ohio does the gentleman expect to come back here? [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FESS. The gentleman from the seventh Ohio district got a greater majority than the total vote cast in the State of Arkansas. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, as to this bill, I am opposed to it. It is drafted upon the basis of punishing thrift. It penalizes efficient industry. Its author boldly declares that those who are in favor of national defense must be subject to this tax. But the bill does not discriminate in favor of those who do not favor it unless he lives in the Southland,

The bill, like most legislation of this administration, is framed as a net to catch votes, and is therefore discrimination in favor of one as against another class of our citizens. It includes the group of small capitalists or business men who go together as partners to carry on a business, but exempts the millionaire if he does not belong to a partnership or corporation, no matter how large his profits.

It exempts the agriculturist no matter how large the profits of the corporation or partnership to which he belongs. It exempts personal service no matter how large the profits of the corporation or partnership of a law firm which does personal service, nor the stock-brokerage firm which does personal service for customers.

From the argument of the proponents this preventive measure will have a disappointing result. "The power to tax is the power to destroy," said our greatest Chief Justice. We have used this power to destroy the State bank issuance of bills of credit. It is as effective as a repeal of the law.

We use the power "to tax" to destroy the evil of the liquor business. If we tax the successful enterprise because it is profitable, it will not be long until the profits will be lessened, if not destroyed.

They claim that this is fixing the burden upon the rich. Of course, no one seriously believes that. The burden laid upon business will be passed on to the customer of the firm; otherwise, business will not be run. It can not be carried on unless profit will recompense the risk.

The bill proposes to collect nearly $250,000,000 from this one source. I give it as my opinion it will not do it.

It also proposes to raise $22,000,000 from inheritance tax, and thus further rob the States of this source of revenue. The enormity of this measure is observed when we note there is provision for raising $910,000,000. This is the program of economy we have heard so much about. Four emergency measures to bolster up your Underwood bill, and that in three years.

If the Democrats would stop their wasteful extravagance and proceed to inaugurate a protective system which produces the pecessary revenue, the country would not face this situation:

necessity revenue, the country would not know the	· Cuttorous
Alaskan railway	$35,000,000

Public buildings	38, 000, 000
Rivers and harbors	38, 000, 000
Extra offices	40, 000, 000

These are but a few of the items of this orgy of expenditures. The Mexican fiasco will reach at least $200,000,000 in a short time. All these items are in addition to the regular annual appropriations. In the embarrassment of this irresponsible waste we are told it is all due to preparedness, and the already overburdened citizens must submit to extra direct tax of this sort.

Did we have a protective tariff which would make the foreigner seeking to sell in our markets pay toward the expenses of the Government, we would not see the enormity of $590,000,000 increase in imports in the 11 months of 1916 over the same period of 1913 and $100,000,000 less revenue collected.

This legislation is distinctly Democratic—first, supplying deficits by borrowing money and class legislation. The second mark is the character of the National Treasury, turning by bookkeeping a deficit into a balance without adding a dollar.

When the Democrats took hold of the Government the net balance in general fund was over $146,000,000. This did not include the $122,000,000 charged for other purposes.

The following facts taken from the daily statement of the Treasury Department will be illuminating:

Deficit.

To-day's statement carries a balance of $93,156,307. The outstanding charges against the Treasury are to credit of disbursing officers $75,594,526, and national bank and Federal reserve bank notes assumed by the United States $51,111,231, making a total charge of $126,695,757. This makes a deficit in the Treasury to-day of $33,539,450. Were this character of bookkeeping in vogue in April 15, 1913, the balance in the Treasury, instead of $146,000,000, as carried by daily statement, would be $248,779,105.

In other words, notwithstanding the three preceding relief measures to bolster up the Underwood bill, of which this is the fourth relief, the Treasury is to-day shy $155,303,085 of what it was when the Democrats took charge.

This fourth relief measure is but temporary. It is easy to borrow money by issuing bonds as herein proposed, and as every man knew would come with the Democratic Party in power, but it does not cure the evil. While we are concerned about the necessary revenue, we must not overlook the immediate future.

I now desire to speak upon the "Outlook for American business"

The one thing all must admit is that the present business situation must not be taken as a normal basis for the future. This abnormal condition is measured by the price current in all markets. Imperative demands in war-torn Europe, which has involved an indebtedness of over $50,000,000,000, or fifty times our own national debt, have been and are still reflected in our trade. The war situation enables this country to name its own price for war necessities. It has made possible an export trade which has given us a balance of near $2,000,000,000 in one year and has brought here the largest store of gold ever collected by one country.

At the close of the war Europe will be compelled to do two things: Reduce the debt and secure the needed gold supply to avoid a paper basis. These accomplishments can be reached in but one way, to wit, turn the balance of trade against us. This will be attempted by (1) ceasing to buy from us save such articles of imperative necessity, such as cotton, corn, and so forth, which must be had, and (2) selling the European product to us.

The war has stimulated production in both the entente and central powers as never before. Speaking on the President's peace proposal, Lloyd-George said, among other things:

There are many shortcomings in our business, our commerce, our industry. The war is settling them all right in the most marvelous way.

You ask a great business man like my friend Lord Pirrie what is going on in those great factories throughout Great Britain and Ireland. Old machinery is scrapped ["Hear, hear!"] the newest, the best, and the latest is set up; slipshod and wasteful methods are scrapped, and hampering customs discontinued. Millions are brought into the labor market to help to produce who were before purely consumers.

This corrects the erroneous opinion that Europe's industries are prostrate. Intense productive ability has been greatly stimulated in both belligerents by the fires of war, so that competing ability with this country is increased.

In England 4,000,000 men have been called to the colors. least 1,000,000 women have entered the industries to help fill places that the soldier vacated. These women are doing well their work at such wages as never before paid them. At the close of the war they will refuse to give up this work. It will compel a competition in the English labor market which will force the price to its lowest ebb. The goods produced by these laborers will enter the open market to meet the American pro-

In Germany there are at least 3,000,000 war prisoners at work in the industries at the price of prisoner's allowance-about 8 cents per day. There are being thus stored billions of dollars' worth of goods to be sold in the open market when the war is over. Europe, in need of funds to pay the annual interest charge on her war debt, which charge will be greater than the entire budget before the war, will easily command the world's markets against this country, and will easily turn the balance of trade in her favor, and thus secure back the gold lost in the war. This is America's problem that faces her. How do we propose to meet it? It can not be done by business heckling. While all Europe is favoring production, we here are constantly hindering it. Our legislation proceeds upon the basis that the business man must me watched in order to protect the country against him. Laws are enacted discriminating against him and in favor of exempted classes.

In 1913 Congress appropriated money to prosecute the business man, but exempted laborer and farmer from prosecution for the same offense. Then, later, the same discrimination was written into law in the Clayton bill. Then, still later, the same exemption was written in the income-tax law. And now we propose to jam through the House the fourth emergency-revenue law, to raise $910,000,000, a portion of which is to be fixed upon a class of citizens and expressly exempting specified classes.

This cycle of thinking which surrounds all business success with the air of suspicion and which leads our legislators to penalize the man who succeeds and exempts others is un-American and must in time ripen into the inevitable fruits of national distress. It is such cycle that makes possible such shameful performance and national humiliation as the country underwent, and is still undergoing, when its National Congress joined the President in a complete surrender to four leaders of four brotherhoods in enacting a law that all parties now concerned are straining every nerve to undo, or at least to modify.

Mr. Chairman, if we do not voluntarily change our attitude toward personal initiative and achievement, to cease penalizing those who organize to compete with the world in its production, we will do it later when our country's labor and capital shall be prostrated. The immediate guaranty against this legislative mania is the education of a proper public spirit toward enter-

I am not a business man and am not prejudiced against or for them, but I know that you can not injure the producer without injuring the consumer.

Such measures as these, openly claimed as punitive by its author, to punish the enterprising citizen because the country demanded a state of national defense, when by cutting off wicked and wasteful extravagance the necessity would not appear, is but a comment upon the character of the administration now in power.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cooper].

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks that I made this morning in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman already has that privilege. Mr. GARDNER. I also ask unanimous consent to further extend my remarks by printing some data relative to the halibut fisheries of the Pacific.

Mr. HOWARD. Reserving the right to object, I should like to know which speech the gentleman made that he refers to?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that all Members who have spoken have a right to extend their remarks in the Record, but the gentleman from Massachusetts makes a further request to extend his remarks on a special subject.

Mr. HOWARD. I understood this was some extraneous

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection. Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. C

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cooper].

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote against this bill because I am opposed to the method of direct taxation in it. I shall vote with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] to recommit the bill with a provision attached to it to provide for raising the revenue by a protective tariff. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I am for a protective tariff, not only from the standpoint of raising revenue but from the standpoint of the protection of the American workingman and American industries. My good, genial, and timid friend from Ohio [Mr. Gordon] made a statement on the floor this afternoon that if you pass a protectivetariff bill it increases the burden of taxation on the workingmen of this country. I would like to ask my friend this question: Was the workingman of this country ever burdened with taxes under a protective-tariff system like they are under this present free-trade Democratic administration?

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. No; I can not yield; I have only five minutes. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] I have heard a great deal to-day about the burden of taxation being placed on industry and not on the workingman. Let me say that you can not tax the industry unless you also tax the men that work in that industry. You are trying to fool the workingmen like you tried to fool them last fall. What did you do to them last fall? You told them you stood for an eight-hour day. Then the President of the United States said that the eight-hour day was not a question to arbitrate. What did you do? You brought in the lemon of the Adamson bill and passed it and led the workingmen to believe that you stood for an eight-hour day. Why do met to believe that yet sood and the sood of the not you carry out your promises?

Mr. CROSSER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Not now. Why do not you carry out your promises to the workingmen of this country? Why do not you pass an eight-hour a day law; you have the votes. No; instead of that, what are you doing? President Wilson, who stood on that platform, solicited the workingmen's vote, claiming he was their friend, is now trying to force through this Congress a compulsory system of arbitration which will involve the workingmen of this country in involuntary servitude. [Applause on the Republican side.]

This is the reward that the working people of this country are getting for the support that they gave to President Wilson and the Democratic Party last fall. Oh, but you say, we must have the Democratic Party last Ian. On, but you say, we must have the taxes because we want preparedness. We have had an example of the Democratic inefficiency of preparedness. What have we done? We have spent $180,000,000 to mobilize the Army, marched them down into Mexico, with the orders from President Wilson to get Villa, "dead or alive," this bandit who has ravished and murdered American women and children. [Applause on the Republican side.] Under this present administration the Stars and Stripes have been insulted, been spit upon, tied to the tail of a donkey, and dragged through a foreign street. There was a time when the old flag would have protected an American citizen on American soil, but it will not do it under this Democratic administration. [Applause on the Republican side.1

A number of years ago a young Englishman was arrested for a political offense in Cuba. He was tried by a Spanish court-martial and sentenced to be shot. He appealed to the American consul and the English consul to try to save his life. But the Spanish Government would not listen to the appeal; he was walked out at daylight, stood up against the wall, the officer of the firing squad came out and said, "Get ready, take aim." At that moment the American consul ran out, wrapped the Stars and Stripes around the man, and said, "Shoot, if you dare." Did they shoot? No. Their fingers became paralyzed and the guns dropped, and the old Stars and Stripes saved the life of a British subject.

But what a difference now. Only a short time ago, when a number of American citizens were fleeing for their lives to the British embassy in Mexico, one brave American woman, the mother of children, who still had faith in the old American flag, stood on the balcony, and, tearing down the flag, wrapped it around her, and said to the Mexicans, "Now, shoot if you dare!" Did they shoot? Crack went the rifles, and the bullets pierced the Old Flag, and that brave American woman fell dead, the old Stars and Stripes soaking up her life's blood. We sent our soldiers down into Mexico to avenge the death of that woman, and avenge the death of the soldiers at Carrizal, and now we witness the disgraceful spectacle of their marching out of Mexico again, with dead or alive Villa following after them, and yet you say you want this money for preparedness. In conclusion, let me say that the great question before the American people to-day is not the high cost of living; it is not the Adamson bill; it is not preparedness. The great question before the American people to-day is this, Will the United States Government protect its industries and its workers after the European war is over from foreign competition? There is only one way that you can do this, and that is to rewrite once more and place upon the statute books the protective tariff policy of William McKinley. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING].

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I think it is only right that a statement should be made concerning the record made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cooper] who has just addressed the House. He referred to the Adamson eight-hour bill as "the lemon" with which the Democratic Party sought to deceive the workingmen of this country. The records of this House will show that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cooper], having secured a copy of the so-called Adamson eight-hour bill, having received it in confidence, proceeded to introduce it as his bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?
Mr. KEATING. I can not yield now.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield now.
Mr. KEATING. The RECORD will show that when the roll was called on the passage of the bill the gentleman from Ohio voted for it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

What is more, the records of the last campaign will show that every man authorized to speak for the great railroad brotherhoods of the country, and the gentleman is a member of one of those brotherhoods, and he knows that I speak the truth when I say this—every authorized leader of the great railroad brotherhoods in this country indorsed the Adamson eight-hour bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The time of the gentleman from Colorado The CHAIRMAN.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman yield to me for two minutes at this time?

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, just let the gentleman from Pennsylvania get through.

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, let him have it. Mr. FORDNEY. I wanted to let the gentleman from Ohio answer the gentleman from Colorado, if the gentleman will be courteous enough.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman can do that after the gentleman from Pennsylvania is through.

Mr. FORDNEY. Very well.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, while I shall vote for this bill, let me say first of all that I do so with a protest, not against its method, but against the occasion which has made it necesan occasion brought about by a monstrous extravagance into which the country has been plunged by a militarist propaganda as wicked, as indefensible, and as indifferent to our free institutions as an open revolt against them could possibly be.

The title of the bill before us is perhaps its chief merit. There is poetic justice in its provisions. It places the burden where it belongs. It calls upon those who have joined in this death dance of imperialism to pay the fiddler. It invites the propagandists of fear and force to walk up to the captain's counter and pay the score for their stupendous folly. And by so much it is a measure which challenges admiration, while compelling a tribute of adverse oratory from the champions of privi-lege on the Republican side that is more sincere than any words of praise could be.

But in the title of the bill its purpose is honestly revealed. It is "to provide increased revenue to defray the expenses of !

the increased appropriations for the Army and Navy and the extensions of fortifications." There is the whole story. The bill is framed for no other purpose. It is not to meet the ordinary expenses of government. These have been amply provided for in the Underwood tariff and in the income-tax legislation, for which the Democratic Party can justly claim the The staggering demands upon the Treasury which this bill is designed to meet come not from governmental activities which make for the comfort, the happiness, and the prosperity of our people, but from that hateful source which vaunts the strong arm, which decries reason and justice, which ignores the teachings of Jesus Christ, which puts its trust in the sword, and which despises democracy and all for which democracy stands.

It is frankly regretted by me that it has been deemed expedient if not absolutely necessary that the invitation this bill gives to the militarists to go the limit in their profligate and indefensible appropriations for Army and Navy has been extended. My thought has been that the leadership on this side should have taxed their every resource in the effort to restrain the profligacy which we here and now in effect condone. But I am not unaware of the tactical reasons which have constrained the apparent surrender. For I know and you know and the country ought to know that if this apparent surrender had not been made an infinitely worse situation might and, indeed, would have developed, a situation for which our Republican friends so ardently long, and which would be so very welcome to the powerful interests which would saddle the crushing burden of militarism on the necessities of the toiling millions instead of letting any part of it rest upon themselves.

It is hardly necessary for me to repeat protests voiced so many times by me on this floor against these monstrous appropriations for war purposes in a time of peace. But I do so once more because I wish in an especial manner in connection with my protest to draw attention to the vital fact that in making them we are doing more to defeat the peace movement to which President Wilson has been devoting his great influence than his worst enemy could wish. For how shall the peoples of other countries be brought to believe in the sincerity of his purpose as set forth in his epoch-making peace speech when they read in immediate connection therewith the story of what the American Congress is doing in building up the greatest fighting machine that it ever entered into the mind of man to create?

I protest against this amazing folly for this reason. I protest against it because I am a friend of peace, because I sympathize with war-torn Europe, because I hate war with a consuming hatred, because I love democracy and fear that militarism which is democracy's inveterate enemy, and because I desire with my whole heart and my whole strength that President Wilson shall crown his great career with the premotion of a peace without victory which shall endure.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cooper].

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, it was not my intention to say anything further on this bill this afternoon, but I want to emphatically deny the statement that the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Keating] made on this floor a few moments ago. I say it is an absolute falsehood when he says that I procured a copy of the Adamson bill and tried to introduce it into this House under my own name, and I challenge him in the presence of this body of men to stand up here and give proof for his statement that he made a few moments ago. It is true that I did stand on this floor during the consideration of the Adamson bill, and I spoke for 10 minutes, but my whole talk was in defense and in behalf of the railroad men of this country, with whom I was associated for 20 years, and not one word did I say in favor of the Adamson bill.

Mr. GORDON and others. You voted for it, did you not?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I repeat again, that the statement that the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] made here a few moments ago is a falsehood.

Mr. FLOOD. How did you vote? Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR].

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Keating].
Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, in justice to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Coopes]—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado is recognized for one minute.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, when I made the statement a few minutes ago concerning the gentleman's introduction of the eight-hour bill I did so in good faith, relying upon my memory. I have just gone to the Congressional Record and verified the truth of what the gentleman has just said. came back to the floor so as to make this statement-and I think it should be made right here—that the statement concerning the gentleman introducing an eight-hour bill was a mistake on my part, which I wish to withdraw and apologize to the gentleman for having made it. [Applause.] Now, just a moment. But, so far as the remainder of my statement is concerned, that he spoke for the bill, that he voted for the bill, that the leaders of the great railway brotherhoods supported the bill at all times and approved it, that statement stands without modification, and the Record in that particular will speak for itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, if the Republicans in the last campaign had handled the real question before the American people as our Representatives did so forcefully and instructively yesterday and to-day, there would not have been any question about a different result. [Applause on the Republican The American people ought to have discovered the fact that direct methods of taxation made necessary by a tariff for revenue, free-trade tariff law, are not only the most cumberous, the most expensive but the most disastrous to the country. But we on this side failed to meet the real issue, did not go out into the highways and byways and instruct people along this line of thought, and the result is that we gave the Presidency to Mr. Wilson, not only on a silver platter but on a golden platter.

Mr. FERRIS. Is it not true that the gentleman's nominee of the Republican Party went to almost every nook and corner in this country with his speeches, and is it not also true that the President of the United States [Mr. Wilson] remained dignifiedly at home?

Mr. FARR. Oh, no; Mr. Wilson did not remain dignifiedly at home.

Mr. FERRIS. He did.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I refuse to yield further to the gentleman who is taking up my time. I desire to be courteous, but I want him also to be.

Mr. FERRIS. All right; go ahead.
Mr. FARR. Mr. Hughes, it is true, went all over this country and delivered strong, forceful speeches and presented many, many good thoughts to the American people, but the real issue, the matter of protection to American industries, he failed to present in that vigorous, enlightening way that he could have done. [Applause on the Republican side.]

We look over this great country and see the wonderful development industrially and realize that as a result of the Republican idea of a tariff it has become the greatest manufacturing country in the world. That in itself tells the story. Now, following the enactment of the Underwood bill, its injury to our industries and its failure to provide sufficient revenues, there began a career of high financing, of frenzied financing, on the part of the Democratic Party to raise money by direct taxation. When the American people take out their pads and pencils they will be simply appalled to find that in the four years of Democratic administration nearly $1,000,000,000 in direct taxes have been heaped upon the American people, as much as two years of the Civil War cost.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield:
Mr. FARR. I will.
Mr. MADDEN. This bill provides for raising $910,000,000.
Mr. FARR. Yes; additionally to the billion I mentioned.
The Democratic Party was responsible for the increase in freight rates in 1914.

Mr. GORDON. How is the Democratic Party responsible? Mr. FARR. I have not yielded to the gentleman, and I will ask the Chair

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will please not interrupt the gentleman who has the floor without his permission.

Mr. FARR. Under administrative pressure there was wrung from the Interstate Commerce Commission, against its judgment, an increase in freight rates for the western roads and a general increase in passenger rates all over the country that will total from three to five hundred million dollars during President Wilson's first administration. This is practically a direct tax upon the people. Additionally, there was enacted an emergency war tax that in three years will produce about $200,000,000 more, and an income tax, which we did not get the benefit of under the Payne-Aldrich tariff law, bringing about $210,000,000 more. Again, there was a revenue bill of last September which will yield about $200,000,000, and I am not sure whether I am right or not in saying that bonds were issued for the cost of the Mexican trouble.

Mr. GORDON. No; the gentleman is wrong.

Mr. FARR. I understand that cost is provided for in this

You will find by totaling these different amounts that for the four years of the present administration about $1,000,000,000 in direct taxation has been placed upon the people, and that in this bill you are adding $910,000,000 more, meaning $20 for each man, woman, and child in the United States in addition to their present tax burdens to be added to the high cost of living. And the great bulk of these taxes will be continuous.

Now, the gentlemen laugh, but that is true. Let them disprove my statement.

Mr. GORDON. This bill only reaches $200,000,000, man.

Mr. FARR. Nine hundred and ten million dollars in the issue of bonds, note certificates, and new and additional taxation, as follows: Bonds, $340,000,000; note certificates, $300,000,000; new taxation; $248,000,000; increased inheritance tax, $22,000,000. Total, $910,000,000.

I was very much interested in the eloquent talk of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Kelley]. He gave us a graphic verbal object lesson that should make the party in power stop, look, and listen, and ought to have been an incentive to that party to enact legislation along tariff lines to provide the money so badly needed and at the same time protect this country against cheap foreign-made goods at the close of the war.

I voted for the revenue bill last September. I voted for it for one reason, because it contained a provision for a tariff commission. I believed that the Democratic Party earnestly, sincerely intended to increase tariff rates for necessary revenue to meet their vast expenditures, and with this would go incidental protection to our industries. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hamilton] to-day quoted Barnum as saying that the American people can be fooled. I was fooled by that provision in that

Now, I think the Democratic Party has missed an opportunity to show its good faith to the American people by not utilizing the Tariff Commission to point out the many features in the Underwood law, so favorable to foreign-made goods and menacing to American industries.

Now, supplementary to the talk of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Kelley] as to our industrial unpreparedness in this country, the greatest Europe is in the making that ever faced civilization. With 15 nations at war the importations from foreign countries have been the largest in our history

England, battling for its life, sold us many millions of dollars more of goods last year than it ever sold us before. France sold us more goods last year than it ever before sold us. sold us more goods. Italy sold us more goods; so did Canada. When these nations are at peace and the millions of men are back in civil activities, their needs will be great and productive power tremendous. Under the present tariff law we can not prevent their goods from invading our markets and displacing our wage earners; the billions of war orders will have ceased, and millions of our men will be out of work. We should be prepared for that competition by laws that will safeguard and foster our own industries, but we are not.

I believe, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] stated yesterday, that under the provisions of the Payne bill we would have realized from five hundred million to six hundred million dollars more than we have under the Underwood bill. On wool and woolens alone up to July 31 last year we lost $142,000,000 in revenues. Wool is higher, clothing is higher, and in the reduction of the tariff on sugar we have lost, up to date, $50,000,000 in revenues, and sugar is higher. In addition to the injury the lowering of the tariff on sugar caused to the beet-sugar industries in the West and the cane-sugar industry in Louisiana, there has been a great loss of revenue to the American people, which you are now making up by direct taxation; and sugar is higher and wool is higher, and the opportunities remain for the foreign invasion that will result in the greatest disaster, commercially and industrially, in the history of this country.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield at that point? If taking the tariff off of sugar and wool has made them higher, how do you figure that it hurts the American industry?

Mr. FARR. Because you destroy for the time being the canesugar industry in Louisiana. The cane-sugar industry, I am informed by a Louisiana Representative, is only 50 per cent of its efficiency before the reduction of the tariff on sugar

Mr. GORDON. If it made the price higher, how did it hurt them? Answer that, will you?

Mr. FARR. It destroyed the industry. They are not making

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Howard].

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have heard everything discussed since yesterday in connection with this bill, from the free and unlimited coinage of pig iron to the reincarnation of the soul. [Laughter.] I am very much amused at the chameleonlike rapidity with which some of you gentlemen on that side have changed. I was particularly amused at my good friend from Ohio [Mr. Cooper].

I could not help but think of November, or probably the latter part of October. When Mr. Hughes was over in Ohio he went into the gentleman's district. He denounced the Adamson bill and the Democratic administration and everything connected with it. And before the dust had settled behind the automobile that took Mr. Hughes away from that particular point where he had spoken in the gentleman's district, the gentleman took the same platform, the same spot Mr. Hughes had occupied, and he denounced the Republican candidate for President of the United States and declared himself standing with President Wilson and his policy, and he was reelected. Now, I dare him to deny it, and I will give him my time.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman— Mr. HOWARD. Did not you do that? Did not you denounce your candidate for President of the United States for his opposition to the eight-hour bill?

Mr. EMERSON. No; he did not. Mr. COOPER of Ohio. On the contrary, I will say to the gentleman that I made speeches, not only in Ohio but in other States of the Union, advocating the election of Charles E. Hughes for President. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HOWARD. That is the redefeated so overwhelmingly in Ohio. That is the reason probably why he was

Mr. STAFFORD. Another fake charge without any basis!

[Laughter.]

Mr. HOWARD. My heavens, if I had to account to my Maker for as many fake charges as you have made I certainly would not make such an assertion. I can not help but think about a little bird that we have down in our section of the country that we call the "calico sapsucker." [Laughter.] He will light on a tree, and then he will hit it with his beak several times, and then he will run around on the opposite side of the tree and look, and I have often wondered what he was looking on the other side of it for; and finally an old negro told me that the sapsucker thought every time he pecked the tree he knocked a hole slap through it. [Laughter.] And the speech of my beloved friend from Ohio [Mr. FESS] and also the speech of my distinguished and able friend from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] remind me very much of that little bird. [Renewed

Mr. Chairman, I am for this bill, and I will tell you why I am for it. First, when I was a boy on the farm I always loved to plow a fat mule. I never did like to plow a poor mule. Now, all you Republicans like to plow a lean mule. You do not like fat mules. You abhor using that which is best suited at your hands. You want to saddle this tax on the poor folks, That is what you want to do by a protective tariff instead of this just tax levied on those most able to bear it after allowing liberal allowances in way of exemptions.

Another thing is, I have been taught that it was an honorable thing when I gave a check on my bank to see to it that that check was honored, even if it took the last penny I possessed on earth to pay it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] gentlemen last year gave a check upon the Treasury of your country to pay for this preparedness that you voted for, and now you come up and say to the banker, "Dishonor that check; I repudiate it." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Then, what do you offer? Why, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner] offers a unique remedy. He offers a force bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to

for five minutes more.

Mr. HOWARD. And it is a godsend to the tranquility of this country and the brotherly affection that exists between all sections of the country that there have been but few men in this Union that had the temerity to even suggest such a thing as a force bill on the people of the South, and I thank God that that sentiment has been confined to one small area in this country, and by but few even there.

You talk about representation. Why, I can take a lady's pocket handkerchief and almost cover the area of five little States up there in your section of the country. Let us see what they are. Delaware, with 202,000 population, has got two Senators; Rhode Island, with 542,000, has got two Senators; New Hampshire, with 430,000, has got two Senators; Vermont, with 355,000, has got two Senators; and Maine, with 742,000, has got two Senators. All together they make a total of 2,273,000 people, with five times the representation of the Empire State of the South, Georgia, that has got 2,609,000 popula-tion. There is a little handful of people in the New England and North Atlantic States that have got five times the representation that the people of Georgia have got, while our population equals all of them put together. [Applause on the Demo-

I want to say to the gentleman now that he can talk all he wants to about the negro. The negro in the State of Georgia is not disfranchised.

Mr. GARDNER. Does he vote?

Mr. HOWARD. I will not yield now. I have got only five minutes, and I want to put this in the RECORD. Years ago, when the people of this country were excited, at a time when reason had not resumed its sway, you attempted to put on our necks the heel of the black man, but shortly a freedman, the people of the South said then that with the help of God we would repudiate that action. We have repudiated it, and the thinking, unbiased, unprejudiced people from one end of this Nation to the other have repudiated the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that it is true we have borne the burden and worn the yoke of caring for the colored race in this country. To-day there are over eight and one-half million of them in our section; but in the five States that I have just mentioned, the five North Atlantic States, the foreignborn population, according to the census of 1910, exclusive of Massachusetts, was 1,825,110.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.
Mr. GARDNER. The people there who are not A. P. A.'s are very proud of them.

Mr. HOWARD. Oh, well, a native-born negro is just about as good as some of these anarchists that come over from foreign countries. I am talking about citizenship. Why, Mr. Lincoln had figured out to the last penny what it would cost to transport every negro in the Southern States to Central America, and he figured that it would cost $88.54 a head to deport them to the South American countries. Ah, gentlemen, when you get up here and talk about cutting down the representation of the South, and say that the South is in the saddle, and all that rot, you are trying to prejudice people in the Northern States against the people of the South. The people of this country accepted graciously the services rendered the country by those from the South in this body. They showed their appreciation by reelecting Woodrow Wilson and giving us majorities in both Houses of Congress.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman from Michigan give me two or three minutes?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, we are going to reduce the representation of the South-because we will have the Democratic Party of the North helping us and demanding of us to do it-unless you let your labor vote. You have disfranchised your unorganized labor in the South, and in the North the Democratic Party depends on labor. The Democratic Party

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. GARDNER. Just wait a moment, Keep your patience. I will yield in a moment. The Democratic Party in the North depends on labor. In New England the votes of the Democratic Party came from the Irish, and in the last campaign its finances came largely from the international bankers in New York. Now, you want the votes of those Irish round about election time. What do you do with the Irish Members of Congress when you get them? Why, there is just one of them whom you have recognized, John J. Fitzgerald. You made him chairman of the Committee on Appropriations because you could not help yourselves, because he was the smartest man on your side, and very likely in the whole House. [Applause.]
Mr. HOWARD. Is the gentleman really serious? Do you think that you will ever reduce the representation of the South? Mr. GARDNER. Seriously, sooner or later, as sure as the sun is to rise, the American people will not have unequal representation. You have either got to let your negroes vote, because in the South the negro vote is the labor vote-the unorganized labor vote—that is why you voted against the child-labor bill.

Mr. HOWARD. I voted for the child-labor bill.

Mr. GARDNER. It is because you have disfranchised labor in your part of the country, and that is where you are going to break down.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia one

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman from Massachusetts would Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman from Massachusetts would not yield when his time had not expired. I just want to say this to the gentleman, and I want to say it on the floor of the American House of Representatives: If you are serious, and you believe what you say—if the American Congress ever passes a force bill reducing the representation of the people of the South in the House of their fathers, it will bring about a situation that will be most deplorable in all sections of this country. I predict with absolute confidence that it will never be seriously at-

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER].

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, I can not say that I am for Ohio, Mr. Gomon, that the guiding wisdom to lead this body in its deliberation on the pending bill flows from only one fountain, that sparkling stream which gushes forth from the healthful pineries of the great State of North Carolina. Unlike the gentleman from Rhode Island, I have not yet learned of any mass meeting being held among the people of my district for the purpose of sending petitions to this body to vote upon their industries the discriminatory tax carried in the pending bill.

But I can assure the gentleman that they will patriotically respond with their share of these discriminating burdens, although the incomes from which it will be taken are produced in the main by the labor of the pig-iron furnaces, coal mines, and the railways of my district.

Neither can I agree with my colleague from the great State of Pennsylvania that the foreigner never pays the protective-tariff tax. On the other hand, I believe that in many instances protective-tariff taxes are paid by the foreigner, and I think every business man in this body will bear testimony that when protective-tariff duties are reduced, frequently, on many occasions, the reduced duties are pocketed entirely by the importer.

I for one firmly believe in the doctrine of protecting American Industries and American labor by levying a duty on imports can industries and American labor by levying a duty on imports sufficiently large for that purpose, the cardinal principle of the Republican Party. I want to say, with all deference to some of my colleagues on this side of the House, that no sop in a Democratic revenue bill in the shape of piecemeal protection or a Democratic revenue bill in the snape of piecemeal protection or a half-baked dumping proposition, or a provision to create a tariff commission to prevent the raising of tariff duties sufficiently high to adequately protect American industry, has never yet caught my vote. The fundamental principle of the Democratic Party as far back as I can recollect has always been an industry depend for the collection of tariff duties will defent to insistent demand for the collection of tariff duties sufficient to defray the operating expenses of the Government economically administered.

As the taxing power authorized in the pending bill violates both the Republican protective policy and the Democratic tariff for revenue principle I can see no reason why it should have the support of any Republican or Democrat.

But the Democratic majority of this House, goaded onward by the pressing necessity of raising additional revenue to de-fray the operating expenses of the Government, which seem to be mounting skyward year by year, have thrown to the winds their time-honored guiding principle for the raising of taxes and have come out flat-footedly for a discriminatory direct-taxation

True, the bill carries a provision to the effect that the receipts collected under title 2 and one-third of the receipts collected under title 3 of the proposed measure, shall constitute a separate fund in the Treasury Department from which shall be paid all expenditures on account of acts heretofore passed and hereafter passed appropriating money for national preparedness and that such fund shall hereafter be annually credited with the receipts from the sources heretofore referred to estimated at $175,000,000.

But when we read the short and simple proviso at the end of this requirement, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to use such funds for other purposes, and in the light of the statement of the gentleman from North Carolina in charge of the bill that money from this fund must necessarily be used for other purposes, and presumably for the purpose of paying operating expenses of the Government, it is clearly observable that the page and a half devoted to the creation and description of this imaginary and bookkeeping fund is pure, unadulterated, political bunk. A childish performance emanating from the elusive and delusive minds of the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee. The proviso states that when there has been a subtraction from the fund on account of some abstraction made by the Secretary of the Treasury that the fund shall be reimbursed, but there is no direction or provision for raising the money for making such reimbursement. So far as we now know, it will likely be done by again increasing the inheritance tax 50 per cent and adding another 8 per cent on the so-called excess profits of corporations and copartnerships. As the bill provides for the selling of Panama Canal bonds and the authorization and selling of other bonds and the issuing of certificates of indebtedness, in all, to the amount of $640,000,000, ample provision is therefore made for taking care of the increased expenditures on account of preparedness by borrowing, and, judging by the past,

I have no doubt but that the full limit of authority to borrow, and more will be resorted to before the convening of the Sixty-

fifth Congress

When the last semiannual exigency revenue bill was under consideration by the House in July, 1915, I took occasion to state that our Democratic friends in my opinion had exhausted the list of known sources usually resorted to for the purpose of raising taxes. The introduction of the pending semiannual revenue bill further confirms that opinion. It brings to light no new subjects of taxation. This bill simply provides a 50 per cent increase of the existing inheritance taxes and an additional income tax on the incomes of corporations and partner-ships over and above a stated $5,000 exemption plus 8 per cent of the invested capital of the corporation or partnership. This additional burdened income is denominated by the bill as "excess profits." By national statute we arbitrarily provide that By national statute we arbitrarily provide that all incomes of corporations and partnerships exceeding $5,000 and 8 per cent of the paid-in capital are excessive profits-so excessive and exorbitant as even to shock the conscience of a Democratic Congress, and by a legislative decree they are con-demned to the use of the general welfare to be appropriated and used in whole or in part as may best suit the whim and caprice of the Congress. I have been informed that some years ago President Castro of Venezuela, desiring to obtain possession of certain asphalt lands and property then operated by an American company under some concession theretofore granted by that Republic, issued a proclamation of sequestration and under this simple device he took over the much coveted property in the twinkling of an eye, without expense and with the expenditure of but little effort.

Now, we have the spectacle of a Democratic Congress aping the performance of President Castro, and in response to an echo from the Spanish Main proposing by legislative act to sequestrate all the income of corporations and partnerships in excess of $5,000 and a certain per cent of paid-in capital by outlawing such gains as "excessive profits" and making them the lawful prey of a starved and famishing Democratic administration. I suppose that the arbitrary judgment of the majority of the Ways and Means Committee as to what constitutes excessive profits is based solely upon the needs of the Democratic administration for additional revenue.

I will not vote for any revenue bill carrying permanent rates of direct taxation until there has first been levied upon imports sufficient duties to adequately protect American industries and thereby protect American labor in conformity to the well-known Republican policy of protection. I shall therefore cast my vote against the pending bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]
Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK]

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I think it is quite clear to any Member of the House that some additional taxation is neces sary to meet the imperative needs of the Government at this time, and I am going to vote for this bill because I believe that it is a just bill, an equitable bill, and places the tax burden where it ought to rest. It is always impossible to frame a tax measure that satisfies everybody, and the pending bill will not do that, but I do not believe that any just criticism can be lodged against it. I do not suppose that there has ever been a legislative body in the world where there was a greater display of inconsistency manifested by some of its members than our Republican friends have displayed in their actual voting upon the appropriation bills which have passed through this House and their subsequent mock heroics for economy. In the debate which has been had on this bill they have declaimed loudly concerning extravagant expenditures under the Democratic administration, and yet it is an indisputable fact that an analysis of the votes of this House will show that they have supported the majority of the appropriation bills that have been passed during this administration, and in many cases the records will show that they have tried to load the bills down with additional amounts. In fact, only a few days ago a prominent Republican Member, in the course of the debate on the public-buildings bill, said that one of his policies was to vote for every appropriation bill that came before the House and to vote against all measures to raise revenue. ment is typical of the attitude of the Republican Party as it is represented in the Congress of the United States to-day. A year ago when we passed the bill reorganizing the standing Army and providing for a federated State militia and when we passed the naval bill, which authorized and appropriated for the greatest naval-construction program in the history of the country, and one which will tax to their limit our naval-construction for several years to come, the Republican Members of the House moved to recommit these bills to their respective committees with instructions to adopt amendments which would have added greatly to their aggregate amount of expenditure.

Æsop in his Book of Fables tells us of a groom that used to spend whole days in currycombing and rubbing down his horse, but at the same time stole his feed. "Alas," said the horse, "if you really wish to see me in good condition, you should groom me less and feed me more." [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] If our Republican colleagues really want to see the Treasury of the United States in that good condition which they so often profess, they should feed it more with their votes and groom it less with their idle talk. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Go put your creed into your deed Nor speak with double tongues.

Witness a few examples of their so-called economy as reflected in some of the votes which have been taken on bills in the present session of Congress. When the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill was before the House a rule was brought in to make in order an amendment providing for a horizontal increase in the salaries of Government employees of 10 per cent for those receiving less than $1,200 per year and of 5 per cent for those receiving not less than $1,200 per year and not more than $1,800. There were cast against the rule 75 votes, and only 8 of them were Republican votes, and yet if that amendment is adopted on all the bills-and it looks now that it may be—it will entail an expenditure of many millions of dollars. I voted against the amendment, because I did not believe that the Treasury of the United States was in proper condition to justify these expenditures for these increases at the present time. And, then, on the same bill when the amendment was offered to increase the compensation of secretaries of Members of Congress from $1,500 to $2,000 per annum, entailing an additional expenditure of $220,000, how did these watchdogs of the Treasury vote on that amendment? One hundred and twentyseven voted for it and 57 against it, while only 58 Democrats voted in favor of it and 111 Democrats voted against it. I voted against it because of the needs for economy in the public expenditures at this time. Now, in the face of your record as manifested by your actual voting, to your plea for economy and your pretense along that line, I would say to you Republican Members:

Do not, as some ungracious pastors do, Show me the steep and thorny way to heaven; Whiles, like a puff'd and reckless libertine, Himself the primrose path of dalliance treads, And recks not his own read.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I see that the time assigned me by Majority Leader Mr. Kitchin for speaking in behalf of this revenue bill has expired, and so without taking up any further time of the House I will extend my remarks in the Record at this juncture, concluding briefly what I have to say. Now, it is well known to the Members of this House, both Democrats and Republicans, that the need for these additional revenues is occasioned by the unusual and unprecedented expenditures for the preparedness measures, namely, for the Army, Navy, and coast fortifications. Were it not for these increases no additional revenue measure would be necessary at all at this time and, as a matter of fact, we could provide for the reduction of some revenue measures that we already have.

In order to make it perfectly clear how largely these appropriations for military and naval purposes have increased within the last two years, I offer the following comparative statement of these appropriations for the fiscal years of 1916 and 1917 and the estimates for 1918. These appropriations for 1918 will be made at this session of Congress, and bid fair to come fully up to the estimates, and it is entirely possible that conditions may arise which will cause them to exceed these estimates before they finally pass both Houses of Congress. Here is the comparative statement which I wish to offer at this time:

	Appropriations, fiscal year ending June 30—
Item.	1916	1917	19181
Appropriation bill: Army Navy Fortifications	$101, 974, 195. 87 149, 661, 864. 88 6, 060, 216. 90	$267, 596, 530. 10 313, 300, 555. 84 25, 747, 550. 00	$298, 636, 011. 28 379, 151, 701. 67 56, 999, 481. 21
Sundry civil— Arsenals Military posts. Supplemental estimates for Army and Navy.	653, 600. 00 570, 924. 99	5, 214, 395. 00 1, 727, 859. 99	6, 435, 700.00 8, 841, 890.23 27, 500, 000.00
Total	258, 920, 802. 64	613, 586, 890. 93	2 777, 564, 784. 39

Thus it will be seen that the appropriations for Army and Navy purposes increased $354,606,088.29 in 1917 over 1916, or a gain of 136 per cent, and the estimates for 1918, which are to be appropriated for by this Congress are $163,977,893.46 more than we appropriated for these same purposes at the last session of Congress and $518,643,981.75 more than for the fiscal year of 1916, or a gain of over 200 per cent over 1916.

And it should be remembered that these enormous appropriations have not only received the sanction of a majority on the Republican side of the House, but, like Alexander the Great, who sighed because there were no more worlds to conquer, they have sighed for still greater appropriations and have criticized Democratic leadership for not adding on more. But Democrats have no fear of that criticism. Under the leadership of our administration a naval building program has been adopted which when completed will unquestionably make the United States the second naval power in the world, and an Army bill has been passed which provides for our national defense on the land.

HOW SHALL THE ADDITIONAL AMOUNT NEEDED BE RAISED?

The Republicans come in here, under the leadership of their members of the Ways and Means Committee, and suggest, as they call it, a return to the "good old days" of the Payne-Aldrich tariff law. Why, gentlemen of this House, the Payne-Aldrich tariff law in the greatest year of its history would lack $400,000,000 of paying the total cost of the preparedness measures for 1918; yea, it would lack nearly $200,000,000 of paying just the increases alone in these measures in 1918 over those of 1916.

The Payne-Aldrich tariff law only raised about $333,000,000 in the greatest year of its history, and the estimated cost for these preparedness measures for 1918 is $777,564,784.39, as I have shown.

Direct taxes! Of course, we have to have them. No tariff law that could be devised by mortal man would raise enough revenue to meet these enormous expenditures.

Rates that might be designed to do so would be so high that they would shut out importations altogether of articles which are now coming in under a more moderate rate. The Republican side of this House know these facts and are merely resurrecting the old tariff shibboleth to make talk and revive a dying hope.

Their predicament reminds me of a story of an embarrassed youth, who felt called upon to relieve the sudden cessation of conversation which often overtakes the most brilliant social circle. With much confusion the halting and stammering youth turned to the daughter of the hostess, who was not present in the room, and inquired: "Ho-how is yo-your ma? N-not th-that I gi-give a cent, bu-but it makes ta-talk." The Republican Party, without an issue and floundering from pillar to post, in their extremity can think of nothing to talk about save the old and threadbare issue of the tariff.

Its very hoariness with age, will bring a smile to every thoughtful American citizen, and call to mind the familiar lines of Holmes:

I know it is a sin
For me to sit and grin
At him here;
But the old three-cornered hat,
And the breeches and all that,
Are so queer!

The American people repudiated the Republican policy of exorbitant tariff rates in 1910. They did it again in 1912, and again in 1916, and would undoubtedly still do so if the question were further submitted to them. The Democratic policy of a tariff for revenue only has received the ample indorsement of the American people, and our party is fully justified in obeying their mandate.

THE REVENUE PROVISIONS OF THIS BILL ARE JUST AND EQUITABLE.

It has been charged by the opponents of this measure during the debate that the method of raising revenue which it provides is discriminatory and will be sectional in its application. Of course, an examination of the measure by any fair-minded man will disclose that these charges have no foundation in fact.

The principal and only new feature of the bill is that which provides for a tax on excess profits of corporations and partnerships. Now, let us see what taxes are levied by this provision of the bill.

In the first place, every corporation and partnership is allowed to earn $5,000 profit in each year regardless of the size of its capital stock or amount invested in the business before there is any tax at all. Then, in addition to this exemption of $5,000, each corporation and partnership is permitted to earn 8 per cent profit before there is any tax. Therefore, after a corporation or partnership has earned $5,000 and, in addition to that, 8 per cent net profit on the actual amount of capital invested in the business in any one fiscal year, then all profits in excess of that are taxed at the rate of 8 per cent. Simply that and nothing more. For instance, a concern with $100,000 invested in the business would have an exemption of $5,000, and then would be permitted to earn 8 per cent more, which would be $8,000, making in all $13,000, before any taxes would have to be paid. Corporations and partnerships, whether they be located North, East, South, or West, will, of course, have the tax to pay if they come within its provisions. There is no sectionalism in

If there are more of these excess profits in the East than in any other section of the United States, then that is their good fortune, and I do not see what right they have to complain. If they are making more money than any other section of the country, then they have larger interests to be protected and are better able to pay and ought to have to do it.

I do not see how that proposition can be successfully disputed. Besides that, if it be true that they will pay a larger amount under the terms of this bill than any other section of the country, it is also equally true that the larger part of the expenditures in the construction of the preparedness building program will be spent there and will be returned to them through the regular channels of trade.

From any standpoint I do not see how any successful criticism can be lodged against the excess-profits provision of this bill. It is estimated that it will raise $226,000,000 for the fiscal year 1918, and that will be sufficient to meet the additional needs of the Government unless unforeseen expenditures arise.

CONCLUSION.

I favor an economical administration of the Federal Government, and my votes in this House will back up my statement absolutely. I do not favor a parsimonious policy, but one of business judgment and efficiency, and I think undoubtedly a great many savings could be effected without impairment of the Government service. Any unnecessary tax is an unjust tax. These, however, are unusual times, and unforeseen conditions Additional revenue is imperative. How shall we raise it? In these days when the cost of living has mounted so high as to tax the utmost resources of the poor to meet it I think it would be nothing less than criminal to put a tax on consumption by means of increasing the tariff duties.

This revenue bill does not do that, but places the burden on the corporation or partnership, which is enjoying unusual and excess profits. Is that right? I think so, and I gladly cast my vote for it, believing that the ends of justice will thereby be served, and "the foundations of justice are that no one shall be harmed, and, next, that the common weal be served."

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I have only one more gentleman to speak in general debate, and I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in various things that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Howard] spoke of, and especially in his comparison of Georgia with certain of the smaller Northern States; but I notice that he did not mention, when he was talking about the Northern States that had so much population and two Senators, the great State of New York, with 10,000,000 people and only two Senators, a State as large in population as the whole tier of Southern States from South Carolina to Louisiana, and having as many Representatives in this House.

Mr. Chairman, we have had the most remarkable exhibition upon this revenue bill from those in advocacy of it that I think has ever occurred on the floor of this House. It has been brought in here frankly as a scheme for punishing the people who want to protect the country from a possible foreign inva-sion. It comes from the North Carolina school of pacifists, and its advocates openly declare that it was designed to make the people who have demanded preparedness pay for it-the people of the North-and to exempt as far as possible others; that it was designed to discourage and defeat preparedness. a very queer way to accomplish that purpose. You put a tax upon a comparatively small number of people whom you say are able to bear it, and they probably are, but you certainly do not thereby decrease the popularity of preparedness. If you had the courage of your convictions, if the Democratic Party were not a party of cowards, as has already been said; if it believed, as it professes, in a tariff for revenue only; if it had dared to live up to its principle and had put a tariff upon the best revenue-producing articles, as tariff-for-revenue nations do, namely, tea and coffee, you would have gotten a revenue and perhaps might have brought home to all the people the cost of preparedness. But now you are putting a tax upon a few and the rest of the people will not much complain, though I believe nearly all of the people are patriotic and willing to pay what may be necessary to safeguard our liberties.

If, as some of you frankly say, your purpose is to hinder pre-paredness, it is singular that you have copied your tax bill from the very European countries where militarism is most rampant. If your purpose is to try to hurt preparedness, you will not accomplish it in this way. Your tax, furthermore, is unfair. The excess upon profits tax is a tax on business, a tax which will be charged, to a large extent, back upon the people.

Mr. Bernard Baruch testified in New York the other day that he made $476,168 in 11 days in selling stocks short and covering on the falling market, and he complained that if he had known about the President's peace message a little earlier he could have made another four or five hundred thousand dollars by covering his sales a little later. Does this bill put a tax of a cent upon him? Not one cent. It taxes business and encourages speculation. It does not tax the man who piles up cotton or wheat or anything else in the warehouse and holds it for a higher price. It encourages that sort of thing. It is a bill to increase the cost of living, to tax business so that the tax can be put back upon the people as a part of the cost of living. That is the way you will find it will work out when you put it on the statute books. [Applause on the Republican side.]

As to the increase in the estates tax, or inheritance tax, I regard the encroachment of the Federal Government upon this source of revenue for the States as wholly unwarranted.

There never was a time, Mr. Chairman, when the question of protection to American industries was more vital to the people of this country than now. When the war in Europe ends everybody knows-most Democrats admit it-that the Underwood tariff will bring disaster upon the country. I believe that the President himself, if he really believed his peace notes and messages would produce any results inside of another year, would be advocating at least some increases in the tariff, increases that would afford some increase of protection and a considerable increase in revenue. But this bill is an evidence of how blind the Democratic Party still is to the real needs of the country and how necessary the restoration of the Republican Party to real safety and prosperity for our industries and our

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY].

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the gentleman from Ohio, Dr. FESS, made a statement a minute ago upon the floor of this House that he received a larger Republican majority in his district in the election last November than there were votes cast in my State at that election. I have heard something of the manner of voting in Ohio. I remember to have read something about Adams County in that State [laughter], and if the gentleman's statement is true, and he certainly with a title could not afford to make a statement that was not true, then he got more votes in his district than he has men and women, black and white. If that is the way you count your majorities in Ohio, you certainly ought to be returned to this House. There is not, however, any sense in making a statement of that kind. He gets no credit for a statement of that kind, even with his friends, for they certainly know that it is incorrect. However their voting may be in his State and their count I do not know, but I do know that he has no such majority as that.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, why, the Democrats did not have nerve enough to nominate anybody against him. Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, I understand; perhaps it is the ignorant vote that the gentleman complained of in the State of Ohio. I presume that he was referring to the same class of people he mentioned when he made a statement, as I have heard he did, that in the District of Columbia he was unwilling to have a referendum because the District of Columbia contained 120,000 illiterate, ignorant negroes, and I understand his district contains about the same number.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes. Mr. FESS. That statement is not true.

Mr. CARAWAY Did not the gentleman make that statement?

I did not.

Mr. CARAWAY. Or anything like it?

Mr. FESS. No, sir; nor anything like it. Mr. CARAWAY. Where did the gentleman make the speech that he was against a referendum-

Mr. FESS. I have made none.

Mr. CARAWAY. None at all?

Mr. FESS. No, str. Mr. CARAWAY. Well, I shall wait until another witness is called, because, after the gentleman's reckless statement of the majority he received, I fear to accept any other statement he shall make.

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I regret that my friend has intimated that I made a statement that I did not make, because I do not want to be put in the position of categorically denying a statement that would seem to be discourteous to him, but I made no such statement as that about the referendum or about the negro vote, but, on the other hand, I am very exacting in the statement that such a statement that I would not submit to a referendum because of the colored vote is as far as possible from my meaning and also from all that I have said or ever Should I judge from what I know of the colored man I would not hesitate to leave the temperance issue with him. Now, in regard to the vote. The vote in the seven districts in Arkansas, according to this almanac of 1916, for Congressmen is 37,262.

Mr. CARAWAY. From the whole seven districts?

Mr. FESS.

Mr. CARAWAY. The gentleman has not got a statement of that kind.

Mr. FESS. Yes, sir; in this book.

Mr. CARAWAY. It must have been published in Ohio.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman can not get away with a thing like

Mr. CARAWAY. I can get away with whoever says that is the truth, because it is absolutely not telling the truth because more votes than that were cast in some districts of the State-

A Member. What districts? Mr. FESS. There are seven districts with 37,262 votes recorded for the Democratic candidate in the seven districts and only a little over 5,000 for all candidates other than a Democrat, and now-wait a minute-in my district, the seventh Ohio, my majority was 37,128, and there were two other candidates, a Socialist as well as a Democrat.

Mr. CARAWAY. It makes no difference who said that;

that statement is absolutely not true, even if it is in a book.

Mr. FESS. It is here

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not care.
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FESS. Just a moment. I would not make a statement that would be unkind-

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield the gentleman one minute additional. Mr. FESS. It has been stated that my majority was because I had no opposition.

Mr. GORDON. From a Democrat. Mr. FESS. I had a Democratic candidate and I had a Socialist candidate against me.

Mr. GORDON. Who put up the Democratic candidate?

Mr. FESS. I suppose the gentleman's party did; I did not. Mr. GORDON. He was not nominated.

Mr. FESS. But he came from my own county seat of Xenia. I know more about it than the gentleman. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] The facts are—Mr. Chairman, I would like to say this: There is not any group of people that I think more of personally than the group that sit on that side of the Chamber. [Applause.] I say that positively and sincerely; but when we come to discuss issues and men jump up and interrupt me I am pretty apt to do like the gentleman from North Carolina, I hit back; but I aim to do so within the limits of the facts. Now, these figures I gave are from the World Almanac, which I sent for, and I repeat them. The seven districts in that State cast but 37,262 votes, according to this book of 1916, while my majority was 37,128. Let it stand at that. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I suppose the difference between the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Arkansas is that the gentleman from Ohio is referring to the general election and the gentleman from Arkansas thinks he is referring to the primaries.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the gentleman yield to me? I will say that in the regular vote in 1916 there were nearly 200,000 votes cast in the congressional election.

Mr. KITCHIN. In the primary?
Mr. CARAWAY. In the general election this last November, and I can get the certificate.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman—— Mr. CARAWAY. There is no use to argue. I got 21,000 votes

Mr. KITCHIN. I suggest they put it in the RECORD to-

Mr. FESS. The 1917 almanac which has just been handed me gives your vote at 21,000. This 1916 copy is the one that I have, and it gives the vote: (1) CARAWAY, 4,806; (2) OLDFIELD, 5,253; (3) TILLMAN, 7,588; (4) WINGO, 5,166; (5) JACOWAY, 5,586; (6) TAYLOR, 4,110; (7) GOODWIN, 4,756.

Mr. CARAWAY. Now, what is the rest of that? Will not the gentleman be fair enough to correct his own statement?

Mr. FESS. I will. This 1917 copy which I now have says, Caraway, 21,000; Oldfield, 17,000." Mr. Caraway. And what was his opposition vote?

Mr. FESS. Sixteen thousand.

Mr. CARAWAY. That made considerably over 30,000.

Mr. FESS. The 1916 almanac, the one I had-not having examined the 1917 almanac—gives it as I gave it to you. I see it refers to the election of 1914 instead of 1916.

Mr. CARAWAY. Whoever published that other was as inaccurate as any statement you made about your majority. The gentleman admits now his statement was wrong

Mr. FESS. I admit I was wrong as to the election of 1916, due to my having the wrong book.

Mr. KITCHIN. I understand the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] has consumed all of his time.

Mr. FORDNEY. In general debate.
Mr. KITCHIN. In general debate. I have remaining about 25 minutes, and I will take that to-morrow morning, I believe. I now move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Sherley, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 20573, the revenue bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD a speech delivered by Representative WILLIAM R. Wood, of Indiana, before the Pittsburgh Tariff Club on Monday of this week on the subject "William McKinley."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] at Pittsburgh recently on the life and character of William McKinley. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an article on the question of educating the alien.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting an article as to education of aliens. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 20209. An act to amend section 276 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; and H. R. 217. An act to authorize the sale of school property in the city of Denver, Colo., and for other purposes.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution and bill of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below: S. J. Res. 198. Joint resolution providing for the confirmation of the agreements between the States of South Dakota, Montana, and Idaho and the United States relating to the selection of lieu or indemnity lands; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 7561. An act to amend an act entitled "An act for the erection of United States prisons and for the imprisonment of United States prisoners, and for other purposes," to fix the terms of office of the superintendent of prisons, the wardens, and the deputy wardens, to provide for their appointment, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 59 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 1, 1917, at 11 o'clock a. m.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 1, 1917.

(Legislative day of Wednesday, January 31, 1917.)

The Senate reassembled at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

GOVERNMENT OF PORTO RICO.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I move that the bill (H. R. 9533) to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes, be made the special order for to-night at 8 o'clock. I first ask unanimous consent that this may be done.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, all I have to say is—to repeat what I said yesterday—that if the order is made, as soon as the unfinished business is laid before the Senate to-night I shall object to its being laid aside. I will say to the Senator again there is no need of night sessions at this time. If appropriation bills are presented here, there will be no disposition whatever to delay their passage; but why take the time of the Senate in a night session to discuss a bill that can pass this body within a couple of hours at any time in the day.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is just what I received in reply to my requests last session. Time after time I tried to get consideration, and every time something intervened.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order that the motion is not debatable, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Sherman] on account of death in his family.

I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have been requested to Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore] is detained on account of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask that my request for unanimous consent be submitted to the Senate that House bill 9533 be made a special order for 8 o'clock to-night.

Mr. LEWIS. If there be a night session.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I suppose there will be a night session.
Mr. BRANDEGEE. I object, Mr. President,
Mr. SHAFROTH. I move that the Porto Rican bill be made the special order for 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator withhold his motion, that I may make a request that will not take more than an instant of time?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I withhold the motion for that purpose.

THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. CLAPP. In behalf of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I ask that permission be given that committee to sit during the session of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

THE COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICES AND POST ROADS.

Mr. HARDWICK. I make the same request in behalf of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Florida? Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. BRYAN. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 20453) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, and I submit report (No. 1002) thereon. I am also directed to give notice that at the very first opportunity I shall ask the Senate to take up and consider this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the cal-

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SHAFROTH, I yield.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to present and have printed in the Record resolutions adopted by the Manufacturers' Association of the State of Michigan relative to the proposed revenue

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DETROIT, MICH., January 31, 1917.

Hon. CHARLES E. TOWNSEND, Washington, D. C .:

Hon. Charles E. Townsend, Washington, D. O.:

I am directed to transmit to you the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the manufacturers and other business representatives here assembled under the auspices of the Michigan Manufacturers' Association do hereby approve of the action of Congress heretofore taken and now proposed looking toward the adequate defense of our country; but we wish to voice our unqualified disapproval of that part of the pian being considered in Congress to finance such defense and other expenditures by what is known as the tax on the so-called excess profits of corporations and copartnerships."

In taking this position we assert our earnest belief that any proper defense of this country must rest upon a prosperous state of industry and commerce and upon assured employment of labor. We declare our belief that the laying of this special tax upon the profits of industry and commerce must inevitably result in the curtaliment of effort, the limitation of legitimate business development, and the depression of all conditions of employment. We find by a recent statement of Hon. Edward N. Hurley, retiring chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, that the immediate burden of this tax will fall upon not more than approximately 60,000 business concerns, without counting banking, railroad, and public-utility corporations.

Such a tax will penalize ability, energy, and efficiency, and if imposed will surely have the effect of retarding the profit-sharing plans which are being introduced for the benefit of employees by so many manufacturing and mercantile institutions.

We assert that the cost of a proper program of national defense, to which support we are heartily committed, should be equitably distributed upon all property and in part over a term of years bearing suitable relation to the lasting benefits proposed to be created by the program of defense.

In view of these facts we hereby declare our opposition to the proposed measure in its present form, and place this assembly on record as viger

GOVERNMENT OF PORTO RICO.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Can the Senator from Colorado, with a motion pending, yield the floor to other Senators for as long a time as he desires? The VICE PRESIDENT. No; he can not do that; but the Chair did not know a motion was pending.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understood the Senator from Colorado to make that motion.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator permit me just a moment to make a request?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I move that the bill (H. R. 953) to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes, be made the special order for to-night at 8 o'clock.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I want to say a word on the motion of the Senator from Colorado. I am glad to see so many Senators here this morning. We are continuing the business of yesterday. The unfinished business, House bill to make the Senator. The whole

408, the water-power bill, is now before the Senate. The whole time of the session yesterday was consumed by the Senator from Colorado, who now makes this motion in the discussion of the unfinished business, the water-power bill. He gave a very enlightening address. Senators are very desirous, I am sure, of having him complete it.

The Senator expressed the view yesterday that the country would be interested in reading his address. I do not know whether the Senator will be able to complete his address to-day or not; but in any case, Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senator ought to be quite willing to expedite the disposi-tion of the unfinished business and then take up the Porto Rican government bill. I beg to assure him that I shall be very glad to help him get consideration of that measure; but, Mr. President, when we are recessing from one day to another and remaining in continuous session even until the night why, pray, should we discontinue the unfinished business and take up the Porto Rican bill?

The Senator from Colorado could speedily dispose of the pending bill by abbreviating as much as possible his discussion of the pending measure and securing as many of the Senators who believe with him on the matter as he can to act in like manner. We would then be able to take up the act in like manner. Porto Rican bill and the other important measures which are before us; but I trust now that the motion of the Senator from Colorado will not prevail. I do not believe that for the dispatch of business in this Chamber it is a good thing to suspend the work we are engaged in, that is taking an awful lot of time, I regret to say, and that ought to be disposed of either one way or the other, and to lay that aside and take up some other measure. This bill has been placed before the Senate by the vote of the Senate as the business which ought now to engage its attention, unless something in the nature of emergency legislation, appropriation bills, revenue legislation, or something of that kind may intervene.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I wish to say in reply to the Senator from Montana that it was the understanding we were to have morning hours, so that I might get an opportunity to present the Porto Rican bill. I have tried not to interfere with the unfinished business, but if it becomes necessary I shall be compelled to move the consideration of the Porto Rican bill in preference to the bill which the Senator has in charge. I have tried to avoid that; I do not want to do it; but the Porto Rican bill is one of the very important bills before the Senate, and I must say when I am proposing to put it off to a time when likely a quorum may not be had it is interfering very slightly with the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator will pardon me, I will be very glad to give the Senator a morning hour.

Mr. SHAFROTH. We took a recess yesterday, and we have not any morning hour.

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator will agree to unanimous consent to vote on the pending measure— Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no, Mr. President; that measure is before the Senate now, and out in my part of the country it is regarded as the most important measure to us that ever has been presented to the Congress of the United States. If the Senator thinks we are not going to be heard, he is mistaken. I am not going unnecessarily to consume the time. I think I will finish in an hour this morning if I am not interrupted; but, Mr. President, all must know that it is a measure which fastens upon our country a landlordship and the seizure of our waters that belong to the States that we are not going to stand, if by argument we can avoid it. I do not propose to filibuster in the matter, but it is the most important measure that has been before Congress, in my judgment, for years and years. All I want is to take up the time of an evening's session. I want this Porto Rican bill to be concluded just as quickly as possible, and if it car be gotten through with by a unanimous-consent agreement I will step aside and let the Senator proceed; but I must insist upon my motion to have the Porto Rican bill made a special order for to-night at 8 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. WALSH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'Gor-MAN], who I believe is absent. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). The junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson] is necessarily absent on account of illness. I am paired with him for the day, and therefore withhold my vote. I will allow this announcement to stand with reference to any other roll call which may be taken to-day.

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLean], which in his absence I transfer to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Warren]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead] and vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Goff] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Lea] and vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose] to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and vote nav.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. Swanson] is detained from the Chamber by sickness. I shall not repeat this statement, because my colleague will not likely be in his seat for several days. While not dangerously sick, he is having quite a serious spell, and there is no likelihood of his being able to get to the Senate for some days.

Mr. JAMES. I transfer the general pair which I have with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Weeks] to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Kirby] and vote "yea." Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted a moment ago, but I now notice that the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Sterling], with whom

I am paired, is absent. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Husting] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. CLARK. I desire to announce my pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. Stone] and withhold my vote.
Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the affirmative).

I am obliged to withdraw my vote, as I have a pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. Smith], who is not present. Mr. CURTIS. I desire to inquire whether the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that he has

DEALING IN COTTON FUTURES.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I ask unanimous consent, out of order, to submit the resolution which I send to the desk, and desire that it lie on the table.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, let the resolution be read. The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read. The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 345), as follows:

Whereas complaint has come from farmers, merchants, business organizations, and also a memorial from the Legislature of South Carolina, complaining that the practice of the New York Cotton Exchange in buying and selling contracts below what local spot cotton can be bought in the South; and
Whereas this practice is demoralizing to the domestic and foreign cotton trade, in that it makes impossible legitimate hedging against purchase and sale: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Attorney General is hereby directed to proceed at once to investigate the transactions in buying and selling contracts on the New York Cotton Exchange and ascertain whether such transactions are unlawful and in restraint of trade.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table and be printed.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, out of order, I desire to present, and to ask to have printed as a public document, a bulletin sent out by the American Judicature Society with reference to promoting the efficient administration of justice. ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

ADDRESS BY FRANKLIN W. HOBBS.

Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. President, I present a document entitled "Textiles—The Backbone of New England," it being an address by Franklin W. Hobbs before the Boston Art Club. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing, as I desire to have it printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The document will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

WORLD PEACE.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I gave notice a few days ago that I would discuss a resolution which I introduced pertaining to the address of the President. I wish to discuss that very briefly this morning, and I will ask, without reading, that the resolution may be inserted in the RECORD at this point, and that it may constitute a portion of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will

The resolution (S. Res. 333) submitted by Mr. McCumber January 30, 1917, is as follows:

January 30, 1917, is as follows:

Resolved, That while the Senate joins with the President in the earnest hope for a speedy termination of the war now devasating the greater portion of the earth, that such war may be brought to an end without crushing any of the great peoples engaged therein, and that a world compact for the preservation of peace and the diminution of armaments so conditioned that this country can with honor and national safety subscribe to its terms and join in its enforcement may be entered into by all the great nations of the earth, as suggested in the address of the President before the Senate on January 22, 1917, the Senate nevertheless regrets that it is unable to agree with the President either on the major propositions that the peace must be a peace without victory or the many other matters which the President suggests as conditions precedent to the entrance of this country into such a compact; but no matter how this war may end, this country, deeply impressed with its slaughter, its devastation, and its baneful influence on civilization and progress, should stand ready at all times, irrespective of the terms of peace which the necessity of any belligerent may compel it to accept, to exercise its influence and to act jointly with other world powers to strengthen the bonds of international comity and good will, and to lend its moral and physical support to the end that no such war may ever again blacken the earth.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, we awakened this morning

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, we awakened this morning to meet a most serious situation, so critical in its nature as to not only warrant but demand the laying aside of all matters of ordinary legislation and giving our immediate and patriotic consideration to matters of grave and vital interest-matters in which our national honor is already involved and our future peace and safety may be at stake.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Longe] and myself gave notice of a purpose to discuss the recent address of the President concerning a world peace. The note received last evening from one of the belligerents, which foreshadows an era of devastation, slaughter, and starvation far beyond the horrors which have already shocked the world, brings home to us with impressive force the efforts of the President to check further slaughter and bring about an honorable peace, and demands of us in this critical hour that we should leave no word unspoken, no act undone to impress upon these battling nations the imperative duty they owe to humanity to cease this monstrous slaughter and unite with this country in a compact for the preservation of a lasting peace, fair and honorable to all.

The note is in the hands of the President, and it would be inopportune, it seems to me, for the Senate to invade the field of diplomacy, over which the President alone, under our Constitution, has jurisdiction. But we well may, and should, give proper aid to the endeavor of the President to secure a world peace, and this can be done without the slightest invasion of the field of diplomacy

Mr. President, while I may not agree with all the conditions which the President lays down, and as I construe his message, the observation of which must precede our entrance into any world compact for the enforcement of peace, I do agree most heartily with the general principle of a world federation for enforced arbitration when so guarded as to assure fundamental and inherent national rights. And I can not allow the addresses made in this Senate proclaiming the everlasting isola-tion of this country from world concerns, except wherein we may see fit to force ourselves for selfish commercial interest, to stand as the unchallenged sentiments of this body, and, above all, I do not wish to be classed with those who scoff at the idea of a world-enforced peace, in the maintenance of which this country shall take an honored part.

Reading the past in the alphabet of unchanging hereditary emotions, I assume the cave man whose size enabled him to club to death anyone whose actions contravened his purposes, robbed and plundered his weaker neighbor with impunity, also scoffed at the suggestion that he should be bound by any other law than his own sweet will. I assume that he declared as a Utopian dream the suggestion that the people of a tribe could live without each one being armed to the teeth and ever alert to defend himself or to use his bludgeon to enforce his individual rights. I assume that he declared as preposterous and visionary the suggestion of a union of all of the people of his tribe to compel each member to accord to the others the same right he claimed for himself. I assume that he regarded any surrender of a moiety of his sovereignty over himself and his action to the will or conscience of others as most dangerous to his individual safety, and that he talked about his honor and his vital interest as though he alone were the great "I am" of the universe. But whatever may have been his conjectures, it is certain that a time did arise in the evolution of the human family when he was compelled to submit such differences to the judgment of his neighbors, when he was compelled to admit that the rights of humanity in general were greater and more important than the rights of any single individual.

'And, Mr. President, out of this necessity for restraining the power of the stronger man and protecting the rights of the weaker grew the institution of government among men. Our civilization of to-day, with all its glory of mental endowment; with all its mighty achievements in the realms of science, literature, art, philosophy; with all its genius of production; with all its comforts and luxuries, and with all its consequent eapability for happiness, is but the legacy which we as a people received from that first government in that far-off age when public sense of justice had so ripened and intensified and united that it said to the man with the greater physical power, "Lay down that club and arbitrate"; that said to the weaker man, "Fear not, your cause is our cause, the cause of humanity, and by the united strength of the many we will protect you against the power of the stronger." I am not so sure as some of the Members of this body that time is not very near at hand when all Governments, are but communities multiplied, will be compelled to abide by the same rules of morality in their relations to each other that they enforce upon their own citizens in all of their interrelations; and as I am compelled to recognize that all our civilization and all its blessings flow from this ancient source of civil government, a government which protected the weak from the strong, that created courts of arbitration to pass judgment upon the right and justice of individual actions, so I know that the advancement of this rule of right into the realm of international relations will result in greater blessings, comforts, and happiness than the world has ever yet dreamed of. am not certain, Mr. President, that we have actually reached that period, but I have an abiding conviction that it is very near

We all realize that we are passing through a mighty world change, a change fraught with uncertainties and possibilities which no one is bold enough to assert that he comprehends. For centuries the progress of the world was comparatively slow, almost imperceptible. There was little progress in human vocations, trades, and business from the days of the Pharaohs to the birth of Lincoln. Suddenly we note a portentous awakening.

We have progressed more in the last 75 years than during the previous 5,000 years of recorded history. Our progress has been so phenomenal as to astound even ourselves. These long centuries seemed to have been centuries of preparation only, the slow embryonic development of the human family. In the light of this wonderful presaging world activity who may say that this mighty slaughter, the greatest the world has ever known, may not be the birth throes which shall usher humanity into the realm of "peace on earth, good will toward men," that will lead mankind into a new world, where that vast human energy which has heretofore been wasted in preparation for its own destruction shall be henceforth directed toward the preservation and aggrandizement of human life, a world relieved from the ever-increasing burden of armies and navies and pensions; a world in which these almost boundless wasted energies shall be turned into channels of productiveness that will give to our children's children a world of plenty, a civilization freed from the haunting fear of the monster of war.

I am in accord with the general idea proclaimed, not originated, by the President, an idea which has been discussed by and which has sunk deep into the hearts and minds of our people, too deep to be scoffed away, that as all of the people in the world have the same individual rights, so all nations have the same national rights; and that while each one must work out its own national destiny neither has the right to destroy the other, to subjugate it, or absorb it for its own aggrandizement.

It might be well for us to remember that the evolutionary processes of nature, working their inexorable changes in physical structure, labor with the same patient and persistent industry on our mental faculties and, supplemented by an everincreasing international intercourse, point always toward a broader humanity.

Mr. President, nations of this day are not divided by blood but by physical boundaries, by rivers, mountains, and seas.

Since the beginning of commerce among people these frail boundaries have been crossed and recrossed and the blood of one infused into the veins of the other, and this, supplemented by war and conquest, by annexations and assimilation, have so commingled the blood of this dominant Aryan race that no one can claim a purely local heritage; and this blood relationship of all the nations of Europe with this country is far closer than we are wont to consider.

We, whose citizenship is made up of all the divers nationalities from every land of Europe, can not but recognize that it is our own blood that is being shed, our own brothers that are being slaughtered in this conflict, and we can not with any sense of duty or humanity say "This is not our concern." By every tie of blood, by every sentiment of the heart, it is our concern. And it is our moral as well as our national duty to bend every effort to the end that no such hideous war shall ever again blacken the world with its worse than murder.

Mr. President, this broader and growing idea of national duty in no sense will diminish our devotion to our own country and its interests. Can anyone assert that the institution of government among men, whereby each citizen or subject binds himself to uphold its laws, to shield the weaker against the stronger, to enforce equity and fair dealing between all members of his society, has to any extent diminished his loyalty and devotion to his own family? Has it not rather strengthened the fidelity to and added to the security of the home in every land?

While I do not speak, and perhaps no one man can speak, for the views of the League for the Enforcement of Peace, I can not refrain from expressing the conviction that the consensus of opinion of those who proclaim the doctrine of a world-enforced peace differs very materially from what has been declared to be their doctrine in some of the speeches made in the Senate. think few indeed would be the number of persons who would contend that a world compact would either compel or allow an interference with the purely domestic affairs of any one Government. The compact must be a compact of independent nations, each free to work out its own national destiny, commercial or otherwise, but each bound to conform in its international conduct to a code that all shall regard and adopt as a code of international right and justice, and, Mr. President, one which all must adopt before they can enter into such an agreement.

And we may well ask ourselves right here, Why should any nation be exempt from that moral code which governs its people? Why should not each and every nation submit itself to the rule that it rob no other nation of its liberty or its territory; that it murder not its people; that it deprive it not of its natural rights; that it take no advantage of its weakness? And why should not all the great nations of the world unite to check international wrong and compel international right, just the same as centuries ago all the people of a nation united to check individual wrong and compel individual right?

While I feel that there are certain fundamental principles of government that are as unchanging as human nature itself, I must recognize that the world conditions of to-day are not the world conditions of 150 years ago; that the questions which confront this Government to-day in its relation to world matters are not the questions which confronted it in 1783. Europe and all the world are far closer to us to-day than was Central or South America when the Monroe doctrine was proclaimed. We are living in everyday contact and communion with all the world, and can not, if we would, isolate ourselves from European and Asiatic questions, or refrain from taking part in the settlement of world problems in which we have as vital interest as other great powers.

Mr. President, there appeared in the New York World of January 30 an editorial entitled "1796 or 1917?" I think it is so apt and pertinent to this proposition that I shall ask that it may be read. It is short, and I have eliminated from it one clause which seemed to be a criticism on those Senators who took a view in opposition to that expressed in the editorial.

ask that the Secretary may read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

1796 OR 1917?

The policy of isolation that was urged upon the American people in Washington's Farewell Address was constructed upon this hypothesis:

"Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have no, or a very remote, connection. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns."

This was true in 1796 when the United States was a great experiment in self-government, when there was no steamship, no railroad, no cable, no wireless, when the Republic was geographically, as well as politically, isolated from the rest of the world; but is it true to-day?

Will anybody affirm that the primary interests of British democracy differ essentially from our own primary interests? Or French democracy? Or 'Italian democracy?' Or even the mass of Germans for whom Maximilian Harden alone has the courage and vision to be the spokesman? Various European Governments may have interests which are foreign to our interests; but even there can we say that those interests do not concern us?

June 28, 1914, a double murder was committed in a street of Sarajevo, a town in Bosnia. Although the victims were an Austrian Archduke and Archduchess, nothing in 1796 would have been of less concern to the United States than a crime perpetrated in a Balkan Province of Austria-Hungary.

Yet this murder in Sarajevo brought the United States to the verge of another civil war. It will cost the American people thousands of millions of dollars in taxation. It has set back for half a century the work of assimilating the immigrant population of this country. It has diverted the mind of the Nation from its most vital domestic problems. It has all but embroiled us in the most ghastly war of human history. It has complicated our affairs with the whole world, disorganized all internal affairs, and in a way left us denstionalized, divided into hostile camps of European tribesmen.

If the fundamental principle of Washington's Farewell Address still has vital force, what happened in Sarajevo was "essentially foreign to our concerns." Nevertheless, we all know what has befallen us, and the question is whether we are to sit by and permit it to happen again without having anything to say about it.

Had there been almost any kind of council of the nations, this war could never have taken place. Conference and discussion alone would have averted it. The war was possible only because a secret and tortuous diplomacy made it possible. But had Vienna, dealing at first with Belgrade and then with Petrograd, known that it would have been no ultimatum to Serbia.

This war marked the collapse of the system of entangling alliances intriguing for the balance of power. Civilization in its own interest is now compelled to take a step forward. Is American democracy to hold aloof? Have we no obligations whatever to the rest of mankind which would impel us to throw our influence into t

Before many months have elapsed the American people must decide for themselves whether the United States, in relation to the other nations, is living in the year 1796 or the year 1917. Are they ready to cooperate with the other great countries in the common interest, or are they by the policy of isolation to invite the other great countries to cooperate against them? It will inevitably be one or the other.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, were there any doubt in the minds of the American people or in the minds of the Senators in this Chamber as to whether we are affected by European conditions, it seems to me that the note from a great belligerent power to the United States which we read this morning has brought home to us the fact that we are interested in those affairs and that we can not escape our obligations as American citizens to assert our rights that may be threatened and the possibility of conflict brought to our very doors.

I am not so certain, however, that the President in his message speaks the well-digested conviction of the American people when he declares the conditions or the limitations which must govern our engagement to join the other powers of the world in the enforcement of peace. Unquestionably he speaks the opinion of President Wilson and all those who, accepting his views on every question as their Koran, closing the doors of their own judgment, follow it with more than commendable partisan fidelity. But I doubt very much if he expresses the consensus of the American judgment when he leaves the realm of generalities and assumes to enter into the details and conditions of a world compact.

While I find it difficult to understand just what the President means by many of the general phrases used by him, and I am certain that others will find like difficulty, there are a number of more or less explicit declarations upon which I think he will find quite a divergence of American view. In fact, I am very doubtful if the American people as a whole are ready to enter into a combination with the nations of the world to furnish soldiers and sailors and war equipment to settle the differences of every Balkan State that might be dissatisfied with its situation or condition. But, assuming that the majority of the American people are ready to declare a world Monroe doctrine and become a party to its enforcement, I do not believe they will agree to all the conditions prescribed by the President, nor do I believe that the other nations of the world will do so. I do not see how it would be possible for a single one of them, much less-all of them, to subscribe to some of the conditions and purposes declared by him. I can hardly understand from what source he derives his authority to declare that there should be a united, independent, an autonomous Poland. I do not know why he has any greater right to say that this will be a condition precedent to any world agreement than that there should be an independent, an autonomous Korea; any more right than Germany or France or Japan would have to declare that there must be a free, independent, and autonomous Philippine government.

I may be allowed to express some surprise that while the President was marking the outlines of a new European map he should have laid aside his pencil the moment he had outlined a new Poland. I know that the status of Alsace and Lorraine has been for years an enforced status, and it seems to me that if we are going into the details of European geographical changes the President ought not to stop with Poland.

If he is expressing, as he assumes to express, the views of the American people, I venture to suggest that they have as strong a conviction in the matter of Serbia, Belgium, Roumania, and Turkey as they have in the matter of Poland. the annual massacres of Armenians and other Christian people subject to the rule of the Turk, and the atrocities of that country in the present war, I am not so sure that the American people would not be just as desirous to see those Christian countries freed from Turkish rule as to see an independent Poland. And I confess I am unable to comprehend how this arrangement can be secured without at least a partial victory. I can scarcely believe in the light of history that the American people are ready to enter into a world compact to maintain Turkey in Europe.

Again, I might frankly ask if, as the President states, "there must be not a balance of power but a unity of power, not organized rivalries but an organized common peace," what particular difference does it make to the smaller Provinces of Europe or Asia whether they are under the domination of one country or another, so long as their right to develop as a people or race is assured?

While admiring the diction and phrase-making elegance of the address, I would be doing my own judgment a serious injustice did I not frankly confess that I think the message as a whole is very far from being clear.

When the President says

No peace can last or ought to last which does not recognize and accept the principle that Governments derive all their just powers from the consent of the governed—

And when he further states-

Any peace which does not recognize and accept this principle will inevitably be upset—

Does he mean thereby to intimate that all monarchies now governed by a king or emperor, whether claiming to rule by divine right or otherwise, must be superseded by a representative form of government which shall select its own head before we can enter into this world compact? If all the monarchs of the world are to be dethroned before we can have this world compact, I fear we are yet far from port. If he does not mean this, will some one explain just what he does mean by these quoted expressions?

I assume some would answer that they have a right under this theory to declare that they prefer an emperor or a king to rule under the hereditary principle. But, Mr. President, there may be Provinces under that Government that do not so prefer, and prefer not to support a monarchy.

Again he says:

No right anywhere exists to hand peoples about from sovereignty to sovereignty as if they were property.

Well, it so happens that Alsace and Lorraine were handed over by France to Germany as the purchase price of peace, the discontinuance of the slaughter and starvation of the French people. Does the President mean, then, that these two Provinces thus obtained may not be returned to France? So, too, we must remember that these same Provinces were wrested by France from Germany about a century ago. In revising the map of Europe where would the President place these Provinces? Or is this sentence open to the construction that under the principle that "governments derive all their just powers from the consent of the governed" these Provinces should express by a vote or otherwise their allegiance to the one or the other Government, or their desire to give such allegiance to neither?

Again, under this same principle that "governments derive all their just powers from the consent of the governed," does the President propose as a condition precedent to our entering into this world compact that Great Britain should relinquish her African, her Asiatic possessions, or her rule over Ireland, if the peoples of those countries should so elect? Are not the propositions laid down by the President not only chaotic in themselves. but such as would produce greater chaos throughout the world?

Again says the President:

So far as practicable, moreover, every great people now struggling toward a full development of its resources and of its powers should be assured a direct outlet to the great highways of the sea.

Where this can not be done by cession of territory it can no doubt be done by the neutralization of direct rights of way under the general guaranty which will assure the peace itself.

Does that mean that a right of way must be given to Switzerland across foreign territory so that she may reach the sea? A right of way, of course, carries with it the right to protect and improve that way, which really means ceded sovereignty to Switzerland. Must all these conditions precedent be fully acquiesced in by foreign Governments before we can join in this league for the enforcement of peace? If they must be, then, instead of pointing the way for universally imposed peace, the President has pushed further afield than ever before this hope of a world agreement.

Again the President says:

And the paths of the sea must alike in law and in fact be free. The freedom of the seas is the sine qua non of peace, equality, and cooperation.

Certainly the President would not have the public believe that in time of peace the sea is not free to every vessel of every nation alike. The sea always has been free. No nation has ever yet been so vain as to claim the right to dominate or control this highway of the world in time of peace. He can not mean that the seas shall be free in time of war, because if we enter into this world agreement then there can be no war and no occasion for the declaration. The power that assures the freedom of the seas is the same power that prevents war. I do not know what he means and probably no two persons in the whole country would agree upon what is intended by this phrase. We know that in time of war the blockade has always been recognized by the civilized powers of the world-not only recognized but acted upon by every nation; that a power at war with another has the same right to weaken its adversary by striking at its contraband on the sea as it would at its support on land. But as war is to be abolished under this world compact the assertion that we must guarantee the freedom of the seas, which has never been questioned, it seems to me, hardly justifies the serious consideration given by the President.

Again the President says:

I am proposing, as it were, that the nations should with one accord adopt the doctrine of President Monroe as the doctrine of the world; that no nation should seek to extend its polity over any other nation or people, but that every people should be left free to determine its own polity.

And again in this connection:

I am proposing government by the consent of the governed.

If that means anything, and the President says that he has spoken with the utmost explicitness, it means the right of the people of any section or province to discontinue its connection with any Government and to set up an independent government. It is probably well for this country that one seriously holding these views was not elected President of the United States in

Mr. President, while I believe that the world has progressed sufficiently to recognize that all the inhabitants of this sphere have a right to live on it and to live in peace, with an assurance of protection, each to develop according to his capabilities, and while I believe that the great nations of the world, including the United States, can well afford to abandon their exclusiveness and extend to each other the hand of fraternity and good fellowship, I am quite certain that no one citizen of the United States can assume to bind this country or all the rest of the world as to what the conditions for a peace compact shall be. Much less, Mr. President, do I believe that these nations which have been pouring out their lifeblood in streams that incarmine two-thirds of the world, making sacrifices and suffering horrors beyond words of expression for what they deem is necessary for their future life, peace, and safety, will allow any other nation, which has fattened on their miseries, to fix the details or remap Europe. And any suggestion on the part of this country to remodel European forms of government or reconstruct the map of Europe will be taken about as seriously as our Mexican threats or our submarine notes.

It may be well to look for a moment at the fundamental proposition involved in any world compact. Every thinking man knows that a government by nations, a world compact for peace, must be analogous to a compact of individuals to form an agreement for individual protection and peace. Three things are absolutely essential for such a compact: First, an agreement as to inherent rights of nations, their duties and their obligations to each other. Until that has been definitely agreed upon the first step is impossible. Second, a court to pass judgment whenever any member nation is charged with a breach of this agreement; and, third, a power furnished by each nation in proportion to its importance and ability, to enforce that judgment and compel obedience on the part of every member to the rules agreed to by it and declared by a great international tribunal.

This international legislature must not only prescribe a code of international duties and obligations of each of the signatory powers toward each other but toward all the balance of the world. It must be manifest to everyone that this confederacy of the nations must be a voluntary confederation in the first instance. It must be apparent to everyone that no nation will enter into such a compact until its boundaries—its territorial limits—are recognized by all the others. What, then, becomes of the declaration that this must be a war without a victory? The chances that these territorial questions can be settled permanently without a victory on one side or the other seem to me to be extremely remote. It goes without saying that the territorial limits, including the colonial possessions of the several countries, must be settled before a world congress can even be proposed.

In this conclave of nations must necessarily be discussed and settled the color question, unless it is exclusively a combination of white races. The rights of the yellow people to become citzens of white nations must be settled, and settled to the satisfaction of the yellow people themselves, before they will become parties to the compact.

One can not fail to observe the delicacy, the complexity, the vast scope of the subjects that will have to be settled by this great international legislature. Nor can he fail to observe how little and insignificant must be the demand of a single individual, whether he be emperor or president, that such and such things should precede our entrance into the great field which affects not only our people but all the people of the world.

I, of course, agree with the suggestion of the President that if this world agreement is entered into there would be no occasion for a purely American Monroe doctrine, as every American nation and every other nation in the world would obligate itself to maintain the territorial integrity of every nation on both continents, as against the covetous designs of any other country. This combination of practically all the world, for the purpose of maintaining peace among all peoples, can in no sense be declared to be an alliance, entangling or otherwise. It is no more an entangling alliance than the compact of our States for a general government, because for the one purpose, the specific purpose of enforcing national morality, it is a world government.

I do not make this statement with the idea of compassing the very many questions that will arise, but merely for the purpose of suggesting the vastness of the undertaking. Every thinking man, every man who recognizes the law of evolution in the world and in the universe, can not blind himself to the fact that in time nations will disappear or be merged into the greater world government. I do not say that we will ever reach a time in which there will be no war. We have had civil government for many thousands of years, but murder, robberies, and thefts continue among the people. On the whole, however, that civil government has given us a security which has been the foundation of all human progress and a world security which will allow the present waste in energies of the earth to be utilized for the benefit of the world—will give a new impetus, which must result in a grander civilization than the world has ever known.

Mr. President, a world agreement for enforced peace can be consummated by the great powers without endangering the safety or impairing the international right of any nation; but the conditions prescribed by the President of the United States as the basis of such an agreement, I am certain, will find favor neither in this country nor any other country now battling for a great principle, and I earnestly hope those conditions will not be pressed as essential prerequisites to a world-assured peace toward which millions of armament-ridden, tax-burdened people have looked with longing hearts through years of weary toil and savage wars.

It was my purpose, Mr. President, in this address to consider the position in which the American people have been placed by our notes concerning undersea craft and their uses in war, and to bring before the Senate the critical situation in which we should soon find ourselves; but events have hurried themselves beyond my expectations, and the situation is now upon us and with all its dangers is now before the Executive of this country, and I would consider it most inopportune for me at this time to discuss that question while it is in the hands of the President.

LEAGUE TO ENFORCE PEACE.

Mr. LODGE. Let me say, first, Mr. President, that I shall make no allusion whatever to the note from Germany which has startled the country this morning. That note is in the hands of the President, in the hands of the Chief Executive. It places upon him a great responsibility, and no word shall fall from my lips which by any possibility could embarrass him in dealing with that note. I shall confine myself absolutely to the propositions of the recent address by the President to the Senate.

Mr. President, I have cherished an earnest hope that we might conclude the necessary business of Congress before the 4th of March and spare to ourselves and to the country the misfortune of another summer session. It is therefore with extreme reluctance that I venture to take any time in discussing a subject not immediately connected with the measures now demanding action if we are to avoid an extra session. I can find justification for doing so only in the extreme seriousness of the questions forced upon the attention of Congress by the President's address delivered in the Senate Chamber on Monday, the 22d of January. Moreover, the President was kind enough to say that he sought this opportunity to address us because he thought that he owed it to us, as the council associated with him in the final determination of our international obligations, to disclose to us without reserve the thought and purpose that had been taking form in his mind in regard to the duty of our Government in the days to come when it will be necessary to lay afresh and upon a new plan the foundations of peace among the nations.

The President has thus recognized the duties imposed upon the Senate by the Constitution in regard to our foreign relations and has invited an expression of our opinions. We have abundant evidence of the gravity of the questions thus presented. newspaper press and others, employing generous if inaccurate language, have decorated the speech with the adjective language, have decorated the speech with the adjective "epochal," which calls at once to mind the movement of giaciers and vast tracts of geologic time. I shall content myself with a simpler word and say that the President's utterances in this Chamber, especially as he declared that he said what the people of the United States would wish him to say, and that he was setting forth the principles of mankind, are in a high degree important. I do not think that the failure on the part of the Senate to discuss the President's statements would imply either approval or disapproval or would by implication bind either the Senate or the country to any given course of action. But none the less it seems to me most desirable that as we were chosen in this instance to be the medium of communication with foreign nations and with the people of the United States we should at least give our own understanding of what the President proposed.

It is not necessary, of course, to say anything as to the many general and just observations made by the President in regard to the horrors and miseries of war, or the dangers and complications with which the present conflict threatens the United States, or as to his or our duty as servants of humanity. Of course, we all agree most heartily with the proposition that peace—just and righteous peace—is infinitely better than war; that virtue is better than vice; that, in Browning's words—

It's wiser being good than bad; It's safer being meek than fierce; It's fitter being sane than mad.

In all these declarations we must be cordially and thoroughly of one mind. All that I desire to do is to speak briefly of the substantive propositions contained in the President's address and, by analysis, discover, if I can, to precisely what policies and course of action he is undertaking to commit the country. We have a right—indeed, it is our duty—to learn, if possible, just what the President means and whither he is trying to lead us. To attain this object we must, in his own language, "uncover the realities."

As I understand it, the President is aiming at two objects, both in the highest degree admirable—to bring to an end the war now raging in Europe, and to make provision for the future and permanent peace of the world. It is to the promotion of the second purpose that he proposes action on the part of the United States, saying that we should frankly formulate the conditions upon which this Government would feel justified in asking our people to approve its firm and solemn adherence to a league for peace. He then proceeds to state the two purposes in this way:

The present war must first be ended; but we owe it to candor and to a just regard for the opinion of mankind to say that, so far as our participation in guaranties of future peace is concerned, it makes a great deal of difference in what way and upon what terms it is ended. The treaties and agreements which bring it to an end must embody terms which will create a peace that is worth guaranteeing and preserving, a peace that will win the approval of mankind, not merely a peace that will serve the several interests and immediate aims of the nations engaged. We shall have no voice in determining what those terms shall be, but we shall, I feel sure, have a voice in determining whether they shall be made lasting or not by the guaranties of a universal covenant; and our judgment upon what is fundamental and essential as a condition precedent to permanency should be spoken now, not afterwards, when it may be too late.

It will be observed that in this paragraph of his address the

It will be observed that in this paragraph of his address the President says explicitly that the first condition precedent to any action for a league for peace must be the ending of the present war. He then declares that the treaties and agreements which bring the war to an end must create a peace which is worth guaranteeing and preserving. He says further that we shall have no voice in determining what those terms shall be, but that they can never be lasting or permanent unless they meet with our approval. It seems to me that this is equivalent to saying that we are to have no voice in what the terms of the peace which ends the present war shall be, but that at the same time the terms must be what we approve or we shall not be able to enter into any future league to preserve the peace of the world. In other words, our action is to be conditioned upon the terms of a peace which we have no voice in determining. If the belligerents when they come to make peace do not make all the terms satisfactory to us, they can not look to us to aid in making that peace lasting and permanent. The President then goes on to lay down the general principles upon which the terms of the peace, in which we are to have no voice, shall be based if the peace thus obtained is to be a peace worth having.

quite clear just what this means, unless it is intended to be a declaration in the interest of one group of belligerents who, having abandoned the original hope of complete victory, wish to make peace in the most advantageous way now open to them. This interpretation must be at once dismissed, for it is not to be supposed for a moment that this can be the President's object, because we all know how devoted he is to neutrality-how it has been his belief from the beginning that it was the duty of the American people to be neutral even in their thoughts-and he is, of course, well aware that it is as easy to be unneutral in forcing a peace favorable to one side as it is to help one side against the other while war is raging. Peace without victory can only mean therefore that neither side is to gain anything by the terms of peace through victory in the field, because if there are no victories on either side there can be neither gains nor losses in the final settlement except through the voluntary self-sacrifice and generosity of the combatants; in other words, all the lives have been given in this war and all the money spent in vain, and Europe is to emerge from the conflict in exactly the same situation as when she entered it. It seems to me incredible that people who have made such awful sacrifices as have been made by the belliger-erts should be content to forego the prospect of victory, in the hope of bringing the war to an end, with everything left just as it was. In such a result they might well think that all their efforts and losses, all their miseries and sorrows and sacrifices were a criminal and hideous futility. Both sides have been inspired by the hope of victory; both sides are still so inspired. Some of the belligerents, at least, believe that the one object of the war is to win a victory which will assure a permanent peace and would regard a reproduction of the old conditions, with all their menacing possibilities, as something far worse than war. They are determined that the dark peril which has over-shadowed their own lives and threatened the independence and very existence of their own countries shall not be permitted to darken the future and be a curse to their children and their children's children. For this they are fighting and suffering and dying. Perhaps they ought not to think in this way; perhaps they ought to feel as the President does. But we must deal with things as they are; we must uncover realities, and there is no doubt of the reality of the desire among many of the great nations of Europe to close this war with a victory which will give them a peace worth having, and not a mere breathing space filled with the upbuilding of crushing armaments and then another and a worse war. Such, I think, is their point of view; but as a practical question for us, dealing with a condition on which we are to build a future league for peace to which we are to be a party, how are we going to provide that it shall be a peace without victory? How are we to arrange that there shall be no victories?

The President says that a peace won by victory would leave a bitter memory upon which peace terms could not rest permanently but only as upon quicksand. There has been pretty constant fighting in this unhappy world ever since the time when history begins its records, and in speaking of lasting peace in terms of history we can only speak comparatively. I think, however, that I am not mistaken in saying that since the fall of the Roman Empire the longest period of general peace which Europe and the Western World have enjoyed was during the forty years following the Battle of Waterloo. During that time there were, of course, a few small and unimportant wars, but there was no great general conflict among great nations anywhere, and yet the peace of 1815 was a peace imposed upon France by the victorious allies if ever such a thing happened in the history of mankind. There was an attempt to settle that Napoleonic war by a treaty "without victory" and between equals. The treaty was signed at Amiens on March 27, 1802.

This "peace without victory" lasted exactly thirteen months and nineteen days, and then war came again and continued for twelve years, and was ended by a peace through victory of the most absolute kind, and that peace has lasted between England and France for a hundred years and has never been broken. war with Spain ended with a peace based on the complete victory of the United States by land and sea. There is no reason to suppose that because it was a peace obtained by victory it is not a lasting peace. I might cite other examples, but one affirmative instance is enough to shatter a universal negative. Frenchman said, "No generalization is ever completely true, not It is a little hasty, therefore, to say that no peace can endure which is the fruit of victory. The peace which lasts is the peace which rests on justice and righteousness, and if it is a just and righteous peace it makes no difference whether it is based on the compromises and concessions of treaties or upon victories in the field. But I return to and repeat the main question before I leave this point. If peace without victory is to be a condition precedent of lasting peace to be maintained by the covenant in which we are to take part, how are we practically to compel or secure the existence of such a condition?

The next condition precedent stated by the President without which we can have no peace that "can last or ought to last" the universal acceptance of the idea that governments derive all their just powers from the consent of the governed, and that any peace which does not recognize and accept this principle will inevitably be upset. Must the fact that any given government rests on the consent of the governed be determined by a popular vote or by the general acceptance by the people of the existing form of government? Who is to decide whether the principle is recognized under the different governments of the world with whom we are to form the League for Peace "supported by the organized major force of mankind"? If the recognition of this principle is to be essential to the lasting peace which we are to support—and every American, of course, believes in and admires the principle—what is to be done about Korea, or Hindustan, or Alsace-Lorraine, or the Trentino, or the Slav Provinces of Austria, or the Danish Duchies? Does the government of Austria, or the Danish Duchies? Does the government of Armenia by Turkey, with its organized massacres, rest on the consent of the governed; and if it does not, are we to take steps to remedy it, or is Turkey to be excluded from the league, or is the league to coerce Turkey to an observance of our principles? As a preliminary of the peace which we are to help enforce must we insist that it can not exist if there are any people under any Government who have been handed from sovereignty to sovereignty as if they were property? I am not contesting the justice of the principle—far from it—but we may well ask how we are going to compel the adoption of that principle by other Governments, and this is no idle question but a real and practical one which can not be evaded. If we enter upon this most desirable reform of other nations, there may be people sufficiently malevelent to ask whether we secured Louisiana by a vote of the people of that territory, or California and other acquisitions from Mexico, or the Philippines, or Porto Rico, or even Alaska, where there were Russian inhabitants who were handed over for a price, very much like property or as serfs adscripti glebae.

The next condition precedent where I should like to "uncover the reality" is that to obtain a firm and lasting peace we must have "freedom of the seas." The President does not say whether it is the high seas or all seas. Let us assume that it is the high seas. The demand must apply either to time of war or time of peace, or both; but for many, many years there has been no interference with the freedom of the seas in time of peace. I think we may therefore assume again that the President's "freedom of the seas" must mean the freedom of the seas in time of war. Is the plan, then, to compel all nations to abandom the rights of belligerents to blockade a hostile port in time of war or to seize contraband going to their enemy? To attain this end we should have to begin by sweeping away all existing doctrines as to the rights of belligerents at sea in time of war—doctrines which were so widely extended in regard to contraband and blockade by the decisions of our own Supreme Court during our Civil War. These doctrines were established by us in the face of very general opposition and have been since accepted and acted upon by belligerents in other wars as the sound construction of international rights. We should therefore have to begin at once by tearing down the fabric of law on this point which we ourselves created and built up.

In the temporary Record of January 26, on page 2376, there is a printed code prepared by a committee of the American Institute of International Law, which has been accepted by the institute and is to be presented to the twenty-one American Republics. This code deals with the freedom of commerce, the rights and duties of belligerents, and the rights and duties of neutrals in time of war. The committee was appointed to deal with this subject on the suggestion of Mr. Lansing, and this code is the result. I have no right to infer that this code represents what the President meant by the freedom of the seas in his recent address, but it embodies in concrete form some of the supposed cases which I have just suggested to the Senate. To state the propositions of the code fully-still more to discuss its detailswould occupy hours, and I have only minutes to spare; but what Mr. Temple said when he presented it covers, in a general way, the general purposes of the code. Mr. Temple said:

The seas are already free'in time of peace. The new code provides for the freedom of the seas in time of war. It abolishes blockade entirely, forbids interference with the mails, declares that merchant ships of the enemy, as well as those of neutrals, shall be free from capture, and abolishes the right of visit and search. Even vessels carrying contraband may in no case be confiscated or sunk under any pretext whatever, though the contraband itself may be confiscated or destroyed by the captor.

These are the radical changes which I have just been imagining as possible and this code, if adopted, would sweep away practically all the most important belligerent rights at sea which have hitherto existed, as well as the doctrines which we extended and laid down during our Civil War and the decisions of our Supreme Court. I do not suppose that there is any idea of overthrowing and sweeping away international law, the work of centuries, in regard to beiligerent rights at sea during the present war, which began with the old system fully recognized by the world and which could not now be altered, except by an entire breach of neutrality if attempted by neutrals. I assume that this new code is to take effect after the

There are only two comments which I desire to make upon it. One is that if it embodies the freedom of the seas spoken of by the President in general terms it would require for its enforcement the navies of all nations who were parties to the league for peace, for, if belligerents engaged in war rested their rights on existing law and long-established usage they could only be brought into obedience to the new code by force, and, as I have already said, we should then, as a party to the league, be obliged by force of arms to take our share in preventing the exercise of these long-established rights. The conference of neutrals provided for in the code would be looked to for its maintenance, and the occurrences of the present war do not give us much hope that such a conference would be very effective in future wars.

My other comment is this: There has been no violation of the rights of neutrals so glaring as the planting of contact mines on the high seas. That is a method of destruction without warrant of international law or the customs and usages of A contact mine is no respecter of persons. It is just as likely to destroy a perfectly innocent ship without contraband and on a perfectly innocent voyage as it is to destroy the warship of a belligerent. No worse attack upon the rights of neutrals could have been made than by this planting of contact mines on the high seas. So far as I am aware no neutral has protested against it-certainly no neutral has protested effectively-and I observe with some surprise that in all this long code for the protection of neutral rights upon the seas in time of war there is not one word said to prevent the planting of contact mines upon the high seas. If this code represents the President's conception of the freedom of the high seas it is in this respect, at least, very imperfect. It will also be observed that in this code it is provided that-

In important cases the conference may authorize severe measures against the belligerent or against the neutrals refusing to respect the rights and duties of neutrality.

Such measures may be public blame, pecuniary indemnity, commercial boycott, and even the use of international force, to be determined by

So that whether or not a league for peace is created, under the conference of neutrals proposed by this code we should be obliged to take very strong measures for the enforcement of neutral rights as agreed to by the conference, and at the bidding of the majority of the conference we should be forced into war in order to compel the belligerents to obey our rules. Therefore this proposal does not differ in essence from the league for peace supported by the major force of mankind. Whether the cases which I have supposed or the new code suggested by the Institute represent the freedom of the sens it would seem as if the enforcement of this new doctrine would surely involve us, and those nations which sign the covenant with us, in every war which might occur between maritime

Closely allied with this proposition for the freedom of the seas, the President tells us, is the limitation of armaments and the cooperation of the navies of the world in keeping the seas free and safe. This, as I have just pointed out, would involve the use of our Navy in any war where the belligerents saw fit to exercise their long-established rights. The limitation of armaments, although not made by the President a condition precedent for lasting peace, is treated by him as of great importance and opens up some very difficult questions. If all naval armaments are to be limited, or, still more, if they are to be abolished, the result would be to leave the nation having the largest mercantile marine in complete control of the seas if war occurred, because, if there were no naval ships, the nation which could arm and put affoat the greatest number of merchant vesels for naval purposes would, of course, be supreme in the absence of ships of war. Before entering upon the free-dom of the seas, allied with the limitation of armaments, it would be well to consider whether the world would thereby be left under a system which, in time of war, would confer absolute power upon the nation possessing the largest mercantile marine.

It will also be necessary for the firm and lasting peace, which the league proposed by the President is to bring about, that every great people now struggling toward a full development of its resources and its powers be assured a direct outlet to the sea. The President confines this important right to the "great peoples," which does not seem to harmonize entirely with his earlier proposition that there must be no difference, recognized or implied, between big nations and small, "between those which are powerful and those which are weak," or with the declaration that the equality of nations, upon which peace must be founded, must be an equality of rights. If the right of access to the sea is to be confined, as the President says, to "every great people," small nations are excluded. We have ample access to two great oceans, so that this proposed reform of the President has the enormous advantage of being wholly altruistic. It is entirely for the benefit of others.

Coming down to the practical question, in order that we may obtain lasting peace are we to see to it that a direct right of way to Constantinople shall be secured to Russia that she may reach the Mediterranean, and to Germany that she may have a direct route to Bagdad and the Persian Gulf? Must we see to it that if Italy regains the Trentino, Trieste shall be kept open so that Germany and Austria may have access to the Mediterranean, and are Servia and Switzerland to be deprived of the right of way giving them access to the sea because they are small? Are we to bring the doctrine into the American Hemisphere and provide that Bolivia and Paraguay shall have direct access to the sea? Are we to carry the doctrine to Asia and make sure that Afghanistan has a right of way to the sea, or is Afghanistan excluded as a small power? It seems to me that this plan for securing free access to the sea to all the great nations of Europe, and still more to the nations, both great and small, would involve us in some very difficult questions wholly outside our proper sphere of influence; and yet the President states this as one of the essentials for the lasting peace which we are to covenant to bring about and to enforce.

The President says that he proposes, as it were, nations with one accord should adopt the doctrine of President Monroe as the doctrine of the world. In the effort which I am making to uncover the realities which lie behind the President's propositions and to avoid "the soft concealments" to which he justly objects, I do not find it easy to determine precisely what is meant by making the doctrine of President Monroe the doctrine of the world. Let me begin by quoting the doctrine as stated by President Monroe. The Monroe doctrine appears, as everyone knows, in the President's annual message of December 2, 1823. The first is connected It is found in two separate passages. with the statement made by the President as to the proposition of the Russian Government to arrange by negotiation the respective rights of the two nations upon the northwest coast of this continent. President Monroe then says:

In the discussions to which this interest has given rise and in the arrangements by which they may terminate the occasion has been judged proper for asserting, as a principle in which the rights and interests of the United States are involved, that the American continents, by the free and independent condition which they have assumed and maintain, are henceforth not to be considered as subjects for future colonization by any European powers.

The second declaration of the doctrine occurs in connection with that portion of the message devoted to South America and to the purposes of the Holy Alliance, and is as follows:

We owe it, therefore, to candor and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have not interfered, and shall not interfere. But with the Governments who have declared their independence and maintained it, and whose independence we have, on great consideration and on just principles, acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them or controlling in any other manner their destiny by any European power in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfavorable disposition toward the United States.

John Quincy Adams, who formulated, and President Monroe, who proclaimed the doctrine which rightly bears the latter's name, were eminent men of very large experience, both in public affairs at home and in diplomacy. They knew well the values of words. Mr. Adams was a scholar with a remarkable power of expression. No doubt they could both, if they had seen fit, have said something which meant nothing, for that is an art as old as language itself. But it may be doubted if either was able or would have consented to say something which might mean anything. They were upright, straightforward men, and Mr. Monroe stated his famous doctrine in plain, unmistakable terms which he who ran might read. When we examine the message of 1823 it will be observed that the Monroe doctrine is strictly local in its application; that is, it applies only to the American-Hemisphere and is based on the theory that there are two spheres in the world which are entirely separate in their political How are we to reframe the first portion of the Monroe doctrine so as to give it a world-wide application? It asserts that the American Continents are not to be considered as subjects for future colonization by any European power. How is this proposition to be turned into a world doctrine? the European powers accepted that doctrine and agreed with us that they would attempt no colonization here we should have the recognition of the doctrine by European powers, but the doctrine would apply to the same territory as before. are we to make it a world doctrine in any other way? are we to turn into a world doctrine President Monroe's second statement that he should regard it as an unfriendly act if any European power interfered with the independence of any American Government? Is the transformation to be effected by having Europe and Asia and Africa adopt a doctrine that there shall be no colonies established by any power on any of those great continents and that if, for example, any European power should establish a new colony somewhere in Africa we should regard it as an unfriendly act? It has been suggested that the Monroe doctrine would cover the protection of small nations. The Monroe doctrine has nothing to do with the rights of small or great powers as such. Its declared purpose was simply to protect the independence of all American States, great and small, from the interference of Europe and to prohibit European colonization. How can it be said that it concerns the rights of small States when Argentina and Brazil have taken control of Paraguay, when Chile has by force of arms annexed part of Peru, and when we took by conquest the larger part of Mexico, and no one, either at home or abroad, ever suggested that these acts constituted in any way an infraction of the Monroe doc-The Monroe doctrine defined our position and defined nobody else's position, and if we are to extend that doctrine to the other nations the only sanction it could carry would be that we should regard European colonization in all continents as an unfriendly act. Or does the President's proposition mean that the Monroe doctrine is to be extended to all the world and thereby be abandoned under the law laid down by John Fiske in regard to myths-that when we find a story of something which has happened everywhere we may be quite sure that it never happened anywhere-so that if we have a Monroe doctrine everywhere we may be perfectly certain that it will not exist anywhere? If we are to abandon the Monroe doctrine, this is one way of doing it.

I have tried very briefly to set forth the conditions precedent which the President says are essential to a lasting peace. have endeavored in a very general and imperfect way to "un-cover the realities" and to get rid of all "soft concealments." Now, having clearly in our minds these conditions precedent, vital to the establishment of a lasting peace which we are to help bring about, I desire to consider the part which we are to take in maintaining it. Let me say at the outset by way of preface that it seems to me unwise to entangle the question of what shall be done to make peace permanent after the conclusion of the present war with the peace which is to terminate this war. It confuses two wholly distinct questions, and is certainly injurious to the prospect of the success of any attempt to make the peace which comes at the end of this war permanent. It tends also to create ill feeling toward the United States on one side or the other, and perhaps on both, and the influence of the United States in behalf of the future peace of the world will not be increased but will, I fear, be sadly diminished if we endeavor, directly or indirectly, to meddle with the terms of the peace which shall conclude the present war, because in so doing we should inevitably take sides with one group of belligerents or with another.

Let us now consider what has already been done in behalf of mankind under the of world peace and what it is proposed we shall do in the ever and always force.

future, because that question has been forced upon us. All international associations or agreements for the promotion of the world's peace have hitherto been voluntary; that is, there has been no sanction behind the decisions of the international tribunals or behind the international agreements. If any signatory of the agreements or treaties, or any party to an arbitration, declined to be bound by a decision of the tribunal which had been created or by the provisions of an international convention, there was no means of compelling such signatory to abide by them, a fact which has been most dismally demonstrated since this war began. The chief practical result of international associations for the promotion of peace has taken the form of arrangements for the arbitration of disputed questions. The subjects of these arbitrations have been limited and the submission of the na-tions to the international tribunals and their decisions has been purely voluntary. Much good has been obtained by voluntary arbitration. Many minor questions which a hundred years ago led to reprisals, and sometimes to war, have been removed from the region of armed hostilities and brought within the range of peaceable settlement. Voluntary arbitrations, which have gone on in steadily increasing number and in the promotion of which on in steadily increasing number and in the promotion of which the United States has played a large, creditable, and influen-tial part, have now reached, as they were certain to do, their natural limits; that is, they have been made to include in prac-tice all the questions which can at present be covered by volun-tary arbitration. The efforts which have been made to carry voluntary arbitration beyond its proper sphere—like our recent treatile involving a very delay and attempting to deal with treaties involving a year's delay and attempting to deal with the vital interests of nations—are useless but by no means harmless. They are indeed distinctly mischievous, because in time of stress and peril no nation would regard them, and a treaty which can not be or will not be scrupulously fulfilled is infinitely worse than no treaty at all. No greater harm can be done to the cause of peace between the nations than to make treaties which will not be under all conditions scrupulously ob-The disregard of treaties is a most prolific cause of war. Nothing has done more to envenom feeling in the present war or to prolong it than the disregard of the treaty guaranteeing the neutrality of Belgium and the further disregard of The Hague conventions, for this has implanted in the minds of men the belief that treaties bring no settlement and are not worth the paper upon which they are written; that the only security of peace is to be found in the destruction of the enemy and in placing an opponent in a physical condition where he is unable to renew war, because there is no assurance of safety in a duly ratified treaty.

If, then, voluntary arbitration and voluntary agreements, by convention or otherwise, without any sanction, have reached their limits, what is the next step? There is only one possible advance, and that is to put a sanction behind the decision of an international tribunal or behind an agreement of the nations; in other words, to create a power to enforce the decree of the international courts or the provisions of the international agree-There is no other solution. I have given a great deal of thought to this question and I admit that at first it seemed to me that it might be possible to put force behind the world's The peace and order of towns and cities, of states and nations, are all maintained by force. The force may not be displayed-usually there is no necessity for doing soorder exists in our towns, in our cities, in our States, and in our Nation, and the decrees of our courts are enforced solely because of the existence of overwhelming force behind them. It is known that behind the decrees of the courts of the United States there is an irresistible force. If the peace of the world is to be maintained as the peace of a city or the internal peace of a nation is maintained, it must be maintained in the same way-by force. To make an agreement among the nations for the maintenance of peace and leave it to each nation to decide whether its force should be used in a given case to prevent war between two or more other nations of the world, does not advance us at all; we are still under the voluntary system. There is no escape from the conclusion that if we are to go beyond purely voluntary arbitration and purely voluntary agreements, actual international force must be placed behind the decisions or the agreements. There is no halfway house to The system must be either voluntary or there must be force behind the agreement or the decision. It makes no difference whether that force is expressed by armies and navies, or by economic coercion, as suggested by Sir Frederick Pollock. It is always force, and it is of little consequence whether the recalcitrant nation is brought to obedience by armed men and all the circumstance of war, or by commercial ruin, popular suffering and perhaps starvation, inflicted by the major force of mankind under the direction of the League for Peace. It is

Everyone must feel, as I do, the enormous importance of securing in some way the peace of the world and relieving the future of humanity from such awful struggles as that which is now going on in Europe, but if the only advance is to be made through the creation of an international force we are brought face to face with the difficulties of that system. The President sees this clearly. He proposes that we should adhere to a league for peace and then says:

It will be absolutely necessary that a force be created as a guarantor of the permanency of the settlement so much greater than the force of any nation now engaged or any alliance hitherto formed or projected that no nation, no probable combination of nations could face or withstand it. If the peace presently to be made is to endure, it must be a peace made secure by the organized major force of mankind.

Nothing could be plainer or more direct than that statement, and if we are to advance from the voluntary stage it must be. as the President says, by a league for peace behind which is the organized major force of mankind. I fully agree with the President that if we are to have a league such as he describes and are to enforce peace it must be done in just the way he has stated. As a general proposition nothing could be more attractive for those who desire the peace of the world. I confess that when I first began to consider it some two years ago it presented great attractions to me, but the more I have thought about it the more serious the difficulties in the way of its ac-complishment seem to be. This is a matter which can not be determined by verbal adherence to a general principle. Every-thing here depends upon the details. In the first place, a league to enforce the peace of the world and create a major force of mankind to carry out the purposes of the league must be made by treaty or convention among the nations agreeing, ment must be of the most solemn and binding kind, The agree-When disputes arise among nations, whether such nations are members of the lengue or not, those disputes must either be determined by an international tribunal created by the treaties agreed to by the members of the league, or they must be settled by representatives of the league after due consideration. So far all is simple. It is no new thing to create international tribunals or to make agreements as to methods to be employed in war, the rights of neutrals, and the many other subjects how covered by the voluntary Hague conventions. The first difficulty comes when the league is confronted by the refusal of a nation involved in dispute with another nation to abide by the decision of the league when that decision has been rendered by an international tribunal, or in any other way. Submission to such a decision can only be compelled as submission to a decision of the court is compelled—by force—in this case the organized major force of mankind. If, therefore, a decision has been made in a dispute between nations by the tribunal and authority of the league, all the members of the league are bound by their treaties to contribute their share toward the enforcement of the decision, and if a recalcitrant nation resists, it means war and the vindication of the power of the league which control of the major force of organized mankind. which has the The authorities of the league would, of necessity, have the power to call on every member of the league to send out its quota to the forces of the league, and the nations forming the league would find themselves, of necessity, involved in war.

The first question that would occur to any one of us is what the numbers of the league force will be. I will not venture a guess myself, but I will quote the opinion of Prof. Albert Bushnell Hart, the distinguished historian, a close student and high authority on all American policies and a most friendly critic of the President's address. In a very interesting article in the New York Times of January 28, 1917, Prof. Hart says:

He (the President) does incline toward the general plan which is pushed by the League to Enforce Peace. For, he says: "It will be absolutely necessary that a force be created as a guarantor of the permanency of the settlement so much greater than the force of any nation now engaged, or any alliance hitherto formed or projected, that no nation, no probable combination, could face or withstand it."

If that means anything definite, it means an international police force of not less than 5,000,000, men, in which the share of the United States would be at least 500,000.

There is the estimate of a dispassionate and competent observer. Will it not be worth while to pause a moment before we commit ourselves to an army of 500,000 men, to be held ready for war at the pleasure of other nations in whose councils we shall have but one vote if we are true to the President's policy of the equality of nations?

Arrangements would have to be made for the command of the forces of the lengue, and the commander would have to be taken from some one of the signatory nations. The quota or units of the international army and navy would have to be inspected at least annually. The inspectors would be of necessity officers of the league's army and navy. Are we ready to have our Army and Navy inspected and reported upon at regular intervals by the officers of foreign services? It may be said by those who wish to have the world's peace assured by force, without using force to do it, why conjure up these phantoms of unpleasant possibilities? My reply is that they are not phantoms but simply the realities which it is our duty to uncover and upon which the whole scheme is founded. can not make effective a league for peace, "supported by the organized major force of mankind," by language or high-sounding phrases, which fall so agreeably upon the ear, when there is no thought behind it. The forces of the league must consist of an army and navy. They must have rifles and machine guns and cannon, battleships and battle cruisers, submarines and aeroplanes, and all the terrific machinery of modern war. They can not set that machinery in motion by "calling spirits from the vasty deep" like Glendower. They must have men of flesh and blood to man their ships and fire their guns, and these men must be officered and commanded. Then when they order these forces to move they can enforce peace, and they will do it by war, if necessary, in which each member of the league must bear its part. Representatives of the league would thus be vested with the authority to make war and to put the league forces under the control of some commander whom they should select.

If we are to adhere to the principle of the equality of nations laid down by the President, each nation, great and small, having equality of rights, would have an equal voice in the decision of the league, and a majority would set the forces of the league in motion. It might happen that the majority would be composed of the smaller and weaker nations, who, if they are to have equality of rights, would thus be enabled to precipitate the greater nations into war, into a war perhaps with one of the greatest nations of the league. In the present state of human nature and public opinion is it probable that any nation will bind itself to go to war at the command of other nations and furnish its army and navy to be disposed of as the majority of other nations may see fit? It seems to me that it is hardly possible, and yet in what other way can we come to the practical side of this question? In what other way are you to enforce the decisions of the league? If you undertake to limit the questions of disputes between nations which the league shall decide, you will not be able to go beyond the limits already imposed in voluntary arbitration, and there will be no need of force. If a real advance is to be made, you must go beyond those limitations, you must agree to submit to the decision of the league questions which no nation will now admit to be arbitrable. You would be compelled, if a decree of the league were resisted, to go to war without any action on the part of Congress and wholly on the command of other nations. We are all anxious to promote peace in every possible way, but if we are to maintain the peace of the world by force it can only be maintained in the way I have described, and no amount of shouting about the blessings of peace will relieve us from the obligations or the necessities imposed by putting force behind the peace of the world as we put it behind the peace of a city.

Let us now consider this plan from our own point of view alone and with reference solely to the United States. The policy of the United States hitherto has been the policy laid down by Washington and its corollary expressed in the message of President Monroe. Washington declared that we had a set of interests separate from those of Europe and that European political questions did not concern us. Monroe declared that we had a set of questions which did not concern Europe, and that, as we did not meddle with Europe, Europe must not meddle with us. These doctrines were approved and stated with great force and explicitness by Jefferson. From the time of their enunciation these policies have been followed and adhered to by the United I have the greatest possible reverence for the precepts of Washington; no wiser, no more far-seeing man ever lived. only wish that we had followed all his precepts as closely as we have that which he laid down as to our relations with Europe. But I have no superstition in regard to Washington's policy, nor do I think he had. He set forth his policy under conditions not unlike those which now exist, and he stated very explicitly that we should not involve ourselves in any way in the ordinary vicissitudes of European politics. I think he meant that we should hold ourselves aloof and that this should be our guiding rule. I am far from thinking that the man who won the Revo-lution largely through the alliance with France would have suggested that there could be no possible situation in which it might not be well for us to form an alliance with some other nation or nations. But that situation certainly has hitherto never arisen. The wisdom of Washington's policy, supplemented by that of Monroe, has been demonstrated by the experience of more than a century, and this at least must be said, that we should not depart from it without most powerful reasons and without knowing exactly where that departure would lead.

We are now invited to depart from it by giving our adherence to a league for peace when the present war closes, without knowing how far it is proposed to go or what is to be demanded of us. If an effective league for peace among the nations is to be made it must be one backed by the force which the President has described. Are we prepared to commit ourselves to a purely general proposition without knowing where we are going or what is to be demanded of us, except that we shall be compelled to furnish our quota of military and naval forces to the service of a league in which we shall have but one voice? We are asked to place ourselves in a position where our military forces could be used for war by the decree of other nations. This would be a very momentous step. Surely we ought to pause and consider very carefully and know every detail before we commit ourselves to any vague, general propositions involving such serious results and responsibilities.

The first service which the United States can render to the cause of peace is to preserve its own. I do not mean within its own borders, but to preserve its peace with the other nations of the earth. This can be done in only one way-by the most absolute and scrupulous observance of every treaty or agreement that we enter into; by the termination of all treaties for arbitration, which we know well we should not under certain conditions and in time of stress regard, for no such war-breeding treaties ought to cumber the ground; and, lastly, by the establishment of such national defenses, both by land and sea, as to insure our country, so far as it can be done, from wanton attack. When we have taken steps to insure our own peace and have national defenses sufficient for that purpose, the next step, if we are to become members of this league for peace, would be to put our national forces, or a portion of them, at the disposition of the league under conditions established by the terms of the treaty which creates the league. If we are not prepared to take these obligations; if we are not ready to submit questions which we consider of vital interest to the decision of the league; if we are not fully prepared to carry out all our obligations which a league for peace would necessarily require, we had better restrict ourselves to the voluntary arbitration, which we know can be carried out, until the people of the United States are ready to go further. A league for peace has a most encouraging sound, but this is altogether too grave a question to be satisfied with words. We must realize that a league for peace means putting force behind peace and making war on any nation which does not obey the decisions of the It may be that the world's peace can be secured in this manner, but we should not attempt it without a full appreciation of just what it involves. Effective leagues for peace can not be sustained by language alone nor by moral suasion as their only weapons. I reiterate with all possible emphasis that when they pass beyond the present voluntary stage they must be sustained by men and arms, and if we are ready to assume that responsibility then we may proceed to take the necessary steps, but not otherwise.

Let me take two examples of questions which we must be prepared to face as members of a league for peace "supported by the major force of mankind." If, as I have already said, such a league is formed, it must deal with questions of vital interest and go beyond the limitations of voluntary agreements, for if it does not there will be no advance on the present conditions. Assume that such a league has been formed, with the powers which I have outlined. China and Japan, we will say, acting on the principles of the brotherhood of man which this league is to embody, come before the representatives of the league and demand for their people the right of free emigration to Canada, Australia, and New Zealand, which now practically exclude them. Suppose the league decides that the people of China and Japan ought not to be deprived of the right to migrate anywhere, and that Canada, Australia, and New Zealand, backed by England, decline to accept this decision. The league will then proceed to enforce its decision, and we shall find ourselves obliged to furnish our quota to a force which will compel the admission of Asiatic labor to Canada. Are we prepared to make war upon Canada in such a cause as this, our quota of the forces of the league perhaps being under the orders of a Japanese commander in chief? Let us turn the question the other way. Suppose the Asiatic powers demand the free admission of their labor to the United States, and we resist, and the decision of the league goes against us, are we going to accept it? Is it possible that anyone who wishes to preserve our standards of life and labor can be drawn into a scheme, veiled by glit-tering and glancing generalities, which would take from us our sovereign right to decide alone and for ourselves the vital question of the exclusion of Mongolian and Asiatic labor? These are not fanciful cases drawn from the region of the imagination. They are actual, living questions of the utmost vitality and peril to-day. In them is involved that deepest of human instincts which seeks not only to prevent an impossible competition in labor but to maintain the purity of the race. Are we prepared to make any agreement which would put us in such a position as that? Before we give our adhesion to a league for peace let us consider all these contingencies. The time will not be wasted which we give to such consideration.

I hear already the clamor of those who have been shricking for peace at any price and denouncing all armaments, rising around us with the passionate demand that we shall imme-diately join a league for peace, about the details of which they neither know nor care, but which will compel the establish-ment of large naval and military forces and which may plunge us into war in any quarter of the globe at any moment at the bidding of other nations. Such is the magic of a word to those who are content with vocal sounds and ask only that the word they love be shouted with sufficient loudness. But they, too, if they persist, will meet the day when words are vain, when there is no help or shelter in language, and when they must face relentless, unforgiving realities. I know well the question which can be put to me, and probably will be put to me here and elsewhere: "Are you, then, unwilling to use the power and influence of the United States for the promotion of the permanent peace of the world?" Not at all; there is nothing that I have so much at heart. But I do not, in my eagerness to promote the permanent peace of the world, desire to involve this country in a scheme which may create a situation worse than that which now exists. Sometimes it is better to "bear the ills we have than fly to others that we know not of." There are measures which will promote peace and which are wholly practicable. The first and most important is the protection of our own peace against foreign attack. That can only be done by national defense, and we have no adequate national defense now. We have no means of repelling the invasion of a great power as it must be repelled, and such weakness, combined with great wealth, constitutes an invitation and a temptation to war. Against that danger we should insure ourselves by adequate national flefenses, and by reducing the danger of war being forced upon us we to that extent promote the peace of mankind and we likewise put ourselves in a position where our influence and power in the world for the maintenance of general peace would be enormously increased. The next thing to which we ought to address ourselves on the conclusion of this war should be the rehabilitation and reestablishment of international law. International law represents a great mass of customs and usages which have become law and which have been observed, cited, and referred to by the nations. International law has had an ever-increasing power in guiding and controlling the conduct of nations toward each other. The fact that it has been violated and disregarded in many instances during the present conflict is no reason for adopting the counsel of despair and saying that it is of no value and must be abandoned. It is of enormous value and should be restored and upbuilt on the conclusion of this war with all the energy and influence which we can bring to bear. We should try also, within the necessary and natural limits, to extend the use of voluntary arbitration, so far as possible, and create, as we can well do, a powerful public opinion behind the system and behind the maintenance of peace. We can also do much in urging a general reduction of armaments by all nations.

It may be said that these are but slight improvements and but moderate advances. This may all be true, but what I propose has at least this merit-it is not visionary, and I suggest nothing which is not practical and reasonable and which will not, within its limitations, do substantial good. If there is any way in which we can go further without creating a worse condition nobody will be more rejoiced than I; but I do not wish to plunge blindly forward, misled by phrases and generalities, into undertakings which threaten worse results than the imperfect conditions now existing. We are as a people altogether too prone to be satisfied with words; to believe that we advance the cause of peace or any good cause merely by shouting for it. When we approach such questions as are involved in our relations with the other nations of the earth and such a mighty issue as the maintenance of the world's peace, to be misled by words and to take words for deeds would be a fatal error. Whatever we decide to do, let us know precisely what we are doing and what we may reasonably expect.

As an example of what I mean, let me call your attention to the resolution offered by the Senator from Idaho. It meets with my full approval at the present time, for I now see in this tortured and distracted world nothing but peril in abandoning our long and well established policies, which have behind them not only the authority of Washington and Jefferson and Adams and Monroe but a long acceptance by the American people.

Let it not be forgotten that if we pass that resolution we close the door for the time being, so far as the Senate is concerned, upon a proposition that we should join a league for peace backed by the organized major force of mankind. This resolution commits us without reserve to the policy, in regard to foreign nations, of Washington, Monroe, and Jefferson, whose statements are as clear as the unclouded sun at noonday, and are not collections of double-meaning words under which men can hide and say they mean anything or nothing. Let there be no mistake about what we are doing in this direction. not have our action misunderstood there any more than I should wish to see a mistake made if resolutions were adopted in a sense to which I was opposed. There is no lurking place for a league for peace "supported by the organized major force of mankind" in the sentences of George Washington and Thomas Jefferson set forth in the preamble to which the resolution of the Senator from Idaho declares our allegiance.

This war will end; the passions of mankind will die down; individual ambitions will vanish with the evanescent beings who cherish them; but the Republic and the American people will remain. Let us beware how we take any steps which may precipitate this country and the people who are to come after us, and whose inheritance it is, into dangers which no man can foresee. We can not secure our own safety or build up the lasting peace of the world upon peace at any price. The peace of the world, to be enduring, must be based on righteousness at any cost. [Applause in the galleries.]

exhibit manifestations of approval or disapproval.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I take the liberty of inserting in the Record at this time extracts from a very interesting address delivered by Henry Cabot Lodge, bachelor of arts, doctor of philosophy, and bachelor of laws, a few months ago. I quote from him, as follows, on the subject of the league of peace:

I think that is a remarkable record-

Referring to arbitration treaties-

We have carried the principle of voluntary arbitration to its limit, and it is well to recognize that it has a limit, because when we undertake to put into treaties for voluntary arbitration questions which no nation, when the stress comes, will submit to arbitration, we do not advance the cause of peace, but quite the reverse; for we do vast mischief by making treaties which we know in our hearts we are not prepared to carry out when the time comes. The limit of voluntary arbitration has, I think, been reached. Much has been achieved by it. It has taken out of the range of arms a large mass of questions which once were causes, frequently of war, constantly of reprisals, and by the general consent of civilized mankind has put them before a tribunal and had them there decided. If we have reached the limit of voluntary arbitration what is the next step? I think the next step is that which this league proposes, and that is to put force behind international peace. We may not solve it in that way it can be solved in no other.

Omitting a portion, I proceed to read upon page 106 of the report of the proceedings of the League to Enforce Peace, as follows:

It was a year ago that in delivering the chancellor's address at Union College I made an argument on this theory: That if we were to promote international peace at the close of the present terrible war, if we were to restore international law as it must be restored, we must find some way in which the united forces of the nations could be put behind the cause of peace and law. I said then that my hearers might think that I was picturing a Utopia, but it is in the search for Utopias that great discoveries have been made. "Not failure, but low aim, is the crime."

Mr. LODGE and Mr. THOMAS addressed the Chair. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massa-

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am very much obliged to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] for reading those two statements of mine into the RECORD. I think they were very good statements. The Senator omitted to notice, however, that in my speech here this morning I very frankly stated that after the consideration I have given to the subject I have changed my mind upon it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I perhaps omitted to note that fact; but the speech from which I have quoted was delivered in May last. Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, because of the shortness of the session I have hesitated to join in the discussion of the President's address to the Senate. But since none of the appropriation bills are ready for consideration, I may be pardoned, since two addresses have been delivered to the Senate upon the subject, for adding something to the general discussion.

By way of preliminary, let me say, Mr. President, that the nations of the world are indebted to the President for voicing at this time the earnest and sincere desire for the close of the present awful conflict as soon as it is possible, and for suggesting the basis of a permanent peace. We may sympathize with allies or with Teutons; we may believe that there can be no permanent peace on this earth; we may doubt the wisdom or the policy of any suggested method of peace, but all peoples have that yearning for it which comes from a long travail of blood and tears; and the President, in concentrating their attention upon the subject and in directing their thought to the terms upon which a permanent peace can alone be founded, has powerfully promoted the cause of peace, has aroused the thoughts of men upon that mighty subject, and diverted them for the time from the excitements and the passions of the war.

The President speaks in behalf of a peace which will end the present war and prevent the recurrence of others. I have read his message many times, Mr. President, and each time with a clearer comprehension of his purpose, which I do not think has been adverted to upon this floor.

The message possesses three prominent features: The first, an announcement that with the terms of the peace to succeed the present war we can have nothing to do; the second, that a peace to be lasting must be founded upon the conditions which he outlines; and the last, that the conditions thus outlined are entirely in harmony with American policies and American traditions. He recognizes our common interest in a peace whose terms will permit us to aid in making it perpetually effective. The peace which may succeed the present war may or may not involve such conditions. If it does not, it will not be lasting; if it does, this Nation will be justified in using all of its strength and all of its power in maintaining it in common with other na-tions. Hence he speaks of the "duty of our Government in the days to come when it will be necessary to lay afresh and upon a new plan the foundations of peace among the nations. This presupposes that old plans of peace have failed in the past and that new plans, upon new foundations, are essential if war shall permanently cease.

We may, Mr. President, assert without the fear of successful contradiction that the foundations of every peace between nations since the dawn of civilization have proven impermanent and the peace based upon them has been but a truce. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Longs] has emphasized the fact that the longest period of peace since the fall of the Roman Empire was that which succeeded the treaty of Vienna of 1815, and which lasted for but 40 years. Some time ago I read the assertion that in the last 3,500 years only 350 were years of peace between the nations, and that the remainder of that immense period was disfigured by wars, sometimes of a general and at other times of a local nature. The President, therefore, is beyond question right when he declares that oif we are to establish a permanent peace "it will be necessary to lay afresh and upon a new plan the foundations of peace among the naand that the duty we owe to other nations requires us to state the conditions under which we may feel free to join the plan for maintaining it. His purpose, therefore, is to proclaim to the nations and peoples of the earth the conditions upon which, and upon which alone, this mighty Republic will join hands with the other nations in maintaining for all time harmonious relations with and between them; and without an observance of such conditions the inference plainly is that we can not do so. He asserts no right to any voice in determining what the terms of peace between the belligerents shall be, but he does direct their attention to the sort of peace that is worth guaranteeing, and such a peace to be lasting must be made so by the organized force of mankind.

It may be, Mr. President, that a peace supported only by the organized force of mankind may mean a peace disfigured and punctuated by many serious conflicts; but I fully agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that a combination of nations for the purpose of continuing harmonious relations between themselves and the rest of the world must have the sanction of a force behind it sufficiently formidable to make its decrees permanently effective. We know of no other manner in which organized society can maintain its laws, preserve and protect the lives of its members, and extend the protection of the community to the preservation of their rights and their property. In the last analysis every decree of mankind, whether domestic or foreign, must, if resisted, find its support in organized force. No Government without the power to enforce law and order can call itself a government; no Government without it can guarante the sanctity and protection of the laws to its meanest citizen; and therefore, Mr. President, whether permanent peace on this earth be a dream or a possible reality, the fundamental fact behind it all must be the ability somewhere to make the decrees, the treaties, the obligations, and the covenants between the nations effective as against those who for any cause would seek to disregard them.

The President announces that our contribution to that organized force requires a peace founded upon a community of interest, not a balance of power. Who doubts it? Every peace that has been declared between warring nations of Europe for centuries has been one in which each of them sought to establish and maintain a balance of power, an equilibrium so nearly adjusted, the one scale to the other, as automatically to continue harmonious relations between them, and by that means make their arrangements effective. But, Mr. President, no more dangerous and unstable basis for a lasting peace between the nations could be devised. The present war is in itself the most tremendously effective answer to its failure as a basis of the adjustment of differences between nations. A community of interest may be impossible, but balance of power as the basis of any treaty between the present warring nations should not, and can not, command the support, and certainly not the obligation, of this Government to aid in maintaining it.

The President also says, justly, that such a peace must be one between equals, not between victor and vanquished. The last have been the peace agreements of the past, and they have failed.

I am not now, Mr. President, discussing the soundness or the possibility of making these suggestions of the President effective; I am merely emphasizing the fact that the conditions which he outlined as a basis of lasting peace are fundamentally different from those underlying every peace of history, and that some other foundation is essential if the peace of the future is not to share the fate of those which have succeeded the wars of the past.

Mr. President, we know—it is human nature, and nations are aggregates of individuals—that a peace dictated by the victor to the vanquished leaves behind it the sting of hatred and resentment. In 1871 Prussia dictated its terms of peace to prostrate France and demanded heavy indemnities both of money and of territory. The wresting from France, as one of these terms, of the two great principalities of Alsace and Lorraine has been the fruitful cause of bitter animosity and deep-seated racial hatred between the Frenchman and the German from that date to this. On the one side the victor, in possession of what he had wrested from the vanquished, and on the other side the hope and the dream of the time that would come in the fullness of the nation's development when the wrong would be righted, the nation's honor restored, and the integrity of its territory reestablished. That feeling has done much, has been most potent, in creating this war and in determining its prosecution to final exhaustion.

I might mention other instances, Mr. President, but suffice it to say history reveals no exceptions. The peace imposed as the result of victory is a peace founded upon the sands, and is inevitably followed by a recurrence of hostilities whenever the time seems to be propitious or the occasion promising.

Such a peace, therefore, as may be lasting, the President says, must be one between equals, not between victor and vanquished. These last have been the peace agreements of the past and they have failed, and a peace between equals must be one founded on equality of right and may not fail. I might add, Mr. President, that the right must be based upon the common rather than the individual strength of the nations upon whose concert peace must depend. Moreover, such a peace as we can aid in enforcing must "recognize and accept the principle that governments derive all their just powers from the consent of the governed, and that no right anywhere exists to hand peoples about from sovereignty to sovereignty as if they were property." Otherwise, they will be inevitably upset.

Is not that true? Does not the entire history of the world justify the President in asserting that a peace founded upon any other principle will be inevitably upset? It may be that such a peace will not be enduring. It certainly is true that, if human experience is to be our guide, no peace of the past which has ignored that principle has proven lasting unless the vanquished has been utterly crushed or destroyed.

Mr. President, reference has been made in these discussions to the result of the Civil War in this country as a peace imposed by the victor upon the vanquished which has been lasting and beneficent. During the first few years of its existence, consequent upon the bitter animosities engendered by the war, it was indeed a peace imposed by a great conquering people upon a subjugated section. I am free to say that if those conditions had persisted, if the attitude of the North in 1866 and 1867 and 1868 and 1869 toward the South had become the settled, permanent policy of the Nation, the peace of 1865 would have disappeared long since and the hatreds and resentments born of those unequal and terrible conditions would have long ago involved this mighty people in renewed civil strife and bloodshed. But it became in time the peace of equals, a peace virtually without victory, a peace in which all rights of the vanquished were restored, a peace which enabled the conquered people again to take their place as parts of a common Nation, equal under the law, entitled to and enjoying all the privileges of a common Republic. It therefore has become an enduring peace, founded upon the principles and established by the common consent of the Nation.

When Britain finally overcame the South African Republics she gave to them a peace based largely upon the principle of the consent of the governed. She turned over that immense domain to those who had inhabited it, who had fought against her, and stretched over them the protecting shield of her own great power, while conferring upon them her own policy of liberty and self-government. That has proven a lasting peace, and the marvel of it is that within 20 years of its date the Boer fights side by side with the Briton in defense of the Empire, under the same flag, and against a common foe.

Empire, under the same flag, and against a common foe.

These are examples, Mr. President, which justify the Chief Magistrate in declaring that a peace without victory—that is, a peace in which the victor takes not the advantage of the conqueror but-gives to the vanquished that consideration to which it would be entitled were conditions reversed—is the peace that this Nation can aid in enforcing and making permanent, and the only peace which would justify such action.

The President says that we can aid in guaranteeing—and I do not assume to give his exact language—no peace which denies to nations a direct outlet to the great highways of the sea, for the freedom of the seas is the sine qua non of peace, equality, and cooperation. It has been asked this morning, Mr. President, whether this means that Paraguay and Bolivia and Switzerland must be given rights of way to the sea, and how these rights of way are to be determined and guaranteed. Attention is also directed to the fact that the President declares that the great peoples must possess these rights, and that there is a contradiction between the sentiments expressed in other parts of the message and that dealing with this particular subject.

Mr. President, this criticism might be sustained if we confined ourselves to a consideration of the first sentence relating to the subject. The President says:

So far as practicable, moreover, every great people now struggling toward a full development of its resources and of its powers should be assured a direct outlet to the great highways of the sea.

But he also says:

No doubt a somewhat radical reconsideration of many of the rules of international practice hitherto thought to be established may be necessary in order to make the seas indeed free and common in practically all circumstances for the use of mankind, but the motive for such changes is convincing and compelling. There can be no trust or intimacy between the peoples of the world without them. The free, constant, unthreatened intercourse of nations is an essential part of the process of peace and of development.

Taken, therefore, as a whole this suggestion of the President is universal. The fact that a nation has not a seacoast, the fact that between the sea and itself lie the territories of other nations, should not deny it that right of free intercourse, by ways of the sea, for which all nations are struggling, and without which there must ever be difficulty and friction between them.

Mr. President, from times immemorial the right to the use of the sea has been a right common to all mankind. The aspiration of every nation on earth for an outlet to the sea is inborn and unquenchable. No people and no country ever existed at any time which did not look forward with longing to an outlet upon the ocean, to contact with that great highway at the shores of which the dominion of men must cease, whose illimitable wilderness is subject to the common dominion by the common use of all the peoples of the earth.

A few years ago Serbia conquered an outlet to the sea. It was taken from her by the stronger power of Austria, when peace returned to her. The dream of Russia for centuries has been an ice-free port. She has always struggled for it. It is as essential to her people as the very air that they breathe. Without it she is isolated; with it she becomes one of the great family of nations. Her commerce is restricted, her progress is thwarted, her enterprise is dwarfed and crippled so long as she is kept from those outlets through which, and through which alone, she can mingle in full and unrestricted commercial intercourse with the other nations of the world. Half the battles that have been fought during the last century have had, among other things, that object—the right of access to the ocean—and with access to the ocean come all those privileges, all those opportunities, all those accessories to development which flow from the common use of that one highway of all the nations. It is therefore, Mr. President, the sine qua non, as the President has said, to any peace having sufficient basis of possible permanence to justify a league of nations of which we shall be one to make it effective and continuous.

Nor is a sense of safety and equality at all consistent with the building and maintaining of great preponderating armaments. Mr. President, the building of huge armaments by land and by sea, the constant growth of both during the past 25 years with the nations upon the Continent of Europe, the enormous burden which their expense has placed upon the productive energies of the people, the suspicion and resentment necessarily attendant upon their extension-these things have done as much to bring about the holocaust in Europe as any other one condition.

Great armaments are as inconsistent with the peace of nations as are armed individuals in communities inconsistent with peace in private life. It may be true that the arming of one nation prompts and requires the arming of others, so that none may be taken unaware; but we can not escape the fact that armaments designed for protection are a prime cause of modern wars. Of course, I know, Mr. President, that every expansion of our Army and of our Navy is designed to keep pace with the expansion of the armies and navies of other countries, as their continued expansions are prompted in turn by our own. I am also aware that the basis of all of them is the idea of national defense; but they lead to aggressions just as certainly as the law of gravitation operates; albeit, every nation engaged in this war is fighting a war of defense. None are aggressors. Each claims that its rights and its liberties have been invaded, and each is therefore upon the defensive. This ghastly apology for war and bloodshed, eagerly accepted by the peoples con-cerned, can not impose upon the enlightened judgment of mankind.

The President has therefore called attention to the fact that a peace worth preserving must be one involving a diminution of armaments by all the nations, so that this prime cause of international irritation may be reduced to the lowest unit consistent with the general purpose. With these essentials, there may be a peace worth enforcing, but without them no peace can long endure.

Mr. President, let me ask whether the arrangement that is proposed is one which, if it could be consummated, would receive the approval or disapproval of the American people?

Let us suppose that after this war shall be ended the nations meeting for the common purpose can agree upon a system of permanent peace based upon the principles and the conditions outlined in the message of the President of the United States. Is there a man or woman in this great Republic who would not be eager to contribute to its maintenance, who would not enthusiastically support the Government in announcing the American purpose to contribute with arms, if necessary, but certainly with the entire moral force and influence of the Nation, to its permanent continuance?

Think of it, Mr. President! A peace recognizing the freedom of the seas; a peace wherein the vanquished are given rights and authority and recognition, not as conquered but as equals; a peace wherein community of power succeeds the theory of balance of power; a peace in which armaments shall be limited; a peace recognizing the great principle underlying the Declara-tion of Independence, that all just powers are derived from the consent of the governed; a peace extending the principles of the Monroe doctrine-I care nothing for its specific limitationsto the political conduct of all the nations of the earth!

Why, Mr. President, this is one of the most lofty conceptions of a peace founded on righteousness that has ever fallen from the lips of a statesman. Some have said it is not a new one, and that is so; but for the first time the attention of the world is directed, by a man high in responsibility as the spokesman of a hundred millions of people, to conditions long ignored and disregarded, but which must be recognized and applied if the nations shall be and remain at peace with each other.

I dare not believe it possible of realization, Mr. President. have no rational hope that the nations now engaged in war, the majority of which are strangers to these lofty conceptions of duty and of government, can be induced to accept the President's proposal as the basis of an enduring or of any peace. The most we can hope for from this message is that the attention of the world will be focused upon the evanescence of previous peace arrangements and upon the necessity of adopting new conditions and new principles for their foundation if war is to be avoided hereafter. And the leaven of time will work so that, while we may not avail ourselves of these noble suggestions, the generations to come, perceiving their worth and their essentials, will adopt them as standards for the regulation of the conduct of the nations.

Mr. President, I regret that this address did not go a step further, for I can not rid myself of the opinion that were a peace possible between the present warring nations, were a peace treaty possible to all the nations of the earth embodying every concept of the President, it could not be a lasting peace; for freedom of the seas, valuable and essential as it is to any permanent arrangement of harmony between the nations, can not prove enduring or effective unless freedom of trade shall be recognized and established; and that is a dream to which no nation, until our modern conceptions of commercial conditions shall change fundamentally, would give its approval.

Mr. President, we must reflect, in considering a great proposal of this sort, that modern wars have been commercial wars. They have been the outgrowth of trade rivalries and competitions, struggles between nations for the traffic of others. has brought them into contact and collision, resulting in war, in bloodshed, and breach of treaties. You can no more prevent controversy when the trades of the nations are surrounded by legislative restrictions which mean nothing more nor less than trade wars than you can prevent one man from striking back when he is struck by another. Modern commerce breeds controversy and conflict; controversy and conflict breed misunderstandings and resentments; and these in turn breed war and rumors of war.

What Germany wanted was a place in the sun. What England feared was the vast expansion of Germany's international com-These are the underlying causes of this tremendous conflict, as they have been of minor ones in the past, and as they will be of those to come. Not, Mr. President, until the nations, suffering and desolate, shall adopt the ideas and sentiments of the President of the United States-not until trade between the nations shall be as the trade between the States of this Union has been ever since its foundation-can conflicts between nations be avoided and all peoples remain at peace

So I am unable to see wherein we can hope or expect that the application of the President's doctrine to the great struggle now waging across the seas can be made as effective as he believes it may be, unless there be a further recognition of the inevitable consequence of trade restrictions placed by nations upon each other to safeguard their own interests in the struggle for universal trade.

Why are we building a Navy here? Why is the President urging us to pass an enactment under which our merchants and manufacturers may combine to secure themselves against the competition of other nations in the struggle sure to be made for the traffic of the world? Simply because, Mr. President, there is an instinctive and inevitable recognition of the fact that commerce breeds hostilities, that protection requires armaments, and that wars are inevitable through the conflicts which come between rival national interests abroad.

But, Mr. President, there is another feature of this message to which I referred-and I shall take but little time in discussing it-I refer to the fact that the principles suggested and the plan outlined by the President are in entire accord with American principles and American policies. He has departed in no sense from any of them. He has outlined the harmony existing between every one of them and our traditions and our policies. It is true, Mr. President, that we have kept free from what are called entangling alliances; that we have a policy distinct unto ourselves; that we are the guardians of the nations of the New World; and that our isolation during the first century of our existence has been almost complete. It is true that we have not been involved in the contests of other nations with each other, and that we have pursued a course consistent with the views and the advice of the first Chief Magistrate.

But, Mr. President, we have nevertheless been unconsciously expanding. Our growing strength and wealth and power, our political and financial importance, the expansion of our trade relations, have for years brought us into ever-increasing and more frequent contact with other nations, and with the interests which they represent, with the policies they pursue. We have taken part in many councils. Ours was one of the prominent members of The Hague conventions. We participated in the Declaration of London. We had representatives at the conference at Algeciras, through whose ministrations war between France and Germany was happily averted. We are told, and I do not know that it has ever been contradicted, that we have become a world power, and that our attitude as a world power is one justification for the constantly increasing demands for a large Army and Navy. This war has made New York City the financial center of the world. We are becoming a great creditor Nation. We propose to establish a merchant fleet upon the seas, and have legislated for it. We are reaching out for the trade of South America and the Orient. We are concerned at the invasion of Chinese territory by Japan. In 1898 we went to war with Spain, and one of the conditions there imposed was the transfer of the Philippine Islands to the Government of the United States. This was a grave injustice. We there, Mr. President, in my judgment, committed an act not only irreconcilable with the principles and institutions of this Republic but we did violence to that Monroe doctrine which is the common sentiment of the people of this country and the common principle of all political parties.

We are therefore, Mr. President, occupying a far different position in world affairs than in the days of Washington and of Jefferson, far different from the days immediately succeeding the Civil War. In the meantime mechanical inventions of all kinds are making the world smaller. There is no longer isolation anywhere. The telephone and telegraph penetrate all the dark continents of the world. Modern methods of locomotion are as familiar to travelers in the wilderness of Africa and Australia as they are upon the streets of an American city. The wireless telegraph flashes its message through the air and is caught by listening ears the world over. The President the other day listened to the voice of the operator of a wireless telephone at Honolulu. The air has been conquered. Airships now float above us, sometimes bent upon missions of peace, more frequently used as destructive engines of war. With all these conditions, Mr. President, it is as impossible for the Government of the United States to remain isolated, to be any longer unconcerned with the affairs of the world, as it is for it to become stationary and cease growing altogether.

I commend to the consideration of the Senate an article in the North American Review for February entitled "Isolation and other policies," consisting of seven pages. It is a well-considered article upon this subject. It calls attention to the fact that the warnings and advice of Gen. Washington and the policies of Mr. Jefferson had reference to the internal affairs of the older countries and could not have been applied, as they were not applied in practice, to their external affairs. In the letter which Mr. Jefferson wrote to President Monroe, wherein was outlined his construction of the afterwards celebrated Monroe doctrine, and which was succeeded by the message of December, 1823, outlining that immortal policy, Mr. Jefferson said:

One nation, most of all, could disturb us in this pursuit; she now offers to lead, aid, and accompany us in it. * * * Great Britain is the nation which can do us the most harm of any or all on earth, and with her on our side we need not fear the whole world. With her, then, we should most sedulously cherish a cordial friendship, and nothing would tend more to knit our affections than to be fighting once more, side by side, in the same cause. * * If we can effect a division in the body of the European powers, and draw over to our side its most powerful member, surely we should do it.

The writer says:

In other words, as already suggested, we were to seek an Anglo-American alliance with which to oppose and probably to fight the holy alliance. That was the policy of Jefferson.

Mr. Jefferson was a many-sided man, Mr. President. He was informed on many subjects, and at different periods of his life he was an advocate of widely different views of things which had been the object of his previous attention. He was always progressive.

To claim therefore, Mr. President, that because the President's outline of a possible permanent peace disturbs our international relations as they have heretofore existed, and in conception at least requires us to embark upon a wider field of political activity, is merely to shut our eyes to existing conditions from which we can not escape.

Hence, Mr. President, there can be no question but that any peace to be made which shall be permanent in its character must address itself to the American idea of justice and of right, must appeal to the people on this side of the ocean and to all of them, or it will only amount to a truce between the nations, a breathing spell, to be followed by greater horrors yet to come.

If, then, this outline of a possible permanent peace not only harmonizes with American Institutions and American traditions but proposes to make them the basis of government everywhere as outlined in treaty relations, it merely recognizes that in the future as in the immediate past we shall in all our relations, both domestic and foreign, be intimately concerned and affected by any arrangements which may succeed an armistice, which I hope will soon be declared.

Mr. President, some time ago there was a meeting of representatives of the allied powers in Paris, whose purpose was to outline an arrangement regarding trade relations subsequent to the war, the prime object of which was to exclude the Teutonic Empires from all the markets of the allies and if possible from all the markets of the world. Prior to or about that time we were informed of the outlines of a zollverein between the Teutonic Empires, evidently having the same purpose in view Teutonic Empires, evidently having the same purpose in view.

A peace, Mr. President, imposed by the victor upon the vanquished, if these agreements are of any consequence whatever, will be a peace designed to make them effective in behalf of the dictating power's and against the interests of those which are vanquished. Have we no interest in this? Must we abandon our foreign trade? Must we forego all efforts to expand it? Must we declare and put into operation a policy of continental isolation, and permit this trade war, for that is what it will be, to go on, affecting us and all other nations now neutral as well as those which are immediately concerned in the treaty of peace? Can we, if we view our position from the low standard of our material commercial welfare in the future, expect that any arrangement between the nations closing the war can be made that does not affect us directly or indirectly?

Yet when I listened to the eloquent speech of the Senator from Massachusetts this morning I wondered whether, consistent with the policies and counsels of another age, bound by the policies which were then obvious and essential, we should with folded hands stand idly by and permit the great procession to pass us, carrying with it our interests, our welfare, our future, without concerning ourselves about it, without suggestions as to what the world's permanent peace must be, without proclaiming to the warring nations that their negotiations and peace arrangements must be satisfactory to us if they are expected to endure forever.

Mr. President, it was not only the right but the duty of the Chief Magistrate of this Nation to proclaim from this Chamber, in the presence of that body which, with himself, divides the responsibility of framing and ratifying treaties with foreign powers, the conditions of a desired and enduring peace.

Mr. President, I have spoken longer than I intended. Let me say by way of summary that the views now under discussion are of the loftiest and noblest character. They focus the attention of mankind upon the great subject of peace and the terms and conditions which must underlie it if it is to become permanent, and that it will be productive of immense benefit by diverting the thoughts of the people away from the excitements and passions of conflict and focusing them upon the great cause of international harmony, that it will hasten the good day when the armies will be abandoned, when this carnival of slaughter and destruction will end, and when the desolated nations of Europe will slowly rise to their feet once more and begin the slow, perilous, and arduous work of rehabilitation.

Let me say further that beyond this material benefit I doubt whether it will be possible to secure as fundamentals in any peace arrangement the greater part of the principles for which the President contends. Human nature is the same as it always has been. Man is a fighting animal. He is a selfish animal. He loves and hates; he fears and he hopes. As the units, so the nations are. The things which have caused war in the past are the things which will cause war in the future. Competition between peoples, the racial hatreds existing everywhere, the suspicions and resentments engendered through commercial strife, differences of understanding, and, above all, increasing armaments—these, Mr. President, will make war a part of the lot of the human race until its nature shall be greatly changed, profoundly altered, by the civilizing and humane tendencies of the future, if they can be altered at all. Men fight their wars until exhaustion or victory comes. They rest at arms until upon some fresh occasion, forgetting the horrors and desolation and blood-shed of the past, they spring to arms once more.

But these fundamental principles upon which alone a lasting peace can be founded, now brought to the attention of the people of all the world, and their discussion and consideration of them, must be fraught with good. I trust that it will hasten the day when the sound of cannon and the echoes of conflict will disappear, and when the nations of the earth may once more dwell for a time in peace together.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Montana if he will agree to lay aside the unfinished business in order that I may call up the fortifications appropriation bill.

Mr. MYERS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the fortifications appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Lee of Maryland in the chair). The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 20453) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLean] is absent on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Thompson in the chair). Fifty-six Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill. Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment, which send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 13, line 6, after the word "acts," it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That the Chief of Ordnance is authorized, in his discretion, to enter into a contract for the lease of such suitable space for a period not to exceed five years, at an annual rental not to exceed $15,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRYAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.
The Secretary. After the word "Government," on page 13, line 15, it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the section and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

When such can be determined by consideration of previous or current manufacture of the same or similar materiel: Provided, however, That whenever in the opinion of the President the situation is such as to justify such action, he may waive the limitations contained in this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRYAN. I now offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 13, after the word "arsenals," in line 24, it is proposed to strike out the words "most economical rate of production" and to insert "full capacity upon a basis of eight hours' work per day."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to. The Chair hears none.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, that completes the committee amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish briefly to refer to the proviso found in section 6 of the bill. That proviso refers to what is commonly known as the Taylor system, and also provides for the prevention of the payment of a premium or bonus to any employee in addition to his regular wages. This is the first time that such a provision has been put into a fortifications appropriation bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It was in the fortifications bill last year. Mr. SMOOT. Perhaps, Mr. President, I should have said last year was the first time such a provision was inserted, although I notice that the testimony, which I hold in my hand, says that this is the first time it was inserted.

I do not intend, Mr. President, to ask for a record vote upon this matter, because I do not believe time enough has elapsed since the vote of the Senate when this matter was last under consideration for the country to really understand what it means or for Senators to have had an opportunity to investigate the question as to what it has cost the Government since this provision was placed in operation in the different appropriation bills. I desire, however, to take just a short time, so that it may appear in the RECORD, to read a part of the testimony which was given before the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate touching this subject. I read from the hearings before that committee as follows:

Senator JONES. That proviso is the same as we have put in several times heretofore. It has pretty nearly become a policy.

The Senator from Washington had reference to the proviso then in section 6 of the bill.

then in section 6 of the bill.

Gen. Crozier. The current measure is the first fortifications bill in which it appears.

Senator Jones. Yes; but it has been in the military bill and in the naval bill.

Senator Bryan. We have thrashed it out pretty thoroughly, General. It was in the naval bill and the year before it was in the Army bill.

Gen. Crozier. As I say, it is in the fortifications bill for the first time this year. I do not intend to take up your time by going over the same ground with regard to that proviso as I have gone over before, but I thought that if this provision is left in the bill it ought to be left there in the light of some little information which I can give you concerning the effect which it would have.

Senator Jones. I think we ought to have that.

Gen. Crozier. I instructed the commanding officer at the Watertown Arsenal to keep careful records of the effects of the provisions, and particularly of the provision forbidding the payment of any premium or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages.

or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages.

Senator Jones. That is the only place under this bill where this provision operates, practically?

Gen. Crozier. It is the only one where it has really been effective, because the Watertown Arsenal is the only arsenal where I had been paying these premiums. I have been paying at other arsenals upon the piecework system, and that has been held by the comptroller not to be forbidden by this legislation.

The difference between piecework payment and a premium payment, as it has been defined in the question which was asked the comptroller, is this, that the piecework payment is a payment for output only, without any guaranteed minimum. A man gets so much a piece, and if he makes a greater number he gets a larger sum and if he makes a smaller number he gets a smaller sum, but there is no limit either way. A premium payment is a payment for output, but with a minimum limit. That is to say, the workman's day's wages are guaranteed to him in any case, and then he is given a payment for output in such a way that if he exceeds a certain amount he gets a premium, bonus, or cash reward in addition to his regular wages, and therefore what this provision has prevented is the possibility of guaranteeing to the workman a minimum, but it does not prohibit a mode of paying which does not set a minimum. In other words, the thing it prohibits is the thing which is most advantageous to the workman. However, that is not the point upon which I wanted to speak. That is just a definition. Senator Jones, I am glad to know that the comptroller held this provision not to apply to piecework.

Gen. Crozier. Yes; he has held that, and we are paying on the piecework basis at most arsenals and for a very large amount of the work we are doing. Practically all the work in the manufacture of rifles and small-arms ammunition, practically all the work in the manufacture of rifles and small-arms ammunition, practically all the work in the manufacture of rifles and small-arms

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Utah if he read a statement as coming from me to the effect, as I understood it, that I was glad that the comptroller had held that this provision did not apply to piecework? Mr. SMOOT. The record of the testimony shows that the Senator stated:

I am glad that the comptroller held this provision not to apply to piecework.

Mr. JONES. That is a mistake. I did not say that. I said I was surprised to know that he had held that it did not apply to piecework.

In explanation of the matter just read, Mr. Mr. SMOOT. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Washington, as he well knows, that the testimony has not been printed and the transcript from which I read is just as it came from the hands of the reporter.

'Mr. JONES. Yes; and no one has had an opportunity to look over it and to make corrections. The reporter evidently understood me to say "I was glad," when, as a matter of fact, I said "I was surprised."

Mr. SMOOT. I will continue the reading of the hearing, as

At the Watertown Arsenal, where this premium has been forbidden, we have kept some records of certain jobs that had been done under the premium system and that were afterwards done under the regular day-rate system, and I have here a list of them which I think I might leave with you, Mr. Chairman. You can publish this table in the record if it is worth while.

Senator Jones. I would like to have it in the record.

Senator BRYAN. Is it in such shape that it could be printed in the record?

Senator DRYAN. Is it in such shape that it could be printed in the record?

Gen. Crozier. I think so. These figures explain themselves pretty well. I will call attention to one or two cases only. The first case is one in which a workman had a job of retapping the bases of some 4.7-inch shells, and on the premium system he did 100 of them in 10 hours. After he had finished those 100, this new law came into operation and he was given another 100 for the regular day wages, and he took 22.95 hours to do that 100. To do 100 shells he took in one case 10 hours and in the other case 22.95 hours. If he had taken seven and five one-hundredths of an hour more, it would have been exactly three times as long that he took to do the same work in the second case as in the first case. He carned 16½ per cent premium above his regular pay when he had this job on premium, and during the preceding six months had averaged 35 per cent premium over and above his day's pay whenever he was given these premium jobs. But

I ask to print the entire table in the RECORD following my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be

Mr. SMOOT. I continue reading from the testimony of Gen.

Crozier;

Senator Bryan. I want to get that a little more concretely, if I can. What was his day's wage, then, before this proviso went into effect? What was his average day's wage? Have you got that?

Gen. Crozier. I have not got that here; but I suppose that man would be such as would get something like $3 a day.
Senator Bryan. What was it afterwards?

Gen. Crozier. With a wage of $3 a day he, on the premium system, earned something over 16 per cent premium, so that he would get $3.48 a day; and after the premium was prohibited he would get simply the $3 a day.

Senator Bryan. So that this proviso operated, if you are correct, to reduce his salary about 50 cents a day?

Gen. Crozier. Yes; and it increased the time which he required to do the same work about 200 per cent.

Senator Jones. In other words, it cost the Government over $6 for doing what it cost $3.48 to have him do before?

Gen. Crozier. It cost the Government about $9.
Senator Jones. Oh, I see; the increase was 200 per cent, making it three times as much?

Gen. Crozier. Yes.
Senator Jones. $9 a day was what it cost in the second place?

Gen. Crozier. Yes.
Senator Bryan. And he got less money per day?

Gen. Crozier. Yes.
Senator Bryan. And he did not do as much work?

Gen. Crozier. He did not do as much work.

I might proceed, Mr. President, to read at greater length the

I might proceed, Mr. President, to read at greater length the testimony of Gen. Crozier, but it is unnecessary to do so. The table submitted by Gen. Crozier, which I have asked to have inserted in the RECORD, shows the comparative time of the per-formance of the identical jobs in the arsenal shops when executed under the day wage and under the premium system. summarize, I may say that the average ratio in the machine shop is two and two-tenths times more under the day wage system than under the premium system. In the foundry it was one and six-tenths more

Mr. THOMAS. Does that refer to time?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; to time; and it costs proportionately that much more also—in the smith shop two and one-tenth times more and in the yard gang one and eight-tenths times more.

Mr. President, so that the order number, the operation and name of piece, the date of the work, the employee's number, the number of pieces completed, the total time taken in hours, the time taken per piece, the premium percentage earned, the ratio of time taken when not on premium to that taken when on premium, the mode of performance, and the remarks made by the department may all be in the RECORD so that all can see and, if they are interested, can check the statement of Gen. Crozier, I have asked that the entire table be printed in the RECORD at the close of my remarks.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if he thinks he will accomplish anything by that?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; not at this time, perhaps; but I believe that by calling the attention of the Senate and calling the attention of the public to what the abolition of the premium system is going to cost the Government of the United States—and, as I understand, its abolishment was not in accord with the wishes of the employees of the arsenals—there will be a demand made by the people that the present system be changed, and that provisos such as the one placed in section 6 of this bill will not be placed in appropriation bills in the future.

Mr. THOMAS. Let me ask the Senator if he knows whether the employees affected by this and similar provisos in other bills are among those who are petitioning for an increase of compensation?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I can not say as to that, because I have had no petition from them asking for an increase in compensation; but I presume they, like all other employees of the Government, would gladly receive it.

Mr. THOMAS. I certainly hope, Mr. President, that the Sena-tor's efforts to call public attention to the injurious character of the present system and its effect upon the amount of time required for the performance of this work and the accompanying increased cost to the Government will be noticed. The entire system is wrong, in my judgment, and I was impressed with that fact in reading the protest of the men who are affected by the proviso when the matter was first called to my attention four or five years ago. Since then, however, it has become a habit to put such a proviso in all bills, and I do not know that we are able to expunge them. I wish we were. There is no question that it is a combination of petition and politics that puts the Government work in a position that is entirely inconsistent with the efficient and systematic methods used in private manufacturing enterprises. I can not see how it possibly hurts the employees; on the contrary, it makes them better workman; it gives them better wages; penalizes nobody; and benefits the Government. Probably those are the reasons why it is inserted.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I wish to state in connection with this matter that last year the fortifications bill contained exactly this same proviso.

Mr. THOMAS. It did.

Mr. TOWNSEND. At that time I inserted in the Record, as the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] has done to-day, the testimony of Gen. Crozier. I was satisfied at that time, as I think a majority of the subcommittee were, that this provision was the result of interference brought from outside to increase the cost to the Government of the work done at the arsenals; that it was an attempt to create and extend jobs of employment. I was satisfied then from the testimony that if the men had been left to themselves they would have favored the premium system, for, as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Thomas] has said, it certainly was in their favor so far as money was concerned, and there was not one scrap of evidence before the committee to show that the men were overworked under the efficiency plan. There were men who came to us individually at our offices, not in the employ of the Government but connected with outside organizations, who said that it might be abused; that the employees might be overworked; that men ambitious to earn money might go beyond their physical powers; but that no actual abuse had been known in the Government service. On the contrary, labor in the Watertown Arsenal was well pleased to earn the premiums, and at the same time the people were better served.

It occurred to me then, as it does now, when the burdens of this Government are so exceedingly heavy, when the future looks so dark, and the necessity for military and industrial preparation seems to be so great, that politics ought not to enter into Government appropriations to compel the Congress to vote away the people's money in a reckless manner. If the premium system is abused or can be abused, it can be very readily corrected and controlled, because there is not a Senator or a Representative who would tolerate a system that would be inhumane to the men; but here is a system, as it seemed to me and, I repeat, as it seemed to a majority of the committee, that provided an incentive to the Government employees to do good work, to earn better wages, and to save the country a vast sum of money.

I did not quite understand the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN]. Is that also an amendment to limit the efficiency of the employee? Mr. BRYAN. No, Mr. President; that amendment had an entirely different purpose.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I did not object to it because I felt sure the Senator would not introduce any such thing, but I did not clearly hear it.

The purpose of it was to allow the Chief of Mr. BRYAN. Ordnance to avail himself of private factories. He thinks that is very desirable, and the committee agreed with him as to that. Mr. TOWNSEND. I merely rose to say this much, because I presented the same matter a year ago, when a similar bill was up, and yet it received no support on the part of the Senate.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, just a word. This proviso covers two things. One is commonly known as the stop-watch method and the other the premium or bonus system. I have been opposed rather strongly to the stop-watch method, and I am still opposed to it. I have not had anything presented to me that showed that there was any merit in that proposal. I have had very much doubt in my mind, however, as to the wisdom of abolishing the premium or bonus system; but, as has been stated, it had been abolished by provisos in several different bills—the naval appropriation bill and the Army appropriation bill-and if we were going to have such provisos in those bills, I could see no objection to having a similar one in the fortifications bill; in fact, if we have the new system in operation as to one part of the Government work, I think it should be put into operation as to all.

Mr. THOMAS. We ought to put it in operation in the departments here.

Mr. JONES. Yes; that might be done. Now, this is the first specific testimony, I may say, that we have had, or at least that has come to my attention, as to the exact working of the proposal of abolishing the premium and bonus system, and it is very interesting to me from that standpoint, because it seems to me that it furnishes us information which should have our careful consideration, especially from the Government standpoint; and it also furnishes information that it seems to me should be given very careful consideration upon the part of the workmen who are affected, because I think the sole ground upon which this legislation has been enacted heretofore has been upon the basis of benefit to the workmen; yet, according to the testimony of Gen. Crozier, it has not only not benefited the workmen, but has in a pecuniary way worked to their distinct disadvantage.

These laborers at the Watertown Arsenal apparently have not objected to the effect that it has had on them in the last year or two. They have not submitted any protest to the department; and so we have a right, I think, to assume that they are satisfied to accept less wages for their work than they had been getting heretofore, even though the work has been just as hard, possibly, as before.

I hope that the facts set out, especially in this statement here, showing the time that it has taken to do work under the provisions of the current law as compared with the time taken to do the same work before this law went into effect, and the compensation that the employees have received under the bonus system, and the compensation that they have been receiving under the system as provided for in this proviso, will be given very careful consideration and attention, not only by the public but especially by the laboring people of the country who are interested in the matter.

I just want to call attention to one statement which I think is a mistake in the testimony of Gen. Crozier. It is where he states that the cost to the Government or the time to the Government is three times what it was under the bonus system; in other words, that where we formerly paid the laborer $3 the Government has had to pay nine. Now, I got the impression that we had to pay six, and he said, "No; nine." I think he is wrong, and I am going to call attention to why I think so.

He was talking about the first item on this list when that testimony was given. That shows that the time taken under the bonus system was represented by 10, and the time taken under this system was 22.95, or a ratio of 2.3. Now, that is only an increase of 1 time, or 100 per cent. It is 2.3 times what it was before, not 3 times what it was before.

Mr. SMOOT. To be fair to Gen. Crozier, his statement was that if the man had taken 7.05 hours more, then he would have worked 30 hours, which would have been three times as much, Mr. JONES. Oh, well; but that is practically the addition of another day.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, the percentage is worked out there on the basis of 10 hours and 22.95 hours; but the general says that if the employee had taken this much more time then it would have been, of course, three times as much; which the general is right, of course, in saying.

Mr. JONES. I did not remember his making that statement.

Mr. SMOOT, That statement is here, however.

Mr. JONES. We do not want to put anything into this statement that is not here. This statement says that the total time taken for doing a certain amount of work was represented by 10, and the time taken to do it under this system was 22.95, or a ratio of 2.3. That is, it took 2.3 times as long to do it under the bill as we have it as it did before.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Therefore it costs 2.3 times as much. Mr. JONES. Yes; therefore it cost 2.3 times as much, so that a $3 day would cost a little over $6 a day.

Mr. THOMAS. No; it would cost $9. Mr. JONES. Two and three-tenths times that would be a little over $6.60; but he says $9.

Mr. SMOOT. The general qualifies that, I will say to the

Mr. JONES. I am glad to bring that out, so that it will appear correctly in the RECORD; but I had a wrong impression even then. I thought he meant that for one day's work at $3 we have to pay $9, or three days' wages.

Of course, the Senator will find that the report Mr. SMOOT. as submitted, which he now holds in his hands, gives the exact time and the exact percentage of increase.

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. And I will say to the Senator that the total ratio, figured upon all of the items named in that report, as I stated, is correct.

Mr. JONES. Oh, yes; I do not doubt that. That was all that wanted to call attention to.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, we are all more or less familiar with the contest that is going on between the Houses and the heads of the various bureaus with reference to this stop-watch or Taylor system. Now, it amazes me that Senators can be imposed upon so easily as they seem to be by the proponents of this system. Certainly no man who has had industrial experience would pay the slightest attention to the superficial statements upon which the advocacy of this system and other systems like it is based.

The fallacy of attempting to draw any inference from a statement such as has just been read into the RECORD by the Senator from Utah is illustrated by an incident cited in an article which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post of the issue of one week ago, where, in a munition factory, a girl was put at a certain task which up to that time had been performed by a man, and it was discovered that where a good man, doing his best, could turn out 10 of these particular articles in an hour this girl, without previous training and as a mere experimentalist, turned out 65.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President-The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Utah?
Mr. HUGHES. I do.
Mr. SMOOT. So that the Senator will not misunderstand the report, I wish to say that in the column "Remarks" it is stated that both jobs were done by the same man, and that the second job was done the day after the premium payment was suspended; so the comparison made by the Senator is not applicable.

Mr. HUGHES. Oh, I know. Of course, I heard the Senator y that it was done by the same man. That is not what I say that it was done by the same man. That is not what I am talking about at all. The question all the time was whether in 10 hours this man was doing a day's work, or whether in 22 hours he was doing more than a day's work. The question is, What is a day's work? and it is not going to be determined by the amount of work that a man does under premium conditions

Do Senators know what a factory means that is run under premium conditions? I rather think not; but I will say this to you: The premium factories are the slaughterhouses of the The premium factories are the places where they grind up the fiber and the tissue of the children of this country and turn them into dividends.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HUGHES. Not just now. The premium factories are the places where they hire pacemakers at secretly advanced wages, where they give them dope, cod-liver oil, whisky, to keep them screwed up to a high pitch of performance, and then take the output of these men for the short period that they are able to make this output and try to raise the general level of the production of the shop to that standard.

Why, anybody from an industrial town is familiar with it and knows exactly how it is brought about. The object of these gentlemen is to make the human cog in their industrial enterprises perform up to the full limit of endurance all the time, taking into account nothing of the time before a man reaches his maturity or his ability to perform at the highest speed, and taking no account of him after he passes over the level and begins to descend; but so nearly as possible they want to eliminate everybody except the perfectly fit man and keep everybody straining and struggling to keep up to that standard of produc-We can not stop that in private concerns, but we can stop it in factories and arsenals and navy yards that are controlled and operated by the United States Government, and we should stop it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HUGHES. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator maintain that that system of coercion has been adopted in any of the Government departments?

Mr. HUGHES. 'I say that men have complained bitterly to me about this system that was in operation at this very arsenal. Somebody here attempts to show that their wages have been reduced; that they have been anything but benefited by the abandonment of the system. But, as the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] very justly said, they have not complained.

The Senator knows, as I know, that after we commenced building battleships in the Government yards we were able to make private employers bring down their prices, and we were able to make them speed up their production. There is absoable to make them speed up their production. There is absolutely nothing to prevent Gen. Crozier from setting a task for any man in that arsenal. He can investigate and ascertain what he thinks ought to be a fair day's work, and he can set the man that stint; and if he does not do it, he can discharge him. What is to prevent it? Let him do that; but, for Heaven's sake, do not let us set the seal of our approval upon this other system, designed to drive men beyond the limit of human endurance, to keep the specters of want and hunger urging them on, so that the work of the Government is to be done by men at their top notch of speed and efficiency, and they must inevitably go into the discard the moment they have passed the crest.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes. Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator consider the Ford Automobile Co. an institution which grinds the faces of its men?

Mr. HUGHES. I do not know anything about the Ford Co. except that it established a minimum wage of $5 a day, and that it was not necessary for a man to produce any extraordinary amount of work in order to get that wage.

Mr. THOMAS. My understanding is that the Ford establishment is one in which the highest efficiency is attained, and it is done by the methods condemned by this provision of the bill. It certainly has not operated to the injury of any workmen, because they are clamoring for employment. Mr. Ford's establishment pays the highest wages and produces the cheapest product of any institution in the United States.

Mr. HUGHES. Well, I know how cleverly and skillfully and ingeniously this propaganda is carried on. I have heard statements made that were so utterly and outrageously false that it was not worth anybody's time to deny them, because people relied on the very absurdity of the statements themselves to carry their own refutation.

I have heard it deliberately stated on the floor in another chamber that a certain pump in the navy yard cost $3,500 to construct, and that the same pump could be purchased in the open market That statement was put into the RECORD at 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning, in a low tone of voice, by a gentleman who wanted it to be in the RECORD, and who wanted to call it to somebody's attention at some later time in order to help on this propaganda to strike down Government construction of battleships, and that result was cleverly brought about by charging on that pump the whole overhead expense of the particular place where the pump was constructed. By a system of bookkeeping and account keeping it was possible to demonstrate that that pump did cost that much money.

am indifferent to the views that the Senator from Utah holds on this subject. He has a right to hold them, and he has a right to urge them. My object in getting into this discussion at this time is to prevent its appearing that these statements and conclusions drawn from them are permitted to pass unchallenged.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HUGHES. I yield the floor. Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator has left the Cham-I wanted to ask him a question, but I will make a statement now that the Senator has gone.

The Senator did not deny that the statements made by Gen. Crozier are incorrect, and his statement and story about a pump has nothing whatever to do with the actual facts existing in one of our Government arsenals. The operator under the premium system for the retapping of the base of one hundred 4.7-inch shells in August, 1916, took 10 hours, and the very day after the premium payments were suspended that same man, working upon the same sized shells, took 22.95 hours to do 100 shells. The Senator can not say that that man was doped and that he was fed whisky by our Government, thus enabling him to do an increased amount of work while in that condition. What made the change? Why, everyone knows what made it. We know it to be a fact that the man could finish 100 shells in 10 hours when receiving a premium, and we know that beginning the very day the premium was discontinued it took 22 hours and ninety-five one-hundredths of an hour to do the same work that was before done in 10 hours.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.
Mr. HUGHES. Was the man discharged?
Mr. SMOOT. I do not know. I do not think they had the right to discharge him. It may be he is under the civil service.

Mr. HUGHES. Why, the Senator knows better than that.
Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not know better than that.
Mr. HUGHES. Well, I do. I know that no mechanic in the arsenals is under the civil service.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—
Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, nearly every employee of the Government is under the civil service. I will not say that this man is, because I have not looked it up.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator knows he is not, and they could discharge him if he were under the civil service.

Mr. NORRIS. I was going to say that the civil service would not protect him if he had not done his duty. He could be discharged just the same.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, well, the man may claim that he did his duty

Mr. NORRIS. Maybe he did. I do not know. Mr. HUGHES. Maybe he did.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, then, if he did his duty when he took 22.95 hours he certainly used more than superhuman efforts to do it before. I do not believe it, Mr. President. That is the difference between the Senator and myself; and it is not only this one man. The list can be gone over, and it will apply not to every man in the arsenal, but to a great percentage of them; and I do not believe there was ever any effort on the part of the Government to drive or force these men to extra exertion when they were working under the premium system. They did the work just as they desired to do it. All that the Government required was that the work should be done in a first-class and workmanlike manner.

Now, if there is any Senator who wants to dispute the figures or statements, then I think we ought to call upon Gen. Crozier to substantiate them; but I do not believe there is any Senator who doubts that the statements made are not absolutely correct.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, when Gen. Crozier appeared before the subcommittee that had charge of this bill I asked him what was the result of his experience in connection with the enforcement of this premium or bonus system, and, from his observation and from the reports that he had received of its operation in this arsenal, what effect this system had upon the health and welfare of the men who were working under it. He stated, and it appears in the hearing, that the effect, if anything, was beneficial; that he never saw the slightest evidence of any ill effect upon the men who were working under this system.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Hughes] alludes to the propaganda in favor of this system. I tell you, Mr. President, the propaganda is all on the other side. It is in the direction of discouraging the industrious and ambitious workmen and of reducing all to the level of mediocrity, or reducing the best to the level of the poorest workman. I do not see how Senators having regard for the interests of their country can stand here and vote to abolish a system which undoubtedly leads to economy in the operation of the workshops and arsenals of the country.

I was willing to have this bill reported from the committee containing this proviso, because, from the votes at the last session of Congress and the session before, I despaired of having it stricken out of the bill; but if any attempt is made to eliminate it I will vote to do so. I know that in the military bill at the session before the last, and in the naval bill at the last session, I made such an attempt, and failed. I sincerely hope that some Senator will move to strike it out, so that we can have an opportunity to vote upon it.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I will simply suggest to the Senator that the matter was thoroughly tested out at least two years ago, I believe on the naval appropriation bill. An item similar to this was stricken out by the Senate at that time, and in conference it was found impossible to get the House to recede from the provision. Then a similar provision was put on the military bill. Finally the whole matter came here to be voted upon and discussed and debated in the Senate, and the Senate finally reached the conclusion that it was going to stand by an item of this sort on these bills. Consequently the Committee on Appropriations saw no reason to have the fight over again on this bill

Mr. OLIVER. I am familiar with all those circumstances Mr. President, and for that reason I did not oppose the action of the committee in reporting the bill containing this proviso.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I recall distinctly taking some part in the discussion of this proviso when it was presented in the naval bill two or three years ago. My attention was called to the subject by letters and petitions from men affected by its operations and protesting against its enactment. I made some inquiry and concluded that the system was productive of much benefit to the people concerned, a great many of whom had, upon the strength of the bonuses they were able to earn, bought homes, and were relying upon these added compensations to meet their payments and secure permanent homes.

There is no question but that this system is susceptible of reat abuse. There is no doubt that many complaints made great abuse. with regard to its operation in private enterprises are well founded, not only in this country but in Great Britain; but, Mr. President, that can be said of every system which has its bad as well as its good features.

If this system in the arsenals and workshops of the United States had the effect as stated by the Senator from New Jersey, I am sure I would be the last one in the world to advocate it and one of the first to condemn it. I do not think, however, that it has had or can have that effect. We are living in an age of efficiency. I am one of the advocates of Government manufacture of all of its munitions of war and supplies. We can not expect the Government to do that unless it can produce these articles at a price commensurate with what they can be produced by private enterprise. If we have a system of this kind, under the practical operation of which the same kind of work costs more than twice as much as it costs elsewhere, and a system which, however humanely designed, operates to injure the employee and at the same time to penalize the Government, then the commonest business principles, the plainest duty that we as Representatives of the people owe to our constituencies, require us to see to it that this kind of legislation, class legislation, is not incorporated and crystallized into these great supply bills.

There is no question but if this clause is retained in the bill it should be retained in all the others. We should not, in other words, make one rule for one class of workmen and another rule for some of the others or for all the others.

is the unfortunate feature of a proviso of this kind.

It may be that in some of the factories and great establishments of the country men are speeded up by giving them stimulants that injure them physically and exhaust their power and vitality by the great drain made upon them for the immediate purpose. If that is so, it is deplorable. If that is so, it should be punished. It ought to be made criminal for any employer to be guilty of such practices, and he should receive the consequence, not only of the penal statutes of the country but he ought to be pilloried by public opinion. But such does not seem to be the record of a great many of the modern estab-I referred the Senator from New Jersey to the most conspicuous one in the country perhaps where efficiency is made one of the standards of employment, where each man is expected to do his part of the work, and where he is paid accordingly for it, his hours being limited to the usual number of eight, and the product being the most enormous in the world in proportion to the amount of labor expended upon it.

There is a most illuminating article in the current number of the Century Magazine by a gentleman evidently of socialistic tendencies and who describes the organization of the manufacturing industries in Great Britain consequent upon the war. He makes the striking statement that the British workman has just discovered two things very essential to his prosperity. One is efficiency and the other is the quantum of production. In proportion as the wage earner is fit and in proportion to his production is his compensation; and it needs scarcely be added that the compensation at present received by the British workman is greater than he ever got in the past. Of course, war conditions have much to do with it. But the conservatism of the British workman, aroused by the oppression of employers, has resulted in the very curious situation that the great mass of people dependent upon their own labors for their livelihood seem to feel that the smaller the production and the less the wealth of the country the greater will be their own compensation. Of course the same line of argument would carry logically to the conclusion that if you produce nothing at all, you will get better wages than though you were engaged in producing to the limit.

I do not think, Mr. President, that this proviso should be stricken out. Like other Senators who have expressed themselves here, I do not propose to make a motion to that effect, because it is useless. It has crystallized into all these bills so that it has become, as a matter of course, our practice to accept it and act upon it. Members of the committee have just informed the Senate that, in view of the failure of the Senate, even where the proviso has been stricken out, to make their action effective in conference, they did not deem it worth while to further protest against it. Consequently, I have no doubt it will become a law; and if it does, then, as I said, the same proviso should be incorporated and made the law in all the other supply bills that will come before us. But I believe that public sentiment will be educated to a point where the workmen themselves and those who honestly and earnestly, as the Senator from New Jersey, believe in the necessity of it for the protec-tion of the laboring men will find it to their interest to discard it.

Mr. SMOOT. I heard the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Hughes] make the statement a year ago that the private concerns of the country administered dope and whisky in order to stimulate employees to greater effort and for the greater output of the product they were working upon. I undertook to find out whether there was such an institution. I began with the largest and have asked the question of employees and of the heads of many of our leading institutions. I want to say to the Senator that so far I have been unable to find an institution of that kind. Perhaps the Senator knows who they are. I think the country ought to know if there are institutions that administer dope and whisky to their employees to stimulate them to greater effort.

Mr. HUGHES. I know it of my own personal knowledge. I know an institution where the men work under the influence of stimulants of various kinds and a great many of them were secretly paid more money than they were supposed to receive in order to set a high standard of accomplishment and drive everybody else in the factory up to that standard. I do not want to name the factory, but there are a great many of them, will say. It is a natural development of the premium or piecework system to work men up to the highest pitch and discharge them when they are unable to retain that standard.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that as far as my experience is concerned, as an employer of men, the best way to obtain the highest standard of efficiency and to keep them in the best condition physically is to prohibit the use of all dope or whisky, and enforce it. When a man has whisky and dope in his system I do not believe it is possible for him to do the same amount of work or the same class of work as the man who has a clean body into which whisky and dope never

Mr. HUGHES. Everybody, of course, knows there is great ground of complaint. I agree with the Senator absolutely, but at the same time everybody admits that they are operating under stimulants of one form or another, so that for a short time production can be stimulated and carried to a greater height in certain lines of employment, where machinery enters into the equation of production. Whether the Senator knows about it or not, I do know about it. I know because I am from an industrial city and have spent all my time in an industrial community. I know the effect of piecework and the premium system, and I am doing my duty as I see it. The Senator will do his duty as he sees it; but so long as I am a Member of this body I shall resent any attempt to introduce that infernal system into any factories for which I am in any part responsible.

Mr. THOMAS. I have no doubt that the Senator from New Jersey has knowledge of the practices he has stated, but if I were he and had the same knowledge I would publish the names of every such employer in the Congressional Record and let the world know who they are and what their conduct toward their employees has been. However, that is a matter for the Senator to determine for himself.

Before I leave the floor, Mr. President, I want to refer to the bill itself and ask one or two questions of the Senator having charge of it. I should like to ask the Senator whether the amount reported as the amount carried by the bill, which is identical with the bill as it passed the House, does not also contain an authorization of a greater amount?

Mr. BRYAN. It does, Mr. President. The bill contains appropriations for $51,396,593 and an authorization for an additional amount aggregating $9,459,000, making a total of $60,-855,000.

Mr. THOMAS. Then this fortifications appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1918 makes a straight appropriation of $51,-396,593, and in addition to that authorizes nearly $10,000,000 more, or a total in excess of $60,000,000. The appropriation for the current year for fortification purposes was $25,747,550. A deficiency of $1,200,000 was disclosed some time ago and covered by our deficiency bill. So the appropriation last year is barely one-half the amount of this appropriation. The appropriation for last year of $26,000,000 was more than four times the appropriation of 1916, which was the largest appropriation made for the purpose since 1905, when it exceeded $7,000,000.

Mr. BRYAN. I am sure the Senator wants to get the figures accurately. The aggregate appropriation for 1917 was $28,-547,550, with an authorization of $13,800,000, which authorization has to be taken care of in this bill.

Mr. THOMAS. I thank the Senator for correcting me, but while that reduces the proportion between the appropriation for the current year and the appropriation carried by the bill it makes the proportion between the appropriation for the current year and that immediately preceding it much more glaring.

Mr. President, we have expended since 1889 for fortifications, if the figures given by the committee are reliable-and I have no doubt they are—a total of $204,677,360.90. That sum has been distributed over all the intervening years. This bill carries one-fourth as much as we have expended in 28 years preceding.

It may be that the country's defenses require this enormous sum to be expended in enlarged and additional fortifications. If it is necessary, then, of course, it is our duty to make the appropriation by increasing the taxes upon the public, but I am unable, Mr. President, to conceive of conditions under which this sum is necessary, if we are to take the statements of those in control of our coast defenses as authoritative. Gen. Weaver. before the Committees on Military Affairs of the Senate and of the House, last year declared that our system of coast defenses was the best in the world. I do not pretend to give his identical language, but he said that with a greater elevation to our guns and an increase in the force of men to man them, no further armaments were necessary. He declared that the elevation of the guns to a greater angle, thereby increasing the range, would make it impossible for any modern fleet to come within range of them and live. He called attention to the fact, and emphasized it to my satisfaction at least, that the force of men provided for by our military bills was inadequate to an emergency that might arise and require their services. Of course, provision is made for manning the fortifications, one half by Regular troops and the other to be furnished by contingents drawn from the militia. and the quota of the Regular troops actually provided is less than the half required.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. THOMAS. With pleasure.
Mr. WARREN. The Senator is speaking of the amount carried by the bill as if it were all for fortifications or emplacement work. Of the total expenditure, the Senator must remember a great portion of it is for munitions of war, cannon, machine, and other gun equipment, and of that, every year, a certain amount is consumed. We are providing here also for a large addition for machinery, and so forth. There have been times in former years, when but few guns were in place and a lack of men for the guns prevailed, and it is a matter of record in former years, when we did not at times have powder enough in some of the exposed points in the United States to last throughout 10 minutes of active warfare if the few guns in place were put in use; and powder enough to last 20 minutes or half an hour was considered the maximum.

I do not wish to dispute the Senator's figures at all, but quite a large portion of this expenditure must be charged, not on new emplacements but on fortifications in place, and to munitions and the strengthening of supplies and reserves.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, it is always a pleasure to be interrupted by the junior Senator from Wyoming, and particularly as to any matter affecting our military affairs, because his service upon that committee has made him extremely familiar with all the details both of coast defenses and of the Army. His information, therefore, is much more extensive and more reliable than mine. I do not think, however, that there has ever been a time, certainly not within recent years, when the amount of ammunition for our coast defenses could be utilized or exhausted in 10 or 15 minutes.

Mr. WARREN. There certainly have been times, at certain points, when such condition existed, and it is a matter of record.

Mr. THOMAS. It is true that for prolonged sieges our ammunition supplies might prove ineffective or insufficient, but, Mr. President, I find here on page 5 an appropriation of $6,900,000 for the purchase, manufacture, and testing of mountain guns, field and siege cannon, including their carriages, sights, and so forth.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President—— Mr. THOMAS. I will yield in just a moment. I also find on the same page, for purchase, manufacture, and test of seacoast cannon for coast defense, including their carriages, sights, implements, equipments, and the machinery necessary for their manufacture at the arsenals, $9,231,000, with an authorization to enter into contracts or otherwise incur obligations for the purposes above mentioned not to exceed $2,200,000 in addition to the appropriations herein and heretofore made. Now I yield

Mr. BRYAN. Those appropriations for mountain, field, and siege guns and ammunition make up the whole amount of the bill for armament of fortifications, $14,210,000, and authorizations $4,200,000 more. That has not to do with the subject of the seacoast at all. That is applied to the Regular Army, to the artillery and the ammunition.

Mr. THOMAS. Let me ask the Senator whether previous fortifications bills have not contained similar items.

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, yes; in other words, they have always provided for the artillery for the Regular Army, not for the

Mr. THOMAS. In other words, the bill covers the same items that have been covered by identical bills of previous Congresses. Making all allowance for that, Mr. President, we are still confronted with the fact that over $50,000,000, more than 100 per cent more than was ever before required or asked, is embodied in this bill for these purpose

I deny, Mr. President, that there is any exigency now or likely to be which justifies at this time this prodigious increase in the annual fortifications bill.

I notice also that out of this huge sum of money the amount of $26,000, on page 7, is provided for purchase, manufacture, and testing of submarine mine material and other accessories for submarine mine purposes. I am not a military man or a naval man; I do not pretend to any expert knowledge in those departments; but I think it is a matter of common observation that a few modern submarine mines are more effectual defenses to a harbor than all the coast fortifications in the world. The great fleet of England is powerless to-day to approach within cannon fire of a single German harbor, not alone because of submarines but because of the sowing of the channels and passages with submarine mines, the locations of which are known only to the enemy.

Out of this sixty million-odd dollars only $26,000 is to be expended for the purpose of testing material and a method for our protection that is superior from every standpoint to the modern coast fortification. I can only draw the conclusion that the manufacture of this cannon and ammunition is far more profitable than the manufacture of a few submarine mines, and provision is therefore made for them at the expense of a proper supply of mines.

Mr. President, I shall not take up the valuable time of the Senate. I am merely protesting against this bill and others carrying at this time such enormously increased appropriations without a full explanation as to their necessity. only going far beyond anything in the aggregate of appropriations in preceding years, but we seem to be actuated by a recklessness and extravagance of expenditures that will inevitably require a constant increase of our tax rate in one direction and huge bond issues for posterity to take care of in the other.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I am aware that I am trespassing on the kindness of the Senator from Montana, and I do not intend to take up any time of the Senate. I think I ought to say, in view of what the Senator from Colorado has said, that while it is true that the amount carried in the bill is very large, yet it is in harmony with the policy adopted by the last Congress.

The Senator from Colorado himself is a distinguished member of the Committee on Military Affairs. The bill which came out of that committee requires the maintenance of an Army of so many hundred thousand men. That Army will be perfectly useless unless it has guns to protect it. This bill provides the heavy ordnance for the Regular Army, as well as the amounts necessary for seacoast defenses. Indeed, the bill is divided into two general parts-seacoast fortifications and Field Artillery. A policy has been adopted of providing within four years sufficient heavy artillery for the Regular Army, and also of completing our seacoast fortifications. One appropriation bill carrying out that idea has already passed Congress. This is the second one. The amounts provided, while large, are the proportionate amounts required to carry out the plan.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 8090) granting the consent of Congress to Wash- sions.

ington-Newport News Short Line, a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Potomac River.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President: S. 7537. An act authorizing the Western New York & Pennsylvania Railway Co. to reconstruct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River, in the town of Allegany, county of Cattaraugus, N. Y.; H. R. 217. An act to authorize the sale of school property in the city of Denver, Colo., and for other purposes;

H. R. 20209. An act to amend section 276 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; andS. J. Res. 202. Joint resolution to enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay the necessary expenses of the inaugural ceremonies of the President of the United States on March 5, 1917.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PHELAN presented a memorial of Local Division No. 282, Order of Railway Conductors, of Needles, Cal., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to promote the safety of employees and travelers on railroads, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the San Francisco Advertising Club, of California, praying that an appropriation be made for the improvement of the national parks, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine presented petitions of sundry citizens of Bar Harbor, Waterville, Portland, and Greenville, all in the State of Maine, praying for national prohibition, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. THOMPSON. I desire to present a concurrent resolution which has been passed by the Legislature of Kansas, now in session, urging the passage of the so-called Anthony suffrage amendment. I shall not ask that it be read, but simply that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution No. 12.

Senate concurrent resolution No. 12.

Whereas the granting of suffrage to the women of Kansas has resulted beneficially to the State and has been a great advantage to the men and women of Kansas, and is a helpful influence in all public affairs and legislation; and
Whereas the withholding of the right to vote from women of other States is an injustice and deprives the Nation of the direct participation in the Government of a large part of the people: Be it Resolved by the Senate of the State of Kansas (the House of Representatives concurring therein). That the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Kansas are hereby requested to vote in favor of the Susan B. Anthony amendment, which seeks to terminate the discrimination against women and to urge upon Congress a submission of that amendment to the States for ratification.

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to each Senator and Representative in Congress from the State of Kansas, to be presented by them to the Congress of the United States.

I hereby certify that the above concurrent resolution originated in the senate, and passed that body January 24, 1917.

W. Y. Morgan,

President of the Senate.
E. D. George,
Secretary of the Senate.

Passed the house January 26, 1917.

A. M. KEENE, Speaker of the House. CLARENCE W. MILLER, Chief Clerk of the House.

Approved January 30. 1917.

ARTHUR CAPPER, Governor.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 19359) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1003) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the cal-

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll. The Secretary called the roll and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Husting	Phelan	Sutherland
Brandegee	James	Pittman	Thomas
Bryan	Johnson, S. Dak.	Pomerene	Thompson
Chamberlain	Jones	Ransdell	Townsend
Chilton	Kenyon	Robinson	Underwood

Fletcher	Myers	Simmons	Weeks
Hardwick	Nelson	Smith, Ga.	Williams
Hitchcock	Oliver	Smith, Mich.
Hollis	Overman	Smith, S. C.
Unchas	Pago	Smoot

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I ask that the unfinished business be now laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unfinished business is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I object to laying the bill before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, by unanimous consent, Mr. President. That will have to be done on motion. I believe this bill is simply being used as a buffer to prevent the consideration of other legislation, and I do not care to sit quietly by and allow it to be done, if it can possibly be prevented.

Mr. MYERS. Is it the ruling of the Chair that the bill is before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair assumed that it was before the Senate.

Mr MYERS, Then I have nothing further to say.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood that the unfinished business was before the Senate before the roll call was ordered

Mr. SMOOT. That is, that it was presented to the Senate before the roll call?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair so assumed; yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I was not aware of that fact but supposed that the Senator from Montana had asked that It be laid before the Senate now.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that the Senator from Montana had asked that that be done, when I immediately called for a quorum. I do not know whether the Senator's request was granted or not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was done as it always has been so done. That is all the Chair can say about it. If the Chair had known that there would have been any objection, of course, it would not have been done. The bill is before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and the question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I should like to ask for information whether the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Shafroth] has concluded his remarks upon this bill? I understand that he had the floor when the bill was last under consideration.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I have not concluded my remarks, and I should be glad to proceed now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH resumed the speech begun by him on yester-

After having spoken for some time,

Mr. VARDAMAN. With the permission of the Senator from Colorado, I suggest that it is now very nearly 6 o'clock, and I ask the Senator if he would be willing to have a recess taken at this point until 8 o'clock to-night, and then proceed after dinner? Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will that suit the Senator?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes.

RECESS.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I move that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock to-night.

Mr. GALLINGER. I hope the Senators who want this recess will see that there will be a quorum to-night.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I will not guarantee that we will have a

Mr. SHAFROTH. Whether there is a quorum here or not, I hope that I shall be permitted to conclude my remarks. The Senator can then call for a quorum if he wishes, but I want to conclude.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, what was the suggestion that was made concerning the calling of a quorum? I did not hear it.

Mr. SMOOT. No suggestion was made of the absence of a quorum. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger] said he hoped there would be a quorum to-night. The Senator from Colorado said that he hoped there would not be a call for a quorum until he could conclude his remarks.

Mr. GALLINGER. There certainly will not be as far as the Senator's remarks are concerned; but if we are going to legislate to-night, I think we ought to have a quorum.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator means, in case there is to be any voting?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; any voting.
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUSTING in the chair). The Senator from Mississippi moves that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock to-night.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m. The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. James in the chair). Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the President of the United States having returned to the House of Representatives in which it originated the bill (H. R. 10384) to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States, with his objections thereto, the House proceeded in pursuance of the Constitution to reconsider the same; and

Resolved, That the said bill do pass, two-thirds of the House agreeing to pass the same.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate resumes the consideration of House bill 408, the unfinished business.

The Senate, in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto,

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the bill now before the Senate provides for the leasing of the water powers by the Federal Government. To that or to any other form of leasing by the National Government I am absolutely opposed, because I believe it is depriving the State of a right which it possesses, and it seems to me it would deprive the States of their sovereignty.

I recognize, Mr. President, that the bill may be so phrased that the Supreme Court might hold there was no declaration of a policy of Government perpetually to own these lands, and by resolving all doubts in favor of the legislation it is quite possible the act might be held to be not unconstitutional. But, Mr. President, this bill means the establishment of a permanent policy on the part of the Government perpetually to own and control these lands. If that be true, and if that be the intention and the purpose of the bill, I have no doubt that it is contrary to the Constitution.

Mr. President, you can readily see why the public lands of the United States or the water powers of the United States were never intended by the framers of our Constitution or by our system of government, which is created by that Constitution, to be permanently held by the National Government. The reason for that is apparent. It is because in extreme cases the National Government could deprive the States of anything to tax, and by that exercise of power could destroy the States, for the power to exempt from taxation is equally as destructive as is the power of taxation.

Mr. President, exemption from taxation is considered as of slight consequence. It is lightly treated, with the indifferent remark, "Oh, such property is merely exempt from taxation"; but the importance of the policy depends upon the quantity of property which is exempted from taxation.

Not only that, but when you recognize the fact that we have a constitutional provision which says that the United States Government shall guarantee a government republican in form to the States you can readily see that such exemption has the effect of annulling that provision when you deprive the State of the means of sustaining a government republican in form. When we look at the question of taxation and realize that exemption from taxation means expenditures upon the part of the State of enormous amounts of money I can not see how any person who believes in the rights of the States to tax property within the limits of the States can agree to a bill of this kind.

Mr. President, what does exemption from taxation mean? It means that the State is bound to impose a sufficiently higher amount of taxes upon the property that is in private ownership to maintain a government not only over the private lands but also over the very Government lands that are reserved. In any one year such taxation would amount to a very great sum, and in a long series of years it would be crushing to the State.

Mr. President, out in my section of the country the payment of taxes for 30 years with a reasonable interest upon each yearly payment is equal to the value of the land that is taxed in the State. So it is apparent that when the Government holds perpetually, or holds for 30 years, title to land, which places it in the favored position of exemption from State taxation, it is making the State incur expenditures for government which are making the State incur expenditures for government which are equal to the value of the very land which the Government by reason of its ownership refuses to sell or part from the title. Thus it will readily be seen how serious it is to the Western States when a policy of perpetual ownership is proposed for the National Government. It is crushing to the State; it is forcing those persons who own lands and have title to them to pay an encorrous tax placed upon them. For instance in my State enormous tax placed upon them. For instance, in my State there are about thirteen or fourteen million acres of land that are reserved, besides water-power sites, coal lands, and several other exemptions that are made.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Works in the chair) Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to ask the Senator if he can state how much public land in his State is now withdrawn for prospective water-power sites?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I can not tell the Senator exactly; but there is a considerable amount so withdrawn.

Mr. MYERS. Is it not a very inconsiderable amount?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, that may be in individual instances, Mr. President, but the total of withdrawals amounts to some sixteen or eighteen million acres.

Mr. MYERS. Yes; but I do not like these small withdrawals for water sites thrown in with the tremendous amount of withdrawals for forest reserves.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is the same policy.
Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Colorado made the remark which I was going to make. It is a part and parcel of the same system and policy. It is a prop to the same scheme of universal bureaucracy

Mr. MYERS. But for very different reasons and on different grounds. There is a differentiation.

Mr. BORAH. No; it seems to me it is not for different reasons at all; it is for the same reason exactly; that is, to prevent this property going on to the roll where it can be taxed and where it can be made to bear a portion of the burdens of the

Mr. MYERS. It is looking to different results, however. I think there is a great deal of difference in withdrawing a small tract of land for power-site purposes and withdrawing many thousands of acres to have forest guards control it, to keep out fire, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Montana [Mr. Myers] that the small amount of acreage withdrawn for waterpower sites does not necessarily cover all of the lands that are made absolutely worthless, so far as entry is concerned, through such small withdrawals. For instance, in some of the States there have been withdrawn lands 1 mile upon both sides of a river from its head to its mouth, and nothing can get past the withdrawal. Therefore, Mr. President, it is not only the question of the small acreage that is withdrawn for water-power sites, but it is the acreage that is made absolutely useless, so far as the entry upon the land of any citizen of the United States is concerned.

Mr. MYERS. The right may be abused, but the fact that it is abused does not contravene the rightfulness of the withdrawal of a proper amount of land for water-power purposes. If an excessive area is withdrawn it is an abuse of the right, that is all.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I now want to take up the suggestion which has been made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. Myers]. The Senator says that these little water-power site withdrawals do not amount to much, because they are small in area. Mr. President, they are more iniquitous than any other kind of withdrawals. When a water-power plant is erected on the water-power site there is no law in existence which will permit the State to tax either the lands or any works that may be placed upon them. You can, therefore, readily see what an enormous loss that is to the State. Those water-power site withdrawals have not only retarded the development of the West, but even if the water-power sites are developed under the leasing system they can not be taxed.

Mr. MYERS. But if the Senator will permit me—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. MYERS. Such land might be assessed and taxed $1.25 an acre, or $2 or $3 an acre, or something like that, and yet a tax put by the State on the waterworks of a power plant might bring thousands of dollars into the State treasury.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; but you can not put any tax on the works of the power plant established on the water site.

Mr. MYERS. We do it in Montana. Mr. SHAFROTH. You can not do it where there is a leasing system, and I have the authorities right here to prove my

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes. Mr. POMERENE. Do I understand the Senator's position to be that such improvements as might be made either in the construction of a dam or the placing of machinery there could not be taxed?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Not so long as the Government holds title. Mr. POMERENE. Can not the Government confer the authority upon the State to tax?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It might, but it never has done so.

Mr. POMERENE. But why can it not be done? What objection is there to doing it?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It may be done, but, as a matter of fact, it has not been done. I want to say that it will not be done, and the reason it can not be done and will not be done is because it would give the States the power to absolutely destroy the property of the General Government.

Mr. POMERENE. I concede that as a general proposition if no such authority is conferred upon the State by the Federal Government, but I know of no reason why the Federal Government man not say to the State government, "You may tax all these improvements according to any particular rule.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Now, let me say to the Senator that this matter has been before committees for a number of years, that they have reported a number of bills, and that not one of those bills for leasing of water-power sites or for leasing coal lands or for any other lands of the United States has contained a provision affirming the power of the State to tax.

Mr. POMERENE. There may be a grave question as to whether or not it would be politic to do it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That may be; but it has certainly never been done.

Mr. POMERENE. But the question of policy is one thing and the question of power is another.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly; but this bill does not contain that power, and I am discussing this bill.

Mr. POMERENE. But there is no reason why the bill could not contain such power.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no; certainly not.

Mr. THOMAS and Mr. FALL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield; and, if so, to whom?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that if the Senator from Ohio assumes that that ought to be done, the substitute of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] goes a step further, for it transfers these sites to the States. I hope the Senator from Ohio will give us the aid of his vote in behalf of that substitute.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have been trying to get some information in the course of this debate which would enable me to settle this proposition, at least satisfactorily to my own mind. It is perhaps a Gordian knot, so far as I am concerned, for I have not as yet been able to satisfy myself as to what should be done.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. FALL. On the line of the suggestion made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] I wish to ask, Does the Senator from Ohio think that we could finance a water-power proposition where the State had the right to tax it, and the National Government also had a right to tax it, and the National Government placed-restrictions over it?

Mr. POMERENE. That might add somewhat to the difficul-ties, but I have no doubt in my own mind that if we should clearly define the powers which are conferred upon the State, such a proposition could be financed. I know of no reason why you could not finance a proposition which was subject to one or two taxing powers quite as well as if it were subject to only one taxing-power. In my own State, for instance, when it comes to the question of the taxing power, we levy a State tax, the municipal councils levy a municipal tax, the commissioners of the county levy a county tax, the board of education levies a tax for school purposes, and the township levies a township tax for township purposes.

Mr. FALL. But those taxes are regulated and limited by constitutional provisions in the Senator's State.

Mr. POMERENE. Very well; and could not that be done in this case?

Mr. FALL. Certainly it could be done here, if it should be done: but the Senator is dealing with the remaining public lands of the United States, and in his State and other States an entirely opposite theory has been adopted by the Government, and the public lands have been disposed of under entirely distinct and opposite theories. The Senator does not understand, and it is hard to make Senators from riparian rights States understand, that the Government of the United States has no property in these waters, but that they belong to the States of the West. It is not a question of the vested rights of the riparian proprietors.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I was not discussing the question of riparian proprietors or anything of that sort.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, all that the Senators from the Western States are interested in is in endeavoring to vest in these States exactly the power the Senator would vest them with if they had the right of taxation.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have not expressed my opinion either in favor of the Senator's views or against them. My attention was challenged by the statement made by the Senator from Colorado to the effect that a State could not tax this property. Mr. FALL.

That is true.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Not without the consent of the United

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly; but that qualification was not made. I see no sound reason why the Congress of the United States can not confer that authority upon the States.

Congress never has done so, and never Mr. SHAFROTH.

will, in my opinion.

Mr. POMERENE. That may all be so.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I call the attention of the able Senator from Ohio, who, I know, is entirely familiar with these constitutional questions, to a case decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, which came up from Tennessee? I understand the reasoning in that case, the court placed it beyond the power of the Government to permit these properties to be taxed so long as the title remained in the Government. I do not know whether the Senator's attention has been called to that case

Mr. POMERENE. No; it has not been.

Mr. BORAH. It is a very far-reaching decision.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is the case of Van Brocklin against the State of Tennessee, reported in One hundred and seventeenth United States, page 151.

Mr. POMERENE. I concede the proposition that, if no authority is conferred by the Federal Government upon the State government to tax such land, then the State government can not exercise that power.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly; but the decision of the Supreme Court in this case seems to turn upon the proposition that the property is constitutionally protected if it belongs to the United States Government; that it is beyond the range of the power of Congress to make it the subject of taxation, because the Constitution itself withholds it from taxation in that it does not permit the taxing of the property of one sovereignty by another sovereignty.

Mr. POMERENE. Without its consent.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator from Idaho permit me to make a suggestion there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. In connection with what the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] has said, it seems to me that we ought to draw this distinction, which, I think, is as far as the case referred to goes; that is, if the Government of the United States on its land constructed a dam and other necessary buildings and works, they would not be taxable; but, as I remember that case, it held that while if the Government leased this particular land that it owned, the State could not tax the land, it could tax any improvements that the lessee might put on it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I must differ from the Senator, and I should like to read my authority.

Mr. NORRIS. I am going to listen to the Senator with a great deal of interest on that proposition.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Sena-tor from Idaho if that case holds that the property belonging to the United States can not be taxed by the State, or that the net profits growing out of a business conducted on that property can not be taxed by the State?

Mr. BORAH. Of course, the specific and concrete proposition of net profits was not involved in that case, but I think that Senators who will examine the case will find that it has practically excluded the power of Congress to transfer the subject matter of taxation between sovereignties. If there is going to be any consent given, it would have to be by a constitutional amendment and not by an act of Congress.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, let me call the Senator's attention to this: The statement would be true as to land owned by the Government, and I think the case referred to probably so held; but does the Senator think that it would require a constitutional amendment to enable the State to impose taxes on improvements made on land leased by the Government?

Mr. BORAH. I need only call the Senator's attention to a thoroughly established principle of law, which the Senator, upon reflection, will recall, that improvements which are permanently attached to the real estate become real estate.

Mr. NORRIS. Ordinarily, yes; but there is another princi-ple well recognized, that the owner of real estate can lease it, and the lessee can put up improvements under a provision in the lease, and they are taxed separately in the States, so far as I know

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think the Senator is entirely mistaken in regard to that.

Mr. NORRIS. I am going to listen to the Senator's argument with a great deal of interest. I do not believe the case referred to-I have not read it recently, although I am somewhat familiar with it-carries out the idea suggested.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I read from the syllabus of that case: Property of the United States is exempt by the Constitution of the United States from taxation under the authority of a State.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly. The improvements-the dams and uildings—are not the property of the United States. Mr. BORAH. But, Mr. President—

NORRIS. They will be constructed under a lease under this bill.

Mr. BORAH. Under the law they are the property of the United States, because they have become permanently attached to the land and are a part of it.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President-

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado this question: The Senator from Colorado has been speaking of the realty which belongs to the United States, or of improvements on that realty. How about the net profits growing out of a business operated on that land? Does he hold they are not taxable by the State?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir; and I think I can so demon-

Mr. MYERS. I should like to have the Senator give some authorities on that point.

Mr. SHAFROTH. According to the authorities, they are not in any manner taxable. Before I read from the decisions I will state that they go to the extent of holding that when the Federal Government uses an instrumentality of any kind in carrying out any undertaking of the Government there can not be taxed in any manner the product, the franchise, or anything that would have a tendency to injure or impair that enterprise of the Government. The Government here is proposing to lease water-power sites, as they are termed. Some of us think it is proposing to lease water which does not belong to the Government any more than the Mississippi River belongs to me; but waiving that for the time being-

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the Senator enters on the discussion of the proposition he has laid down I should like to call his attention to the fact that his colleague [Mr. Thomas] a week or so ago, on this same bill, when it was before the Senate, devoted two or three days to an exceedingly interesting legal argument, a part of which was to demonstrate exactly the opposite contention, as I understand; that is, that the States had a right to condemn the public lands of the United States for the purpose of building dams and constructing works under

State laws

Mr. SHAFROTH. That has nothing whatever to do with this proposition, I will say to the Senator; that is a different proposition altogether.

Mr. NORRIS. It is the opposite of the Senator's position, as I see it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is not the opposite of the proposition for which I am contending.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, right in that connection perhaps it will be just as well to call the attention of the Senator to an article by Mr. King, chief counsel of the Reclamation Service, in which he states:

The statutes of your State make provision for this class of assessments, and the Supreme Court of California—also the supreme courts of some other States—have held tax assessments of this nature to be valid and enforceable.

That is not what I had reference to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That refers to improvements on home-

Mr. SMOOT. That refers to the question of taxing improvements on homesteads. In other words, an entryman can enter public land and make $100,000 worth or more of improvements on the land, and the State in which the land is located can not impose one cent of taxes on the property or improvements until title passes from the Government of the United States. Mr. King goes even further than that and says:

Permanent improvements are appurtenant to, and accordingly a part of, the land itself, hence not taxable unless the lands upon which located are taxable.

And on this subject he refers to the case decided by the United States Supreme Court of Sterns against Minnesota and other decisions of the same court.

He goes further and holds that it is very doubtful indeed whether a State can impose taxes on improvements on public lands until all liens held by the Government against the lands are paid. In other words, the Government has provided that in connection with the reclamation projects the payments for moneys advanced by the Government shall be extended over a period of 20 years, and the land held as security, and if the position taken by Mr. King, chief counsel of the Reclamation Service, is correct, the States in which the reclamation projects are located can not impose a dollar of taxes on such land until the last or twentieth payment to the Government for money advanced for the reclamation project is paid back to the Govern-

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, that is contrary to decisions of the Supreme Court of Montana, of California, and a number of other States. It is simply the opinion of one lawyer against a number of supreme court decisions.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. King cites here a number of decisions of the Supreme Court upholding his position.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the case put by the Senator from Utah, it seems to me, is not analogous to the water-power proposition, because that refers to land that the Government has not pretended to lease but is going ultimately to convey in fee simple to the man who has constructed a permanent build-There is an entirely different proposition of law involved. I think there is no doubt that the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] is right, that the length to which Mr. King goes is contrary to the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. as well as the decisions of the State courts. They have held, as I remember the decisions now, that where a homesteader takes a piece of land and has complied with the law under which he is entitled to a patent for the land, the land itself becomes taxable from that time on, even though he has not made final proof, even though he has not received a patent, and even though he has not made application for a patent.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will say to the Senator that the distinction made is that whenever the locator has the equitable title and nothing whatever remains to be done upon his part, then the land and the improvements can be taxed; but the courts have held that if there is any charge unpaid—for instance, if there are fees unpaid—the land with the improvements can not be made the subject of taxation.

Now, Mr. President, I want to read along that line-Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin. Mr. HUSTING. I should like to ask the Senator a question in regard to improvements. The law which recognizes that improvements become a part of the land recognizes such to be the case in the absence of any agreement to the contrary. Does the Senator mean to say that the United States in leasing its land can not legally provide in the lease itself that the improve-ments shall not constitute a part of the freehold, but shall be separate and apart therefrom, and subject to taxation on the part of the State?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I want to make the suggestion that the laws of real estate and the laws of property in my State and in the Senator's State are not controlled by the acts of Congress; they are controlled by the State. If the law of the legislature of my State designates certain things to be real estate, that makes them real estate; and an act of Congress to the contrary can not change the status.

Mr. HUSTING. I want to suggest to the Senator that where the United States and a freeholder in the Senator's State make an agreement to the effect that the improvements shall not constitute a part of the freehold, that is a statement of fact and not a legal proposition; and, therefore, the courts will recognize it as a contract between the parties who made it; that is to say, the land is real estate and the improvements are personal property.
Mr. SHAFROTH. Now, Mr. President-

Mr. HUSTING. If the Senator will pardon me-in other words, is it not perfectly competent for two individuals in the Senator's State to enter into an agreement whereby one may erect a building upon a leasehold, with the understanding that at the termination of the lease he may remove his property from the leasehold?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the fixing of the status of property as real estate or personal property is done by the statutes of our States. It can not be controlled altogether by individual contract. A party may go upon real estate and so attach his improvements to it that they never become real estate-that is, that they are not fixed and permanently attached to the real estate, and therefore always remain personal property-and take them off; but if he attaches his personal property permanently to the real estate, and it becomes definite and fixed, it is real estate, and a contract will not change it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It will not change it so far as taxation is concerned.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yiela to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I want to answer the Senator's question. will yield to the Senator from South Dakota in just a moment. Now, I want to call attention to why the States would never consent to that. The State has a first lien now upon the land and upon the building that has been erected by the tenant. Is it going to divide that total property and assess part of it to the owner of the real estate and part of it to the owner of the building? If that is to be the case, it makes a first lien upon all of it subject to two different liens-one upon a segregated part of the value of the entire enterprise, and the other part something that may be wiped out entirely by a change of conditions.

Mr. HUSTING and Mr. STERLING addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield, and to whom?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. HUSTING. I understand, of course, that a State-say the State of Colorado—can not tax a piece of property that belongs to the United States. But where the United States agrees with a person who wants to make improvements upon real estate and gives the State of Colorado permission to treat the improvements as an integral part of the real estate, the question then is whether the State of Colorado would want to take advantage of an arrangement which is made for its benefit.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why, that is not in this bill. This bill does not provide any such thing.

Mr. HUSTING. Can we not put it in this bill?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know. The Senator from Utah indicates that he thinks it is a constitutional question. Even if it is, it is not in this bill, and it has not been reported in any bill that has ever come to the Congress of the United States with reference to these western lands.

Mr. HUSTING. I want to say to the Senator from Idaho that, without knowing very much about the particular laws of Idaho, I submit that if there is a dam site which is improved, and a provision is put in this bill or in some other bill which declares that these improvements shall be treated as personal property, the Legislature of Idaho can, if it wants to, tax them as personal property.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the inquiry which the Senator started out with was this: If a man leased his private property to another upon which the lessee planned to erect houses, whether the leasehold would not be subject to taxation by the State and also by the Government. I believe a State could pass such a law as that; but the difficulty would be in the insufficiency of the security, and a State will not commit such error. Say that a piece of real estate is worth $50,000 and the improvements are worth $50,000. Is it conceivable that a State would adopt an arrangement by which the property would be divided and impose a tax upon the land of only $50,000 and likewise tax the improvements only $50,000. The result would be, in a great many instances, after a few years, the improvements would sell for almost nothing under taxation or a very small amount, and thus the State would lose, whereas if the State had imposed the total tax of $100,000 on the real estate, with everything that is on it, it would not lose a cent. It waives the first lien for a second lien, and no State that I know of has done

Mr. STERLING and Mr. HUSTING addressed the Chair. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.
Mr. STERLING. I think probably the Senator's view has already been partly given in the discussion he has just made; but I want to ask him if, under the laws of his State of Colorado, the interest of the lessee under this water-power bill would not be a leasehold interest? It would be a leasehold interest, would it not?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; it would be a leasehold interest. Mr. STERLING. Under the laws of the State of Colorado, would not that leasehold interest be taxable?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Not when the Government holds the title; no. I have the authorities here on that point.

Mr. STERLING. Has the Senator any authority to the effect that that leasehold interest on the part of the lessee would not be taxable?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have this situation, which is indorsed by any number of authorities, that whenever the Government undertakes any enterprise the State has not the power to tax

mr. STERLING. Mr. President—
Mr. SHAFROTH. Wait a moment, please. Whenever it leases property for the purpose of generating power, and refers to the manner in which a tax shall be put on the water itself, it is done for the very purpose, as it is claimed, of developing power. You can not tax any instrumentality or agency of the power. You can not tax any instrumentality or agency of the Government; and that very thing is an agency.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I want to know if this is the Senator's position, namely, that because the Government leases land for the purpose of a water-power site, therefore that leasehold interest held by the lessee becomes an enterprise or an instrumentality of the Government.

an instrumentality of the Government?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why, certainly it does.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am not getting along very logically in this discussion.

Mr. HUSTING. I should like to put my question before the Senator leaves that branch of the subject.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well.

Mr. HUSTING. I am asking whatever questions I ask in good faith.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I know that. I know the Senator is very earnest in this matter.

Mr. HUSTING. The Senator stated that I had started out with the proposition of a private landholder and a lessee who made improvements upon the land.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir. Mr. HUSTING. The proposition I started out with was that real estate and improvements thereon can be severable in law and in fact by an agreement to that effect.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Not as against the taxing power.
Mr. HUSTING. The taxing power in the State of Colorado is an act of the legislature, is it not?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly; and if the legislature authorizes that, it can be done,

Mr. HUSTING. That act can be amended or repealed at the pleasure of the Legislature of Colorado?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. HUSTING. Now, the proposition is that where Government lands are used for the purpose of water-power development, it can be made possible, in the act itself or in some other acts, for the State of Colorado to tax the improvements upon the Government lands if it is provided in the contract between the Government and its lessee that that shall be done, and that the State of Colorado, for instance, may tax them, subject only to the will of the Legislature of Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, Mr. President, of course it may be, although the position taken by the Senator from Idaho is that it is a constitutional matter, and consequently can not be waived even by the Congress of the United States. But eliminating that, if the Congress of the United States were to say that all of this property, including the land, should be the sub-ject of taxation, the State, of course, could tax it.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to make just a suggestion to him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the S rado yield to the Senator from New Mexico? Does the Senator from Colo-

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes.

Mr. FALL. I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but I should like to put a question along the line he is now discussing. Suppose that the State taxes the improvements and sells the improvements for taxes; who takes the leasehold estate? Under this bill the State can not do it. Then can the State tax? It can not acquire the estate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will call the attention of the Senator, right there, to another difficulty. One of these water-power plants, as the Senator knows, consists principally of a tunnel driven through rock. How are you going to levy upon a tunnel, a hole in the ground? That constitutes the principal part of the expenditure. There is one in my State down at Glenwood Springs. I think an expenditure of some $7,000,000 has been made there. If you are going to separate something from the realty, it is inseparable in a case of that kind. The house that might be erected would be, perhaps, separable; but even in that case, as I shall show here, you have not the right to tax it.

Mr. FALL. The difficulty that the Senator's bill will meet with is in the bill which we are discussing. We are not discussing something that theoretically might be done. We are discussing this bill. This bill provides that the Government of the United States can, within its pleasure, take over the entire work after the expiration of a certain length of time. Now, suppose that the State has taxed that property. It has not been able to dispose of the property, under a tax sale, to anyone else. It has not been able to buy it in for taxes itself and run it, because the Government of the United States will not grant the State the leasehold estate in it. It is precluded from getting it by a limitation upon those who can secure it. Very well. Ten thousand dollars of taxes are due. The Government of the United States expects to take over the property under the provisions of this bill. The Government of the United States takes it over without paying the taxes. That is all.

Mr. NORRIS. That does not relieve the man who owes the taxes from their payment, by any means.

Mr. FALL. Oh, well; that is a different proposition.

Mr. NORRIS. No.

Mr. FALL. We are talking about this estate; and that is exactly the mistake that the Senator has made in his discussion of the taxation upon improvements on public land. He has made that same mistake.

Mr. NORRIS. But, Mr. President, even though all that be true, it does not follow from that that the property is not tax-The State may tax a horse, and the horse may die after That does not relieve the man who did own the horse from the payment of the tax, and yet there is no way to levy on the horse to collect the tax. The State can levy on something else that he has, if he has anything else. If he has not, they can not get it.

Mr. FALL. That is exactly what we are talking about. The State may have a power, but it has no remedy.

Mr. NORRIS. It has just the same remedy that it has on all other personal property that is liable to taxation.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Now I want to devote just a few minutes to the proposition announced by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] concerning the taxation of lands that belonged to the Government at a certain time. I have here a decision in 179 United States Reports, at page 223. I read from page 251, which announces the doctrine that you can not tax the lands of the Government when the equitable title has gone out of the Government, although the patent has not been issued; but that if anything, no matter how slight it is, remains to be performed by the person who dies, or his assignee, the land is not subject to taxation, no matter how long it remains uncomplied with. Here is the decision. I read from page 251.

Mr. HUSTING. Will the Senator give me the citation again?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The citation is One hundred and seventyninth United States, at page 251. It is a very elaborate case, however, and the beginning of the case is at page 223. It is the case of Stearns against Minnesota.

Mr. President, before the Senator enters upon Mr. WORKS. that phase of the matter, let me suggest another result that might follow the right of the State to tax this property. Under the provisions of this bill, the Government not only retains the title in itself but it reserves the right to take over the property at the end of the lease. Now, if the State were permitted to tax the property and could enforce it by the sale of the property, that would deprive the Government of that right.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why, it is the taxing of an agency or an instrumentality of the United States Government.

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Now, Mr. President, I want to refer to that, which is one of the first questions that was asked. This decision says:

It is true, as has been held in the ordinary administration of the affairs of the Land Department, that whenever full payment has been made to the United States and the full equitable title has passed to an individual purchaser or homesteader, the mere delay in furnishing to such purchaser or homesteader the legal evidence of his title does not relieve the land from ordinary State taxation.

But it has also been held that until the very last moment that liens or equitable rights of the United States are extinguished, no matter how trivial or small may be the right or the lien reserved, the land is not subject to State taxation.

Now, Mr. President, they refer to the fact that a land grant was made, and it provided that the company after the location and completion of its road should pay the costs of survey, and those costs remained for 20 years unpaid for the very purpose of avoiding State taxation. The State taxed the land; but when the question came to the Supreme Court, the Supreme Court

No; as long as something remains undone upon the part of the per-son who acquires the title, or is to acquire the title, that land can not be made the subject of taxation.

It also said:

If Congress wants to do otherwise, it should pass a law removing that condition or declare that it should enforce its lien for a survey which was made years before.

A railroad company avoided taxation for more than 20 years on that very claim, and then that principle was enunciated, and it has been affirmed in repeated decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Here is a payment of rents each year to the United States Government. Even if it should say that it would convey this title-and it does not pretend even to say that it will convey it-but even if it were the kind of a case where we would want private ownership to acquire the property, as long as that yearly payment is made neither the land nor anything that belongs upon the land in the shape of an improvement can be made the subject of taxation.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President-

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from California, Mr. WORKS. I want to go a little bit further than the suggestion I made a moment ago. In this instance the Government may not only take over the property it has leased, but it is specifically provided that it shall take over all of the property; that is, the property that is attached to the property leased and the water rights that have been obtained from the States. It seems to me perfectly clear under those circumstances that if you should allow the States to tax what may possibly go back to the Government you would interfere with the operations of the Government and not the tenant alone.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have not any doubt, Mr. President, that the decision is absolutely sound. It never has been overruled. It is a late decision, rendered in 1900. That decision asserts plainly and clearly, as a complete answer to the Senator from Nebraska, that where the equitable title has left the Government, where nothing remains to be done by the purchaser or by the entryman or by the locator, then it is the subject of taxation, and the land can be taxed; but no matter how trivial or how small may be the thing to be done by the locator or the entryman before he is entitled to his patent, if it remains undone the Supreme Court of the United States says the land can not be made subject to taxation by the State,

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I had that very case in mind—I think it is the same case, although I did not remember the case itself—when I laid down the proposition that I did to the Senator. I think the case the Senator has just read bears out emphatically the statement of the claim that I made in regard to taxation.

SHAFROTH. Now, what are those statements and claims?

Mr. NORRIS. Whenever there is anything else to be done by the homesteader to get title, then the land becomes taxable under the State laws. That is the proposition I laid down.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly; that is true; but here is a proposition that there shell be paid to the United States Gov.

proposition that there shall be paid to the United States Government each year a certain amount per horsepower.

Mr. NORRIS. But the Senator forgets that there is not any attempt in this bill to convey to the lessee the title to the land.

There is no attempt to do that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Surely, then, it makes it that much stronger that such property can not be made subject to taxa-

Mr. NORRIS. No; the cases referred to would apply if this bill attempted to convey away the title. Then everything would have to be done before the land would be taxable. That has not anything to do with a lot of wires and other things that may be 20 miles away from the Government land.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is it possible that the Senator would contend that where property that can be made the subject of taxation, when everything that is required by the act to be per-formed on the part of the individual has been complied with, and if something is not done that is required it can not be taxed, yet in the case of a leasing of land by the United States with a requirement as to the construction of a water-power plant thereon, requiring a close and intimate relation between the individual and the Government all the time, it can be made the subject of taxation? Why, this case is infinitely stronger than the very case to which the Senator refers against the right of the State to tax.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will be kind enough to permit me a further interruption-

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me the Senator does not get the distinction between the rights of the lessee and the rights of the lessor. The United States Government in this bill does not attempt to convey title to the land of the United States, and I am not contending that that land would be subject to taxation. I did not agree with the Senator's colleague [Mr. THOMAS] the other day when he argued that the State of Colorado, for instance, would have a right to condemn public land and take it for irrigation purposes. I think the first case re-ferred to awhile ago completely refutes that. But if the Senator's contention is right, when a man leases under a contract a piece of land, and in the lease it is provided that he shall erect a building on it, the minute he erects the building on it the land itself becomes liable for the payment of the taxes on the building. The Senator would not contend that, would he? Could there not be a contract made between a lessor and a lessee by which the building constructed on the land would be assessed as personal property to one man and the real estate to another?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why, I most unquestionably say that it should be taxed with the land, as a part of the land, and you

Mr. NORRIS. Ordinarily not; but I think it is just as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Husting] pointed out. An agreement can be made between the owner of the land and the man who constructs the building or puts up any other improvement by which the one will be real estate and the other will be taxed as personal property and will remain so. I have in mind now an instance of that kind where a building constructed on a lot is assessed as personal property and the land itself is assessed to a different man as real estate because of the agreement under which the building was constructed.

I have an idea that the Senator can find, if he will look them up, hundreds of cases where buildings have been constructed on Government land. Take the case of the great hotel down here at the entrance of Chesapeake Bay, constructed, as I am told, on Government land. I have an idea that the Senator will find that the owners of the hotel are paying taxes to the State of Virginia on the building, although the title to the land upon which the hotel is constructed is in the Government of the United States.

The fact that they might lose their lien, while it goes to the method of collection of the tax, does not go to the fundamental principle involved. If the house that I speak of that the lessee constructs on the land is burned, then any lien that the State might have on it is destroyed; or perhaps it would not have any lien; but it does not destroy the tax. It is the same with any other personal property. While under most State laws it is made a lien upon the personal property assessed, it becomes a lien likewise upon all other personal property under most of the laws; but whether it did it or whether it did not would not have anything to do with the legal right to tax.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, a contract can be made between individuals, but it can not abrogate the taxing laws of a State. It can not be said to a State by a mere contract between two individuals, "We will, by a contract between ourselves, deprive the State of the right to impose the full tax upon that real estate, including the building, and make it severable, so that the real estate shall be taxed at one half and the building shall be taxed at the other half." That might be effective as between the parties that agreed to it, but it can not be effective as against the State; and the reason is obvious. States would lose millions and millions of dollars by permitting a great feesimple estate to be divided up into leasehold estates, and thereby assuming a second lien for half of the value of the property.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President-

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from California. Mr. WORKS. Will the Senator allow me to put a question to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I shall be very glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator from Nebraska contends that the power of taxation exists in the State as against the property placed upon the leased land. The Government leases the bare land. Everything necessary to make it useful for the generation and distribution of power must be done by the lessee. property placed upon it belongs to the lessee. Now, suppose the State should levy a tax upon the property used for the generation and distribution of power. It must follow that the State has a right to sell the property if the taxes become delinquent, as in other cases. Suppose that should be done under the provisions of this bill and that the State should buy in the property belonging to the lessee. What situation would we be in then?

Mr. NORRIS, Mr. President, the Senator assumes in his question something that I will not admit, and that is that the right to tax would necessarily include the right to sell at public sale the property so taxed. Ordinarily it does do that, but that is not involved in it. It is not necessary for the taxation right.

Mr. WORKS, Mr. President, the Senator simply admits away his whole claim, because if the Government can not enforce the tax it is equivalent to saying that it can not tax.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not admit that.
Mr. WORKS. That is what it amounts to.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me ask the Senator a question. Suppose I am taxed on a horse and buggy that I own, and the horse dies and the buggy is burned up. Does that pay the tax?

Mr. WORKS. No. That is easy. But I do not know what it has to do with this question.

Mr. NORRIS. I think it is easy myself, but it is not any easier than the question put to me. When the Senator asked me the question he said, "That includes the right to sell this property"; but the right to tax property does not necessarily include-although as a rule it does include-the right to sell under a lien the specific property taxed.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, if the right of taxation exists, as a matter of course the right to enforce that tax must go with it or the right to tax is of no consequence whatever.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but the right does not necessarily mean the right to enforce it on any particular property. It may be a lien on any other personal property that the man has.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator says I have assumed something, but he has not answered my question under that assumption.

Mr. NORRIS. I should be glad to answer the question if the Senator would include in it nothing but what in my judgment makes a fair question of it. He assumes in it something that makes it impossible to answer it, however, except to suit his idea of it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I was going to make this suggestion to the Senator from Colorado, with whose argument I agree: It has been determined over and over again that the power to tax involves the power to destroy.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly. Mr. SUTHERLAND. Indeed, it has been utilized for that very purpose by Congress. We taxed the State bank issue out of existence. We taxed oleomargarine in certain forms out of existence by exercising the power of taxation; so that that is one sovereign power that has no limit. A State, unless there is some provision in the Constitution otherwise interfering, may tax a piece of property to its full value or half of its value.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.
Mr. SUTHERLAND. Now, that is the underlying principle upon which these cases are based, namely, that the power to tax is the power to destroy. Therefore, if the States were permitted to impose taxes in such a way as to interfere with the operations of the Federal Government, they might stop the exercise of some function altogether, and, conversely, if the Government of the United States were permitted to tax in such a way as to interfere with the sovereign functions of the State, the same result might follow.

Now, here is a case where Congress, in passing this bill, is operating under a provision of the Constitution, namely, that provision which provides for disposing of the property of the United States. Congress concludes to dispose of that property by leasing it. Now, if the leasehold interest that is acquired by the lessee in the property can be taxed by the State, it can be taxed at such an amount as will put an end to that method of the United States Government dealing with the matter at all. In other words, under the guise of taxation the State may utterly destroy that sovereign power of the United States to lease its lands; and for that reason, it seems to me, it falls clearly within the principle which the Senator has been discussing.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I fully agree with the Senator.

Now, returning to that proposition, I wish to read the authority in the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. against Traill County, found in One hundred and fifteenth United States, at page 600:

The provisions in the act of July 17, 1870 (16 Stat., 291; on p. 305), that the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. by the act of July 2, 1864 (13 Stat., 365), shall not be conveyed to the company, or any party entitled thereto, "until there shall first be paid into the Treasury of the United States the cost of surveying, selecting, and conveying the same by the company or party in interest," exempts these lands from State or Territorial taxation until such payment is made into the Treasury.

The Northern Pacific Railroad Co. has acquired no equitable interest in the lands so granted to it by reason of completing its road and thus earning the granted lands, which is subject to State or Territorial taxation before such payment is made into the Treasury of the United States.

This is considered in the latter part of the decision, and I want to read an extract from it on page 610. It says:

This is considered in the latter part of the decision, and I want to read an extract from it on page 610. It says:

The United States made a magnificent grant to this company of lands equal in quantity to forty or fifty thousand square miles, an area as large as an average State of the Union. It thought proper to require of the grantee the payment of the costs of making the surveys necessary to the location and ascertalment of these lands. To secure the payment of those expenses it decided to retain the legal title in its own hands until they were paid. The Government was, as to these costs, in the condition of a trustee in a conveyance to secure payment of money. But if the land was liable to be sold for taxes due to State, Territorial, or county organizations, this security would be easily lost.

No sale of land for taxes, no taxes can be assessed on any property, but by virtue of the sovereign authority in whose jurisdiction it is done. If not assessed by direct act of the legislature itself, it must, to be valid, be done under authority of a law enacted by such legislature. A valid sale, therefore, for taxes, being the highest exercise of sovereign power of the State, must carry the title to the property sold, and if it does not do this, it is because the assessment is vold.

It follows that if the assessment of these taxes is valid and the proceedings well conducted, the sale confers a title paramount to all others, and thereby destroys the lien of the United States for the costs of surveying these lands. If, on the other hand, the sale would not confer such a title, it is because there exists no authority to make it.

At all events the holder of the equitable title to these lands has a right to prevent a sale which would have the effect of impeding the United States in the assertion of the right to them until these costs are pald.

We are aware of the use being made of this principle by the companies who, having earned the lands, neglect to pay these costs in order to prevent taxation. The remedy lies wit

Mr. HUSTING. Will the Senator give me the citation?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The citation is One hundred and fifteenth United States, page 600.

Mr. WALSH. Before the Senator passes from that it might be interesting to have the fact stated that after that decision was rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States Congress expressly made the lands taxable.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly; that could be done. Mr. WALSH. Then they became taxable.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But for years and years the railroad company escaped taxation, notwithstanding the land was there and was receiving the protection of the Government, and the State, and the county. It shows that unless there is legislation which provides that the land shall be subject to taxation it can not be taxed so long as anything remains undone on the part of the applicant or the grantee.

Mr. WALSH. Let me ask the Senator, Can not all that be overcome by a simple provision that it shall be taxable?

Mr. SHAFROTH. We never had a bill like that, and the bill in its present shape does not contain such a provision.

Mr. WALSH. That is what Congress did in reference to those lands, was it not?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Those are lands which were parted with It was a grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad.

Mr. WALSH. I am asking the Senator the simple question as to whether the difficulty proposed in that decision was not obviated by an act of Congress making the lands taxable.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It may be. Yes; that could be done. Mr. WALSH. And can not the difficulty the Senator is now talking about be obviated by a simple provision making these lands taxable?

Mr. SHAFROTH. But the bill before us does not contemplate any such right conferred upon the State. Senators talk all right, but when it comes to examining the question of taxation, recognizing in that function of government the power to destroy, then they begin to hesitate, to express doubt, and finally to oppose such a provision in the bill. If you would refer the question to the Attorney General, I think you would get an opinion to the effect that you had better not amend the bill to that extent; that it is too dangerous a proposition to give the States the power to tax. Yet-unless you do give them power to tax you are absolutely doing the negative of that which the Federal Government is getting the benefit of, namely, making the owners of private lands in the States pay all the taxes to the Government over their own private lands, and also over the Government lands.

Colo. It is supposed to have been given a right of way which is subject of taxation. But after the passage of the act granting a revocable permit all of a sudden Mr. Garfield, just two days before he went out of office, revoked 40 permits of waterpower plants.

A plant was at that time constructed and was furnishing electricity to the city of Denver for power purposes, for street car lines, and for lighting the city, yet the result has been that the county has been deprived of the income from taxation that would accrue from an assessment of $7,000,000. When such a legitimate income is taken away it will be seen how grave a wrong is being done to the States in attempting to impose upon us a system which places the perpetual ownership of these lands in the Government. It never was the intention of the framers of the Constitution that there should be any land within the borders of a State which should be exempt from taxation by that State, because when you deprive a State of the means of taxation, if you deprive it to a sufficient extent, you can destroy it.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President-

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HUSTING. I should like to ask the Senator whether he knows any special instances where the Government has put ten, fifteen, or twenty million dollars in irrigation projects which it proposes to hold in perpetuity, and whether the Senator ever objected to laws of the United States doing that thing?

Mr. SHAFROTH. If the Senator will look at those irrigation projects, he will find that the Government provides after it has gotten its money back that it shall turn over those lands to the There is not a single suggestion in that to indicate that the Government is going to hold those lands in perpetuity.

I will ask the Senator another question, Mr. HUSTING. whether, pending that time, while it is exempt from taxation, the Government has not built water-power dams which it proposes to hold in perpetuity?

Mr. SHAFROTH. If it is doing it, it is an outrage. That is all I can say as to that.

Mr. HUSTING. An outrage? Mr. SHAFROTH. It is an outrage, when, as a matter of fact, proposes to exempt land in a State forever from taxation. It can do it. I concede that the public domain in my State, as long as they reserve it, of course they can hold it. There is no doubt about that. We are helpless; we are powerless. It never was the intention of the Constitution to permit it; but there is no remedy that exists for it.

Mr. HUSTING. The Senator did not understand me. I mean did not the Government actually construct dams and vote millions of dollars for the construction of dams which it proposes to hold in perpetuity, and whether the Senator objected to the United States engaging in those enterprises?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I presume the Senator refers to the reclamation act. I was one of the persons who helped frame that act about 16 or 17 years ago.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. In just a moment. By that reclamation act it was provided that the Government, under the Interior Department, should construct various dams and various water plants for the purpose of irrigation. The act provides that there shall be so much paid each year; and when it is all paid for, then it is turned over to an organization of those persons who have paid for it. It is not perpetual ownership

Mr. HUSTING. There is nothing in the law that obligates the individual to take it over, is there?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I can say this: It is manifestly to their interest to do that.

Mr. HUSTING. But if they never take it over, the United States can hold these lands and these works in perpetuity?

Mr. SHAFROTH, The Government makes an assessment upon those people, and requires them to enter into a contract before it will undertake the construction of the dam, by which they are to pay so much per acre for the water that is furnished to them under the irrigation system. That contract is a lien upon their land, and, consequently, if there is a failure upon their part to pay the land is forfeited to the Government. It is not in all instances Government land. There are lands now under that reclamation system that for 20, 30, and 40 years have been private property in the hands of citizens.

I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. The reclamation act was intended to enable the Government to sell and dispose of its lands and for no other Mr. President, just take an illustration.
Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—
Mr. SHAFROTH. I will yield in just a moment. Here is a plant costing some $7,000,000 down near Glenwood Springs, lands finally and ultimately, and not only the lands but the water works themselves. It has no relation whatever to the general subject matter here, and that is that the ultimate purpose of the Government is not only to hold the lands under lease but to take them over finally and perpetually.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I want to read a case in the United States Supreme Court Reports, volume 133, page 496, Wisconsin Central Railroad Co. against Price County.

labus is as follows:

No State has power to tax the property of the United States within its

No State has power to tax the property of the United States within its limits.

Where Congress has prescribed conditions upon which portions of the public domain may be alienated, and has provided that upon the performance of the conditions a patent shall issue to the done or purchaser, and all such conditions have been compiled with, and the tract to be alienated is distinctly defined, and nothing remains but to issue the patent, then the donee or purchaser is to be treated as the beneficial owner of the land, holding it as his own property, subject to State and local taxation; but when an official executive act, prescribed by law, remains to be done before the tract can be distinctly defined and before a patent can issue, the legal and equitable titles remain in the United States, and the land is not subject to local taxation.

This was one of the old railroad grants made, I think, before the surveys. It is an insignificant thing compared to the total grant, or to the value of it, or to the value of the taxes that the State was endeavoring to impose upon the land; but there is the same doctrine enunciated in that decision.

Mr. President, the relation between the Federal Government and the States is plainly indicated by these illustrations, and they show that when the Federal Government erected a State it never intended, and no construction can be made that it did intend, to hold property in perpetuity. The old decision is that of Pollard's Lessee against Hagan. It was a case directly in point, and is reported in Third Howard United States, at page 212. I am reading from page 223:

The right which belongs to the society or to the sovereign of disposing, in case of necessity, and for the public safety, of all the wealth contained in the State is called the eminent domain. It is evident that this right is, in certain cases, necessary to him who governs, and is, consequently, a part of the empire or sovereign power. (Vat. Law of Nations, sec. 244.) This definition shows that the eminent domain, although a sovereign power, does not include all sovereign power, and this explains the sense in which it is used in this opinion. The compact made between the United States and the State of Georgia was sanctioned by the Constitution of the United States, by the third section of the fourth article, of which it is declared that "New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union, but no new States may be formed or erected within the jurisdiction of any other State, nor any State be formed by the junction of two or more States or parts of States, without the consent of the legislatures of the States concerned, as well as of Congress."

You can readily see if they have the power to make a State within a State they have the power to annihilate a State, and they have no right to do that under the Constitution.

When Alabama was admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States—

The original States had no public lands belonging to the United States Government-

United States Government—
she succeeded to all the rights of sovereignty, jurisdiction, and eminent domain which Georgia possessed at the date of the cession, except so far as this right was diminished by the public lands remaining in the possession and under the control of the United States, for the temporary purposes provided for in the deed of cession and the legislative acts connected with it. Nothing remained to the United States, according to the terms of the agreement, but the public lands. And if an express stipulation had been inserted in the agreement granting the municipal right of sovereignty and eminent domain to the United States, such stipulation would have been void and inoperative, because the United States have no constitutional capacity to exercise municipal jurisdiction, sovereignty, or eminent domain within the limits of a State or elsewhere, except in the cases in which it is expressly granted.

Mr. President, what does that mean? It means that the

Mr. President, what does that mean? It means that the sovereignty of the State, so far as jurisdiction is concerned, so far as the exercise of the police power is concerned, so far as the exercise of sovereignty is concerned, is in the State. It means that the Federal Government when it has land in a State is simply in the position of a private owner in the State, except by virtue of the fact that it can not be taxed. It can be the subject of taxation perhaps by act of Congress, but it can not be taxed unless there is an act of Congress; and as the Senator from Idaho suggested, it is a constitutional question whether Congress has even the power to submit the lands of the United States to taxation.

Mr. President, even if the Government had the right per-petually to own these lands, even if this was not a temporary right, a temporary holding, and that decision has been affirmed in any number of cases, it seems to me, even if that were the case, it would be wrong for the United States to hold in Colorado 13,000,000 acres of land and in addition the areas reserved on the water-power sites and on the coal lands, which in Colorado have been valued by the Geological Survey as equivalent to $500,000,000, and to decree that all that land shall be exempt from taxation for State, for county, and for school purposes.

Mr. President, it is easy to see what injury is done to the State, what enormous losses the State must sustain, and how great a burden is placed upon the holders of private property when the State has to maintain government not only upon the land which is owned by private individuals but also upon the lands which are owned by the United States Government.

Mr. President, the clause of the Constitution is that-

The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the Territory or other property belonging to the United States.

That is what it says. It does not say it shall lease them. The most permanent form of investment and of permanent holding is the leasing of land and the payment of rentals. Consequently, when you undertake to hold these lands perpetually and to lease them by the payment of yearly exactions, you are going contrary to the spirit of the law, and though by artful wording you may make the act so that the Supreme Court will wording you may make the act so that the Supreme Court will not declare it unconstitutional, if you would put into the bill your exact meaning, namely, that you propose to hold these lands perpetually, I have no doubt the Supreme Court of the United States in view of that very decision would hold the act to be unconstitutional.

But, Mr. President, the answer comes that the Government can make a lease, and it will be mighty hard for the Supreme Court of the United States to say that an act of Congress is unconstitutional when the lease contains a limit of time. Fifty years is a very small period of time in the history of a nation, and it can not say when it made a lease for 50 years it is anything more than a temporary holding and a temporary arrangement with the parties.

But, Mr. President, the parties that are back of the movement mean to maintain a perpetual ownership in the Govern-ment and mean that these lands shall never get into private ownership.

Mr. President, I want to read from the Encyclopedia of Law and Procedure, page 15. I come now to the proposition as to whether this property can be subject to taxation in any form, either upon profits or upon the product, or upon any conceivable system that might be devised.

I contend, Mr. President, that whenever you attempt to levy a tax of any kind, either a stamp tax, a tax on a franchise, or a tax of any nature whatever, by the State as against that which the Government of the United States is using as a means to an end of its own, you can not enforce any such taxation.

I read from Two hundred and twenty-first United States Supreme Court Reports, at page 404, Sargent against Herrick:

The mere location of a land warrant does not operate as a payment of the purchase price and does not operate to pass the equitable title from the United States.

A State is without power to tax public lands which have been located under warrant until the equitable title has passed from the United States.

Although if the locator had been the lawful owner of the warrant location would have entitled him to patent, if the Land Office found him not to be the lawful owner, location does not operate to pass the title until he substitutes and pays the Government price, and meanwhile the United States has such an interest in the land as renders its taxation by the State invalid.

At page 406 the court says:

As the State was without power to tax the land until the equitable title passed from the United States, and as that title did not pass until there was a full compliance with all the conditions upon which the right to a patent depended, it is apparent that the validity of the tax title depends upon the question whether the location of the warrant in 1857 without more gave a right to a patent.

They hold conclusively that a formal certificate of election was issued in 1858; that there was then, in fact, no payment for the land, and the Government received nothing until 1888. There were 30 years when the land was exempt from State taxation, although a warrant had been issued which upon the surrender of that warrant would have entitled the party to a patent.

Mr. President, I want to go now to the question of the taxation of an enterprise of any kind that the Government is under-taking. The proposition that I assert is that whenever the Government undertakes an enterprise a State has not the power nor the right to tax any instrumentality or agency of the Government in the carrying out of its design. In other words, Mr. President, as in the case of the Maryand State Bank, there was a stamp tax imposed upon bills issued by that national bank. The State of Maryland said it had the right because the property was not the property of the United States; that the bills it proposed to tax did not belong to the United States; but the Supreme Court held that in the establishment of a banking system you could destroy that banking system by taxation. It was only a few cents on each bill, but if you have a right to impose

1 cent you would have the right to impose the full value of the bill, because the power of taxation, as has been said by the Senator from Utah, is the power to destroy. It is unlimited. You may destroy, according to that. At the present time over in Europe we are seeing such large taxation imposed that it reminds me of the fact that taxation can be made practically to the full value of the property taxed.

In that case they justified it on the ground that they were sovereign. They justified it on the ground that they did not, as a matter of fact, interfere with the Government, because the subject of taxation did not belong to the Government. But the finding of the court was that it interfered with the establishment and the operation of that bank. The bank did not belong to the United States; it was under a banking system. Consequently, it goes to the extent of saying that wherever the Government undertakes anything that it thinks is necessary for the exercise of its powers as a Government, any attempt on the part of the State to cripple that undertaking is void. Consequently, it was held that that power to tax placed upon an instrument itself was void because of the fact that it might be used to the extent of crippling the very bank which the Treasury of the United States had authorized to be in operation.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President-

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator. Mr. HUSTING. I do not want to interrupt the Senator on this or any other similar case he has cited, but in this case as in all the other previous cases, I presume, and in all the succeeding cases along that same point, the court does not hold that the State has not a right to tax upon constitutional grounds or for constitutional reasons, but merely because—

Mr. SHAFROTH. The only case I know upon that is the one in One hundred and fifteenth United States, in which the court says that the right or the power of taxation by the State is prohibited by the Constitution.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator from Wisconsin pardon me? addressed a question to the Senator from Colorado a little while ago in the hope that we might abbreviate this discussion. suppose the Senator will concede if the bill should provide that the interest of the lessee could be taxed, if we made such a provision in the bill-

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I doubt it very much.

Mr. WALSH. I will say to the Senator I would be glad to join him in putting a provision in the bill here that whatever interest the lessee has shall be subject to taxation.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, here is the difficulty that comes in there. Our laws have got to be uniform in the States. When you attempt to say what shall be required to tax a leasehold estate it not only affects this proposition but it affects every other proposition. I want to say in a matter of taxation as between private parties I do not know of a single State that permits it, although I believe that if the State were to enact a law it could do so.

Mr. WALSH. I have a decision here showing that that is just what they did in the State of Nevada, and showing that it was entirely justified by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the

Mr. HUSTING. I wish to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me first answer the Senator from Montana. I can readily see why a State would never consent to segregate a fee-simple title that carries with it the valuation not only of the land but also of the buildings upon it, and say that it shall be divided because the owners of the property want it divided, the State to take a first lieu for, say, $50,000 on the land and then take a second lieu for $50,000 on the building. I should think if it were put in there by some kind of legerdemain and reasoning the State would conclude it was not wise to do it.

Mr. HUSTING. Perhaps the Senator is right, taking that as a proposition of their own, but if the United States gave a leasehold upon a dam sight and improvements and they were declared to be severally taxable by the States, the State of Colorado would not hesitate through its legislature to see to it that the proper amount of tax was levied on the improvement.

Mr. SHAFROTH. You can readily see that our laws have to be uniform as to taxation.
Mr. HUSTING. This act will be uniform throughout the United States upon this point.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not mean the act of Congress, I mean the legislation of the State. If it becomes necessary to pass a State act, it must be uniform.

a State act, it must be uniform.

Mr. WALSH and Mr. HUSTING addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. I want to know if they did not do that in the State of Colorado; if they did not tax the interests of the railroad company in a right of way, the fee to which belongs to the United States?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No. I was on the board of equalization of that State when I was its governor, and we never did any-thing of the kind. I will state to the Senator now merely an illustration. The Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad ex-tends through the State of Colorado and the ownership of it is in what? It is in the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad, in Nebraska. You do not find two assessments; you do not find one assessment against one railroad company and another assessment against the other. You can readily see that a State would be foolish to segregate and divide the assessments be-tween the two, and say: "We will take a second lien on something, and for half of the value we will take a first lien." State would never do that. It would be foolish to do it. There is one assessment made against those roads, although the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad, in Nebraska, which has the title, makes a lease to the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad for, I think it is, 100 years, or it may be for 999 years. There is no such thing as dividing those assessments in the case of railroads.

Mr. WALSH. That was not what I asked the Senator. asked the Senator if there were any railroads in his State which have a right of way over the public lands granted by the Government of the United States, the Government owning the fee?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. And whether the railroad right of way itselfthe right of occupancy of the land—is not taxed?
Mr. SHAFROTH. It is.

Mr. WALSH. Exactly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But that has nothing to do with this case, Mr. President. Here is a railroad which has been built from the Mississippi River to the Pacific Ocean, which has a right of way, and there the equitable title has parted from the Government; it exercises no authority over it, but it comes within the lines of these decisions and can be subject to State authority. The Government has got nothing further to do with it; it can be made the subject of judgment, of execution, and forced sale by a sheriff.

Mr. President, there are two cases cited in this majority re-

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado once more yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Hollis in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Mon-

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield. Mr. WALSH. If the Senator will pardon me, I should like to call his attention to a decision upon the point that he is discussing, in which the possessory title is segregated and separate from the title in fee, and the possessory title is made subject

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is the case of a mining claim, is it

Mr. WALSH. No; it is not the case of a mining claim, but it is the case of a railroad right of way.

Mr. SHAFROTH. What decision is it?

Mr. WALSH. It is the State of Nevada against the Central Pacific Railroad Co. I read from page 258, Twenty-first Nevada Reports. That opinion says:

Pacific Railroad Co. I read from page 258, Twenty-first Nevada Reports. That opinion says:

Generally, it is the full ownership—the title in fee of lands, or what is equivalent to it—that is assessed. In the absence of a showing to the contrary, it is presumed that the assessment is based upon this title. It is believed that the case of possessory claims to the public lands is the only exception to this rule.

But in the new States and Territories, where the settlements were generally in advance of the public surveys, it was found that often large and valuable properties were situated upon land to which no title could be obtained. Under such circumstances it became a necessity that some rule should be found for determining in whom the right to this property lay, and the most natural as well as equitable was that it belonged to the first possessor or his grantees. Accordingly, such possession has been treated as title sufficient to maintain trespass, ejectment, and many other actions. Such possessory interests have been subject to contract and sale almost as freely as title in fee. They descend to the helr and constitute assets of the estate in the hands of the executor or administrator. But such possession to be of any validity must be actual and substantial. It "must be an actual occupation, a complete subjugation to the will and control, a pedis possessio. The mere assertion of title, the casual or occasional doing of some act upon the premises, have never been held sufficient. *

By actual possession is meant a subjection to the will and dominion of the claimant, and is usually evidenced by occupation, by a substantial inclosure, by cultivation, or by appropriate use, according to the particular locality and quality of the property." Unable to tax the land itself, by reason of the title being in the United States, the plan was evolved of taxing this possession and possessory right, as something separate and distinct from the title and which was, in all other ways, treated as property. There were then two tit the possession that is presumed to follow the title. The very situation which induced the legislature to adopt the scheme of taxing possessory claims shows that it was actual possession that was meant. If the title was in the individual, the land was what was taxed. If it was public land and unoccupied, there was nothing subject to taxation. If occupied, it was the actual possession of the land, with the improvements placed thereon, that constituted the property to be assessed.

Upon the basis of that reasoning the court held, as I read from the syllabus, as follows:

Since the act of Congress of July 10, 1886, the surveyed but unpatented lands within the grant to the Central Pacific Railroad are no longer exempt from taxation by reason of the Government lien thereon for the costs of surveying, etc. The conditions contained in that act to the effect that the lien shall continue and that the United States may become a preferred purchaser at any tax sale of such land control such sales, and there is no necessity for a legislative acceptance by the States of the conditions of the act.

Congress, having full control over the public domain, may make it subject to State taxation upon such conditions as are deemed proper, and then, if so taxed, it must be done subject to those conditions.

The act of July 10, 1886, is a grant to the States of the right to tax lands in which the United States still has such an interest as renders them exempt, and, being beneficial, its acceptance by the grantee will be presumed.

The title or interest of the United States in the public lands will not be affected where only the possessory claim to the land is assessed. Such assessment will only reach the taxpayer's interest in the land.

Under section 1108, General Statutes, it is a good answer for a defendant when assessed for a possessory claim to land to deny such claim and plead that whatever claim it has is exempt from taxation.

The possessory claim to public land which may be taxed as something separate and distinct from the title in fee is an actual possession and not a constructive possession or a mere claim to the land. Mortgang and leasing public land do not constitute actual possession thereof.

Upon that ground the State of Nevada taxes the right of way of the railroad company over public lands.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, there is no doubt that the right of way of a railroad has been regarded as something in which the Government does not claim any interest. It is distinguishable entirely from those decisions where it is stated that something is to be done by which title is to be acquired. It does not fall within that category, and the two decisions which are cited in the majority report are of the same nature. They are as to mining claims, and consequently do not come within that class.

Mr. President, I have not seen the Nevada opinion, which has been quoted by the Senator from Montana, but I must say that it is in exact harmony, so far as right-of-way taxation is concerned, with every other decision of which I have heard. That is something that the Government does not claim any interest in, and by virtue of that it permits its taxation.

In a mining claim—and it is of the same character—whenever a man discovers a lode or a vein one of the decisions of the Supreme Court goes on the basis that it is his; that he does not have to buy it from the United States Government; that there is no obligation upon his part ever to pay for it, because, as is known, he does what is called assessment work amounting to $100 each year upon the claim. He can do that for a thousand years and never acquire title to the claim; yet he owns it and can convey it, and it is subject to taxation. But, Mr. President, it is because of the fact that there is nothing further to be done; that there is no payment of money due the Government on that claim. It is true, if he desires to get a patent and to avoid the assessment work which has to be done every year, he is required to perform work of the amount of $500. He then gets his patent from the United States Government. But under the laws of the United States there is no requirement that that should be done. Consequently under these very decisions it is a possessory title, which has been made the subject of taxation and which can be made the subject of taxation.

Another case which has been referred to was a case where ores were seized that had been taken out of a mine the title to which had not been parted with by a patent from the United States Government. But we treat that as something upon which we can levy as personal property or which can be levied upon on the other ground that it is a possessory title which the owners have, which can be made the subject of taxation. Whenever, however, we come to the property of the United States, where the United States retains an interest which it desires to assert and which it desires to keep, you will find that none of the decisions permits such property to be the subject of taxation.

Mr. WALSH. I trust the Senator from Colorado will not be annoyed if I ask him to yield to me again?
Mr. SHAFROTH. No; certainly not.

Mr. WALSH. Let me read for the Senator an extract from section 6250 of the Colorado statutes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. WALSH. That section reads as follows:

Undivided interests scheduled: Any person who has or claims to have an undivided interest in lands or any lien upon any parcel or tract of land, or any inchoate interest, possessory interest, equitable, or other estate less than the fee, may specify in his schedule such undivided share, estate, or interest for the assessment of taxes thereon in like manner and with like effect as estates of entireties or estates in fee simple are required to be specified in the schedule; and all such undivided estates, shares, or interests, and such liens and inchoate estate so specified, shall be assessed and advertised for sale and sold for the nonpayment of any tax assessed thereon and redeemed from such sale in like manner and with like effect as estates in fee and entireties are assessed, advertised, sold, and redeemed from sales for taxes in the manner provided by law. An undivided interest may be redeemed upon payment of a ratable share of the sum required to redeem the whole, even though the whole shall have been sold.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But suppose the title is, in the United.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But suppose the title is in the United States Government?

Mr. WALSH. That is just exactly what is intended here. If there is a possessory interest, that possessory interest can be taxed under the laws of the State of Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If one has a possessory interest, it can be subject to taxation if there is nothing due, no obligation due to the United States.

Now I want to read from Cooley on Taxation as bearing directly on this point. I read from page 129:

directly on this point. I read from page 129:

National and State powers exclusive.—It is the theory of our system of government that the State and the Nation alike are to exercise their powers, respectively, in as full and ample a manner as the proper departments of government shall determine to be needful and just, and as might be done by any other sovereignty whatsoever. This theory by necessary implication excludes wholly any interference by either the State or the Nation with an independent exercise by the other of its constitutional powers. If it were otherwise, neither Government would be supreme within what has been set apart for its exclusive sphere; but, on the other hand, would be liable at any time to be crippled, embarrassed, and perhaps wholly obstructed in its operations at the will or caprice of those who for the time being wielded the authority of the other. And that an exercise of the power to tax might have that effect is manifest from a consideration of the nature of the power. Any "power which in its nature acknowledges no limits," and which, even in a lawful and legitimate exercise, may be carried to the extent of an absolute appropriation of property or destruction of the franchise or privilege upon which it is exerted, must, as a power of one sovereignty, be incapable of being admitted within the jurisdiction of another for exercise at the discretion of the power wielding it. And the State and the Nation having each their separate and distinct sphere, within which they are permitted by the fundamental law to exercise independent authority, the principle which excludes from one sovereignty the taxing power of another is as much applicable within the American Union to the taxation of State and Nation, respectively, as it is elsewhere.

Mr. Provident the difficulty with the signature page of their separate with the signature page in the separate within the page of their separate and states and the same page of another is as much applicable within the American Union to the taxation of State

Mr. President, the difficulty with the situation here is that Senators have been talking about cases where the title of property is in individuals, as to which an entirely different principle applies as compared to cases where the Government controls through an agency some enterprise which it has undertaken.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. If the Senator will allow me to finish this clause first, I will yield to him.

Mr. HUSTING. Very well. Mr. SHAFROTH. Before reading further from Cooley under the heading "Federal agencies," however, I will say that it is our claim that when the Government provides for leasing a water-power site for the construction of a water-power plant thereon it is carrying out an enterprise of the Government and that the Government does not part with the title, but this bill provides that it shall hold the title and shall grant 50-year leases for the purpose of having the enterprise conducted. Mr. Cooley says, on page 130 of the work from which I have already quoted:

Federal agencies.—It follows as a necessary and inevitable conclusion that the means or agencies provided or selected by the Federal Government as necessary or convenient to the exercise of its functions can not be subjected to the taxing power of the States—

Under this bill there is an agency provided. A lease is made; lessees are authorized to conduct a business; they are to generate power, and the power is to be divided and distributed among the people upon reasonable terms; but it is an enterprise undertaken by the Federal Government, and consequently everything in the nature of a means of conducting this enterprise is an agency for carrying out the will of the Government, and, therefore, comes within the doctrine laid down in Mr. Cooley's work on Taxation, under the heading "Federal Agen-

Mr. Cooley says:

It follows as a necessary and inevitable conclusion that the means or agencies provided or selected by the Federal Government as necessary or convenient to the exercise of its functions can not be subjected to the taxing power of the States, since, if they could be, a State dissatisfied therewith, or disposed for any reason to cripple or hamper the operations of the Federal Government, might tax them to an extent that would impair their usefulness, or even put them out of existence.

That is the reason, Mr. President, why such agencies are not permitted to be the subject of taxation. Now, I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, I should like to get the Senator's position on this question: Does the Senator contend that any of the cases read by him, or which he has cited, are in any way in conflict with the proposition that the Government can in contracting with a licensee or appropriator of water provide that the improvements may be taxed by the State in which they are located? I should like to know whether the Senator takes issue with the assertion of the right of the Government to contract with individuals or corporations so that a State may lawfully tax such properties within a State?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, if the United States Government were to provide that the realty and the improvements thereon should be subject to taxation by the State for State, county, and school purposes, I believe, as a matter of fact, it could do so; but that is a power which is not given in this bill.

Mr. HUSTING. I understand that. I merely wanted to get the Senator's position.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah], it will be understood, does not agree with me in that. He says that the Congress has not that power. I think the Congress has the power, but Congress does not provide in this bill that the property shall be subject to taxation; and consequenly Senators will appreciate the evil effects which are bound to be felt by the States in not having such property subject to taxation. For instance, a water-power plant is erected at an expenditure of $10,000,000 in one of the mountainous counties of my State and it is not subject to taxation. Perhaps the value of that water-power plant as compared to the total valuation of the property of the county is one-fourth or one-fifth of the whole. Is it right, as a matter of fact, to have that property exempt from taxation for State purposes, for county purposes, and for school purposes? Yet this bill does not provide for any taxation for such purposes.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, as I understand the Senator, he really would rather not have the investment there at all than to have it there not subject to taxation?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, it can readily be seen what that would mean in the end. In your State, I have no doubt, as well as in mine, the payment of taxes on property for 30 years is equal to the value of the property assessed; and if such property is going to be exempt perpetually from taxation, it will make the people who pay taxes on private property pay for what would be legitimate taxes upon the property exempted to the extent of the full value thereof every 30 years. It can readily be seen what a terrible hardship that would work on the persons who pay taxes in the State on private property.

Mr. President, as to the matter of taxation of the instrument or means, even if there exists the right to segregate property into classes, I do not know of a State that makes such segregations. I admit that a State has a right to say that it will divide an estate; that it will consider the real estate itself as one item and the improvements upon it as another item and assess them separately; but I know of no State that actually does so. It may be that some State has adopted such a system; but it seems to me that sad experience would demonstrate to them its unwisdom, because when an entire property is assessed as one estate, as a fee-simple estate, then the taxing power has a first lien for the taxes upon all of the property, upon the real estate, and upon the personal property as well. It can be seen what a hardship might result in some instances if, as a matter of fact, the two classes of property had to be separated. If on a piece of land that is worth $100,000 there are erected improvements of a value of $100,000 and the fee-simple title is subjected to an assessment merely upon the valuation of $100,000 and a separate assessment is made upon the improvements amounting to $100,000, and the effort is made to get the assessment out of the improvements, it will be found to be a very difficult matter. There may be a tax of $4,000 of $5,000 upon them. It becomes a question as to whether the party will operate or how he will operate; any number of difficulties will be encountered; and, consequently, it would be very hard to find any bidders if it were attempted to sell the property. The State would be unwise to divide an estate when it has the power and the means to count it as one estate and to have a first lien for the taxes upon all of the estate, including the improvements thereon.

Mr. President, that suggestion has been referred to many times, but the State would not undertake to do that, in my judgment, even if it could do it. When we consider this whole enterprise as being conducted by an agency of the Government, when we take into consideration that the Government is undertaking this thing for the purpose of developing power and is using these instrumentalities and means for the purpose of carrying out that object, it will readily be seen that it comes clearly within the doctrine of Mr. Cooley, which I will again read:

Federal agencies: It follows as a necessary and inevitable conclusion, that the means or agencies provided or selected by the Federal Government as necessary or convenient to the exercise of its functions can not be subjected to the taxing power of the States, since, if they could be, a State dissatisfied therewith, or disposed for any reason to cripple or hamper the operations of the Federal Government, might tax them to an extent that would impair their usefulness, or even put them out of existence.

It will readily be seen that under that reasoning the State has not the taxing power. He says so expressly and gives as a reason for the statement that the State might tax to death any enterprise of the Government. Under this bill the Federal Government proposes to make leases and to constitute an agency to carry out the enterprise, so that it comes clearly within the definition which is made by Mr. Cooley, a great author on taxation and constitutional limitations.

It seems to me, first, that no property can be subject to State taxation, real estate or anything on real estate, where the title remains in the Government, unless the terms and conditions of the grant have been complied with by the grantee, and no matter how insignificant the thing to be done, if it remains undone, the property is not subject to State taxation. For example, I cite the case of the Northern Pacific Railroad Co., where they had simply to pay the amount of the cost of surveys of the road. but which they held up for 20 or 30 years for the purpose of avoiding taxation. Notwithstanding that, the Supreme Court of the United States held that the lands were not subject to taxation. because the railroad company had not complied with the terms of the grant, not having paid an insignificant sum for the survey of the land. So that in that view of the case we have no right to assess either the real estate or anything upon the real estate.

Senators say we can assess the leasehold upon that property. If it were a leasehold as between individuals and the State authority gave power to divide it, then, as a matter of fact, I believe we could, but this is not the case of an individual on one side and an individual on the other; it is the case of the Government on one side and a Government agency upon the other, and consequently we have no power either to tax the property of the United States Government, namely, the real estate, nor have we the power to tax the means, namely, the leasehold estate, which the Government employs for the purpose of carrying on its own enterprise for the public good. So, Mr. President, it seems to me that under any view of this matter these lands can not be the subject of taxation unless there is a direct and specific provision placed in the bill authorizing the property to be subject to taxation.

Mr. President, that being clear, as it seems to me, I want to look at this decision from which the Senator from Montana has read. This is the Twenty-first Nevada, at page 247:

Railroad companies—Taxation of surveyed, unpatented lands: Since the act of Congress of July 10, 1886, the surveyed but unpatented lands within the grant to the Central Pacific Railroad are no longer exempt from taxation by reason of the Government lien thereon for the costs of surveying, etc.

The Government relieved that; but, Mr. President, it does not seem that that is the right of way. There may be some-thing afterwards, but within this is the right of way. That relates to the land grant. It relates to the alternate sections that were granted under the act of Congress to this railroad company in aid of the construction of the road.

The conditions contained in that act to the effect that the lien shall continue and that the United States may become a preferred purchaser at any tax sale of such land, control such sales, and there is no necessity for a legislative acceptance by the States of the conditions

Mr. President, that carries out exactly what we were contending-namely, that as long as the most insignificant thing in the world remains to be done upon the part of the grantee the State has no right to tax the property. It took an act of Congress, passed July 10, 1886, to give the State the right to tax that property, although these fees for the survey of the lands had not been paid by the company.

Public domain—taxation subject to conditions imposed by Congress, Congress, having full control over the public domain, may make it subject to State taxation—

I think so. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] indicated the other way, but I think Congress has that power-upon such conditions as are deemed proper; and then, if so taxed, it must be done subject to those conditions.

Taxation—Right granted to States—Acceptance presumed: The act of July 10, 1886, is a grant to the States of the right to tax lands in which the United States still has such an interest as renders them exempt; and, being beneficial, its acceptance by the grantee will be presumed.

Mr. President, in that very syllabus it can be seen that the converse of that proposition is also true; that is, that if there is anything that is to be done by the grantee for the United States Government that has not been done, then there is no power to tax; and this bill does not provide any exemption from taxation. This bill does not provide the power of the State to tax. It simply would come under the general rule that the State government has no right to tax anything that belongs to the Federal Government nor to tax any agency which the Federal Government may use in accomplishing any enterprise of its own.

Assessment—Interest affected: The title or interest of the United States in the public lands will not be affected where only the possessory claim to the land is assessed. Such assessment will only reach the taxpayer's interest in the land.

The syllabus is not sufficiently elaborate to indicate what that refers to.

Idem.—Plea of exemption from taxation: Under section 1108, General Statutes, it is a good answer for a defendant when assessed for a possessory claim to land to deny such claim and plead that whatever claim it has is exempt from taxation.

Public lands.—Nature of possessory claim subject to taxation: The possessory claim to public land which may be taxed as something separate and distinct from the title in fee is an actual possession and not a constructive possession or a mere claim to the land. Mortgaging and leasing public land do not constitute actual possession thereof.

Payment of taxes—Tender—Demand for receipt: Where upon payment of taxes the statute requires the tax receiver to give a receipt a tender of taxes is not rendered invalid because such receipt is demanded.

Mr. President, this opinion is too long to read, but I will read this part with relation to possessory claims, at page 256:

Mr. President, this opinion is too long to read, but I will read this part with relation to possessory claims, at page 256:

Possessory claim to unsurveyed lands: The answer denies that the defendent had any possession, possessory claim, or possessory interest in the land assessed, or any right or interest therein, except such as it derived under the land grants already mentioned. It is contended that this is insufficient, because it does not comply with General Statute, section 1108, and deny "all claim, title, or interest in the property assessed."

All real estate, whether it is the title in fee or the possessory claim that is assessed, is to be assessed to the owner; if it is not, the assessment is void. Sometimes, however, there is more than one person claiming to be the owner, and jutice does not require that the rule stated shall be extended further than is necessary for the protection of the parties interested in the property. It is often difficult to determine among several claimants who the true owner is, and the statute has consequently provided that the one to whom it is assessed must, to avoid the assessment, not only plead that he is not the owner, but also deny all claim, title or interest in the property. But section 1108 provides for several defenses, besides this denial—among others, that the property is exempt from taxation. The defendant may plead any or all of these defenses or set up one as to part of the property and others as to the rest. If he is assessed for the laind itself instead of the possessory claim, and the title is still in the Government, under the plea of exemption of United States property he may escape all taxation. Land held under the preemption or homestead law is exempt from taxation until the issuance of the final certificate, and this is a defense available to the preemption or homestead law is exempt from taxation until the issuance of the final certificate, and this is a defense available to the preemption or homestead claimant. But here we have a case where there m

Mr. President, this opinion is too long to read in full; but in the matter of the land grant of alternate sections, it has been held, as I have shown, in One hundred and fifteenth United States and in other decisions, that if anything whatever remains to be done upon the part of the grantee or upon the part of the homesteader or upon the part of the claimant of any kind, the title remains in the Government, not subject to taxation; and the only ground upon which these water-power sites and the improvements constructed upon the same can become the subject of taxation under those decisions is to make them expressly so by an act of Congress. That is not done, nor intended to be done, by this act.

But, Mr. President, in the case of lands there is no agency here. In the case of the construction of water-power plants for the purpose of having an enterprise conducted under the sanction and control of the Government there is an agency, there is a means employed by the Government, and everything that enters into that means or that agency is exempt from taxation, because otherwise you could destroy the enterprise. If the power of taxation means the power to destroy, the power of taxation exercised upon these water-power plants can become the object of destruction; and thus the Federal Government may lose all of its intended means of benefit to the people of the United States by reason of the construction of the waterpower plant and the operation thereof.

It seems to me to be plain and clear, therefore, that inasmuch as an annual amount is to be paid by the individual, even if it were provided that these water-power sites could be deeded in fee simple by the Government to the individual, as long as there is a yearly stipend to be provided, there is a condition there which has not been and can not be complied with according to the terms of the act itself, and therefore the land and the improvements can not be taxed. But even if that were out of the way, this is an enterprise undertaken by the Government, and the means that are used by the Government for that purpose can not be the subject of taxation; in other words, the water-power plant; because the sale of the water-power plant might destroy the very enterprise which the Government is undertaking. Even if the contention which is made by the Senator in the majority report as to a possessory title on real estate—the two cases upon mining claims that I referred to—were applicable to a case of this kind, Mr. President, that would not be fair to the State.

In the case of mining claims the Government recognizes that the discoverer is the owner of the vein in one decision—the one that the Senator refers to—and in the other decision it treats the matter of the product of the mine, severed from the mine, as personal property, and therefore as the subject of taxation. But, Mr. President, if that is a governmental means if it is an agency-severing it from the real estate does not make it the subject of taxation, because you can kill an enterprise by taking the product and confiscating it just as well as you can kill the enterprise by direct taxation upon the plant itself.

I supposed, Mr. President, that it was and is recognized that a State has a right, in its sovereign capacity, to tax every root of land within its borders. If it has not that right, it is not a sovereign; and whenever the United States Government exempted lands from taxation until disposed of by the Federal Government, it meant never to impair the object and purpose of State government.

Mr. President, even if these matters were not legal, even if the Federal Government had certain rights with relation to the land, nevertheless it would be eminently unfair to the States. This is a dual form of government. We have the National Government for national affairs; we have the State government for State affairs. The powers of taxation have been usually divided, with the major power to raise taxes lodged in the Federal Government. The Federal Government raises taxes much easier than the States do. The duties of the governments are divided. The National Government must support a Navy; it must support an Army; they are necessary for the protection of the entire country. But the State has various burdens that it must bear, and they are under the sanction of the Federal Government. It is provided in the Federal Constitution that there shall be a government, republican in form, in each one of the States of the Union. In order to make a government republican in form, in its good and true sense, it is necessary that there should be education; it is necessary that we should have schools; it is necessary that we should have universities. And that requires the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars. By whom is that done? That is done by the States; that is not done by the National Government, and yet the National Government is as much interested in the results as the States are interested in them. It is as much the duty of the Government to see that the man who votes for President is well qualified as it is for the State to see that the man who votes for governor shall be educationally qualified. We know that in our Republic it is the general information, the general education of the people, that permits them to determine questions for themselves as to what is a wise policy or what is not; and they manifest that in their votes, registering their judgment upon the wisdom of a policy.

Therefore, when we consider that this government is dual in form—the National Government having duties relating to things of a national character and the State government having certain other duties to perform—and that they work together, instead of there being a divergence, instead of the National Government keeping millions and millions of acres of land exempt from taxation by the States, it ought to afford the means by which the State can raise revenue for the purpose of performing this part of its duty; namely, for the purpose of supplying money for the education of the people and for the maintenance of schools.

Why, Mr. President, the outlay upon the part of the States in maintenance of schools is perfectly enormous. We have over 5,000 teachers in the State of Colorado, and we are a State of comparatively small population. We have school buildings that run up into the hundreds of millions of dollars, not constructed by the United States Government but constructed by taxation upon the people, upon their private property. It is manifestly unfair for the Government to say: "It is true that I have a partnership with you, but I will make the owners of the private property in the State of Colorado not only maintain county government and State government over all of the lands, whether they are Government lands or whether they are private lands, but I will make them support the schools of the State without contribution, except in a merely nominal form," which, I think, in our State amounts to $1.38 per capita, which is a mere bagatelle compared to what the State is required to pay.

Consequently, Mr. President, it is wrong for this Government to say that these lands shall not be subject to taxation forever, when the very purpose of levying the tax is to raise money for State governmental purposes that are just as essential and just as important for the existence of the Federal Government itself as any other branch of the Federal Government.

Consequently, we find that in this dual government and in this partnership between the State and the Federal Government the State has the worst of it, because it has a great many more burdens to bear than the National Government. The States have 48 legislatures to pay. The States have 48 chief executives to pay. The States have 48 attorneys general to pay. The States have 48 of each of the other State officers to pay; and in addition to that they have all the county officers to pay. Consequently, it is a burden which, when imposed, is imposed to the detriment of the Federal Government itself.

Mr. President, in view of those circumstances, no matter what the law is, no matter if you can levy on a leasehold, you can never get the full value out of it. No matter what the law may be, it is unfair to provide that these lands shall be exempt from taxation.

Why, Mr. President, we passed a bill here three or four years ago called the Alaskan coal-leasing bill, and I then called attention to the fact that the lands in private ownership in the Territory of Alaska were only one-half of 1 per cent. How they are ever going to expect Alaska, when it has lands that can be taxed to the extent of only one-half of 1 per cent, to maintain a State government, I can not understand. I can not see how the owners of private property can maintain government over those vast stretches of land when any such small amount of land is in private ownership. You will find, when you go to create a State and transfer the revenues to the State treasury instead of to the Federal Treasury, that that government can not be exercised by the State of Alaska, if it ever should be created a State.

By the way, Mr. President, I predicted at that time that there would not be a single lease taken out in the Territory of Alaska. It has been nearly three years since that time, and I inquired recently as to whether a lease had been taken out, and they told me no, not one. There have been applications for some, but evidently the conditions of the lease have been so onerous that it has not been agreed upon as yet.

But that is a divergence from this part of the discussion. The proposition which I am discussing is the fairness of exempting perpetually from taxation Government land in a State.

Mr. President, we have another clause in the enabling act of each State which provides that all States, when admitted, shall be admitted upon equal terms with the original States in every respect whatsoever. That is the language used. What does that mean? Does it mean that the power of taxation can be permanently withheld from the State? Does it mean, as a matter of fact, that in Massachusetts, where they can tax every foot of land, the Government can withhold these public lands forever from taxation? When you take that in connection with the other clause of the Constitution which provides that Congress shall have the power to dispose of the public lands, it seems to me it ought to become clear that it is the duty of Congress to dispose of the lands if it wants to treat the States It seems to me that unless it does that it is not right and fair to the States, by which this Government is supported

Why, we do not find that in Ohio. Ohio did not give up all its resources. We do not find that water powers have been retained by the Federal Government there. We do not find that all the public lands in Indiana were reserved or withheld from taxation, nor in Illinois, nor in Missouri, nor in Kansas. But as quickly as you get to the Rocky Mountain States, which are the most difficult of all to get settlers for, the most difficult of all in which to raise money for the purpose of supporting schools and State and county governments, then the line is drawn, and we have to have gigantic reserves, running to the extent of millions and millions of acres, exempt from taxation.

Mr. President, it is not fair. Is that the "equal treatment" that we are guaranteed in the enabling act given to the State of Colorado, that it shall be admitted upon equal terms with the original States—not the intermediate States, but the original 13 States—in every respect whatsoever? Is that a fair course of action upon the part of the Federal Government?

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Husting] has said that something might be put in this bill granting the right of taxation. If you are going to have a leasing bill, unquestionably it ought to be done, I have not any doubt about that; but it is not in the bill, and I find no amendment offered to that effect. Yet, Mr. President, if it gets to the House of Representatives I recognize the fact that they will strike it out, because they will say, "Why, you are putting in the State government the power to annihilate all of these things by taxation."

No, Mr. President, it is not fair. It is not fair to the Western States; it is not fair to the States that have public domain in them, that have these reservoir sites in them. You can readily see that where these water-power sites cost an enormous amount of money they pay a considerable portion of the total taxes that are raised for school purposes and for county purposes and State purposes.

Mr. President, Colorado and all of these Western States are acting fairly with the Federal Government. We pay taxes to the Federal Government, It is estimated that over $5,000,000 is paid in Federal taxes by the State of Colorado. The State should do it. It is a part of the Union, and it should be made to pay the same proportion as other States of the Union. We raise, by State taxation, a little over $1,400,000. I never imagined, until I looked up the question, that we were paying three times as much—nay, more than that—to the Federal Government in the shape of taxation as we were collecting for our own State government; and yet that is the exact fact which exists in the State of Colorado, and I have not any doubt but that it is the same condition that exists in the other Western States.

Mr. President, if we are to pay our proportion of the taxes to the Federal Government, and all these other States have obtained their resources free, have never had them reserved from taxation, have never had them exempt, is it fair to us, especially when we came into the Union under a clause that said that we should have the rights of the original 13 States in every respect whatsoever? It is clearly inharmonious with the system of our Government that there should be such a thing as perpetual ownership of the land upon the part of the Federal Government.

Mr. President, there seems to be some objection to lands being taken up for power purposes, for coal purposes, for mineral purposes, because it is feared that the person who takes them up will make some profit out of the undertaking. Mr. President, take the coal fields or the water-power plants. What has made the value of that coal field? It has been the inhabitants of the State. It has been the immigration which they have drawn there; it has been the development and settlement of the State. That is what creates values. Those coal lands would have remained for 6,000 years longer without any value attaching to them if it had not been for the citizens developing the States. Is it possible that the Government, now seizing the opportunity and advancement of price by reason of the various works and actions of the citizens of the States, should assume the position that these permits are too valuable to be granted under ordinary laws, and that it will require them to be leased, and will place such a value upon the coal lands that the people will not pay for them?

Mr. President, after reserving these coal lands it was known that the power was only temporary. It was known, as a matter of fact, that Congress had never sanctioned the withholding of lands from entry except temporarily. Every act that was passed says so. Every statement with relation to taking up coal lands or modifying or reserving them says specifically "temporarily to withhold."

Mr. President, is it possible that when they are withheld, in order to avoid and get around the temporary nature of the holding, the Government should say, "We have a right to value these lands, and therefore we will value this section of coal lands at $500 an acre"? That means that nobody can take up the lands. We will value the water-power site. If it is going to be a proposition of sale, instead of what it is fairly worth or what it would fairly bring under a condemnation procedure, we will say that this water-power site is worth $500,000.

Mr. President, when reservations are made under these conditions we open them to entry. They have opened up the coal lands to entry, but they have opened them up at such prices that people will not take them. Years have elapsed, and how many acres of coal lands have been taken? I read a report, I think it was last year, that 1,200 acres of coal lands had been taken up in the United States in one year. Is that a development of coal land? Suppose you take the water-power sites. How many of them have been taken up? Possibly a very limited number.

Mr. President, as Senators have said repeatedly from the other side, the water-power situation is deplorable, because nobody will undertake these enterprises.

Mr. President, there has been tinkering with this question of the water-power site by the so-called conservationists, and every time they ever touched it they have made it worse. When I first came to Congress the right to locate a waterpower plant was just like the right to locate a railroad. filed your plat with the Secretary of the Interior, and after it was checked over and approved the right of way existed the same as the right of way for a railroad. The State imposed by reason of its ownership of the waters certain requirements in regard to filing. It has a system by which in filing upon a water-power site or filing upon a canal for irrigation purposes you must also make a survey, and you must file it with the State engineer. You must do a certain amount of work upon it each year, and in order to prevent monopolization it was provided that they should be forfeited unless the enterprises were completed in a certain length of time.

Under that State law enormous development was had in the State of California. I do not mean such a development as possibly would take place again, because there has been for some 8 or 10 years a cessation in development by reason of this very act of Congress. But, Mr. President, until these laws were passed by Congress there was a healthy development. water powers of Colorado are very large, and there were filings and sites were selected; yet as a matter of fact only 41 per cent of the water-power sites of our State have been taken up

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President-

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin. Mr. HUSTING. I wish to ask the Senator whether the water-power sites are on the public land or whether they are in private ownership?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Of course, there were some filed on before the revocable permit, and of course they are subject to taxation, and they are of course owned-

Mr. HUSTING. They have not been developed?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, not all that were located upon, because some failed to get their bonds issued and failed to raise the capital.

Mr. HUSTING. I merely wish to ask the Senator whether in those power sites that have not been developed in the franchise or permit they hold there are any of these conditions?

Mr. SHAFROTH. A franchise never holds in the State of Colorado if there is an abandonment, and if the work is not completed within the time specified you have a right to go and locate on that land.

Mr. HUSTING. The Senator misunderstands me. I asked him whether these holders of permits in Colorado were hindered from development by any onerous conditions or too exacting conditions in the permit.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think that nearly all the filings that were made previous to the passage of the act of 1901 were completed and they are operating plants now.

Mr. HUSTING. The point I wanted to get from the Senator is whether it is not a fact that the State of Colorado imposes no conditions whatever except speedy development.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It provides that there shall be development and that the rate shall be reasonable.

Mr. HUSTING. That is all?

Mr. SHAFROTH. We have a utilities commission that is doing most excellent work and has regulated some of these very companies, although the companies they are attempting to regulate are not so much power companies as franchise companies. They are the ones that exact the big prices. I know one plant where the municipality furnishes its light at one-half a cent per kilowatt hour to the distributing company, and that distributing company has been selling at 7, 8, 9, and 10 cents a kilowatt hour.

Mr. HUSTING. The question of reasonable rates would apply to the power whether it was produced from coal or not?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. HUSTING. Consequently the question of reasonable rates would not be a condition at all in so far as the power is being used by private enterprise.

Mr. SHAFROTH. You mean for an individual?

Mr. HUSTING. Yes.
Mr. SHAFROTH. There are very few of those, probably.
Generally they are very small. The big companies are companies that sell to the mines around the Leadville district, in the Cripple Creek district, in the Telluride district, in the Silverton district, and also in the coal fields of the Trinidad district and various other parts of the State, and also in cities and towns. A great deal of the electrical power for the city of Denver is furnished from a plant 250 miles away.

Mr. HUSTING. The State of Colorado, as far as it has any jurisdiction over these sites or the development of water power, did grant in perpetuity and make no restriction of any substantial sort in the way of giving permits to build. In view of that fact, I want to ask the Senator why all the water powers in Colorado have not been developed under those favorable conditions?

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator allow me for a moment?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. FALL. The Senator from Wisconsin possibly does not understand that the State of Colorado does not own any water-power sites at all unless upon some land donated by the Government of the United States heretofore to the State which happens to be upon a stream that might constitute a waterpower site. The Senator has reference to the water-power proposition. In the State of Colorado the State grants the right to the water. The individual secures the site for the use of the water from private individuals wherever he may. exactly what we are complaining about, that the United States as proprietor has withdrawn all such sites from entry, and therefore while the individual may be able to acquire from the State the right to the use of the water he can not acquire the place to use it.

Mr. HUSTING. I wish to say to the Senator that I have made no statement which indicated that I thought the State owned the land.

Mr. FALL. You said the State parted with the water-power

Mr. HUSTING. I beg the Senator's pardon, I do not think
I said anything of that kind.
Mr. FALL. Then I misunderstood you.
Mr. HUSTING. I said, as far as they had jurisdiction over the development of water power.

Mr. FALL. The Senator was talking about water-power sites and not jurisdiction over them.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the Senator has suggested that inasmuch as the State did not place any restriction or curbing upon these water-power companies it has not attended to its duty, and therefore these rights of way should be limited or restricted by the Federal Government.

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. FALL. I wish the Senator would make clear to the Senator from Wisconsin, as well as to the other Senators, this one point: The measure of title to water under the laws of the State of Colorado, as well as all the other States of the West, is the beneficial use thereof. There can not be any such thing as a monopoly in water obtained from any State in the West for an unlimited time. In other words, by acquiring the right from the State for the use of water for irrigation or any other purpose the party can not rest on his right to create a monopoly and prevent other people from using those rights. always a limit of time under the laws of Colorado and the other States within which the power must be generated or the water must be used; and failing the use of it within that time forfeiture ipso facto takes place, and it is subject to acquisition by any other individual.

Mr. HUSTING. May I ask the Senator from New Mexico a question?

Mr. FALL. Certainly; but I am speaking in the time of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. HUSTING. I understand that if the parties having the permit have actually developed it according to the time limited in the grant or permit they then have a perpetual right to use the water.

Mr. FALL. The Senator does not understand it at all. The Senator is from a riparian-rights State. The measure of the title to that water is the continuous beneficial use. You can acquire no title to the water itself in any of the arid States.

Mr. HUSTING. The Senator seems to misunderstand me. Mr. FALL. You acquire title to the use of the water and the State always places a limitation upon it. If the State does not do it by statute, the courts have invariably done so. Wherever a person may have acquired and even used beneficially for 50 years the water of a stream for irrigation or any other purpose, if he evidences an intention even to abandon the use of that water it at once becomes, under the laws of the State, subject to appropriation and acquisition as against him by any individual desiring to acquire it.

Mr. HUSTING. I am not speaking of the abandonment of the right. I am assuming that the party is going to continue in the exercise of his right under these permits. I say as long as they comply with the terms of the permit you have given them a perpetual right.

Mr. FALL. Certainly. We do not limit it for a number of years, although the State can do so if it chooses. It has not

Mr. SHAFROTH. Now, I want to discuss the particular point which the Senator has suggested. It is our contention that this right of way should be exactly the same as the right of way of I think that one of the greatest evils that has arisen in determining the location of sites is the making of a contract with an electric lighting company or a street car company or any other public-service company for a definite length of time and upon charges fixed as high as it can make them. In every instance you will find the city gets the worst of the contract. When it makes a contract giving a franchise in the streets for the transmission of electricity or any other use of the streets that it desires, the utilities commission of the State is stopped from changing the rate fixed by the contract, and that has been a curse to consumers. When a company comes into a municipality and says, "I will construct an electric-light plant here and give you $10,000 or $20,000 or $100,000 for a franchise for 20 years, and I will charge 8 cents or 10 cents per kilowatt hour," the city is always the loser, because the contract is based upon conditions as they exist on that date, and yet within a year or two or three years after that time an invention will reduce the cost of producing the electricity a half or two-thirds. The Tungsten burner, invented in the last 8 or 10 years, generates the same amount of light as was formerly had at twice the present cost. In every contract that is made with a city the city thinks it is getting the $100,000 as a bonus, and it is a fine thing, when it has contracted at that rate, say, 8 cents per kilowatt hour. other words, if it was subject to the determination of the utilities commission, of course, the contract would not be bad.

But, Mr. President, when you place obstructions in these matters the more difficulties you have to encounter and the less will be the chance that you are ever going to get anyone to undertake an enterprise of this kind. A company will take the position that it can stand the regulations of the State utilities commission, which may reduce rates so that there will be little profit in the enterprise, but when it has to run up against the United States Government and have its lease forfeited, and has to pay so much for each horsepower that is generated, then, Mr. President, you can readily see that the company will not undertake the enterprise at all.

I want to say to the Senator from Wisconsin that the very complication of making it go through various hands before you can get the absolute right to operate a plant is the obstruction that causes no development whatever.

Mr. President, I said, before the Senator from Wisconsin interrupted me, that every time the conservationists had attempted to tinker with the laws of the United States with relation to water power they had invariably complicated matters worse than they were before. I was in the House of Representa-tives at the time the act of 1901 which provided for irrevocable permits was passed. There came to the Committee on Public Lands, of which I was a member, some members of this con-servation propaganda. They said, "Now, we want a revocable permit. We find that there have been various fake companies that have been putting filings on these water-power sites without any intention whatever of ever completing a plant, and if we have a revocable permit then all we have to do is to revoke it." I reminded one of them that it was a great power to place in any one man's hands, as in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior. He said, "No; it is not; the Government will never revoke a legitimate enterprise; this is for the purpose of development; this is to be done so that the water-power site will become available; this is for the very purpose of letting legitimate companies go and develop the water powers which are now going to waste." He called attention to the fact, and said, "Why, revocable permits are not serious." He said you will find that national-bank charters are all revocable, and yet nobody ever heard of one being revoked unless there was just cause for it. He also said the street car companies of the city of Washington contain a revocable provision in their charters, but nobody ever heard of the franchises of any of those companies being forfeited. It is said, "There is no trouble if you will simply give us this power to revoke these permits, then you will have great development in your western country.'

Mr. President, I did not believe in it; I thought it was too great a power to be placed in the hands of one man; and it was too great, because two days before one of the secretaries went out of office, 40 permits for enterprises that were in most instances fully constructed and in operation were revoked, without any citation to their projectors, without any cause being alleged, but simply because the Secretary of the Interior had that power. Since that time people have said, "We will not build."

In 1890, Mr. President, Congress found that there would not be any development so long as there was a revocable permit, unless they did something else, and Congress said it takes something more than that to stop the frauds which it was claimed existed in monopolizing water-power sites; not that one water-power company was doing this, but they claimed that the people were doing it for speculative purposes, so as to sell out to some legitimate enterprise, and that they would put so high a figure upon it that the legitimate enterprise would not pay it. So they said, "We will enact another law."

In 1910 we proposed to prevent people from filing on these claims for anything else but water-power purposes; and in order to control that absolutely it was said, "We will give the right of withdrawal."

The contention at that time, Mr. President, was that under the homestead act, under scrip of various kinds, men would file on a water-power site and get title to it, and that so long as those sites were open to such entries you would find that being done; that somebody, by reason of a filing, would be in possession of something for which he could exact money from persons who wanted to undertake an enterprise of that kind. So they said, "Now, we will stop that by giving authority to the President to withdraw all water sites from the public domain, and you will then have development; that will prevent a man from having a homestead claim on a power site and holding up those desiring to work it for a half million dollars before they could undertake construction. It was said that would open up development and that the Government would, as a matter of fact, aid and assist in the development of this work.

Mr. President, that was the second act of Congress on the subject, and it was the act which, above all others, prevented the development of water power in my State. Instead of its being a private individual who would be holding up a desiring purchaser it was the Government who was holding him up. In addition to that, it put us in a still worse condition, because so long as the individual held the water-power site we could tax it; but when the Government of the United States held it we could not tax it. As a matter of fact, nobody would make any development of water power under those circumstances. So here is a third attempt now in this bill to remedy the situation; and if you will notice the wording of the bill it is "to develop water power."

Mr. President, you will find when it comes to the development of water power that you will not get it, because the conditions which have been imposed by the United States Government have been made so onerous. The Government has acted so inconsiderately toward the people who have attempted to exercise the right to file upon water-power sites that they have no confidence in the Government. They feel that if a system of that kind is established and they should undertake to start an enterprise it will be putting a noose around their necks which will strangle them.

What do we find has been the action under this very system which has been proposed? Mr. President, there was such an enterprise out in California. I do not know any of the parties engaged in it, but I read of it in the report, which I have not here; so I will state it from the testimony which was taken before the Committee on Public Lands. It seems that on Lake Spalding—which, I understand, is a large lake composed of many thousand of acres in California—there was a company organized before any revocable permit was required by the Government that went out and filed upon it and constructed their plant and which was entitled under all the rules of law to complete an enterprise there on private land.

It seems that after that revocable permit was required it was necessary for them, in order to let the water out of the lake, to build 1,320 feet of conduit on Government land. They made application to the Secretary of the Interior, I think, about eight years ago. He said, "No; not unless you will enter into a lease by which your whole system shall contribute and pay to the Government a certain amount of money." They said, "It is only 1,320 feet which we require, and this enterprise is enormous; it is an enterprise that includes thousands of acres of land." To this, Mr. President, the Secretary said: "No; unless you enter into this lease, you can not construct the proposed conduit over the Government land." By means of running a siphon they could keep on their own land. To run their pipes over the Government land necessary to be passed over would be inexpensive; it would cost, I think, ten or twelve thousand dollars; but in order to make a siphon on their own land and avoid the boundaries of the Government land they had to pay for the construction of that conduit $60,000. That is the treatment they received at the hands of the Federal Government. Is there any excuse for that?

At that time there was at the head of the conservation movement a man who said that he was going to force the Western States into a leasing system. It was his determination that they should adopt that system. Consequently, no favors whatever were granted for the purpose of avoiding expense. Is that fair? Can anybody be expected to take out permits or to take out leases when Government officials act in such a way as that? I have not any doubt that gentleman believes that the leasing system is the best; I have not any doubt that he thinks it would be better for the community in the long run; but look at it from the other side.

I do not know these people; I do not believe I have ever met one of them; but, Mr. President, that is the testimony which appeared in evidence before the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President-

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator. Mr. THOMAS. The Senator has been speaking now a long time, and it is quite evident we will reach no conclusion to-night. With his permission, I venture the suggestion to the Senator from Montana that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, it is only now half past 4 o'clock. Mr. SHAFROTH. Suppose we go on until 5 o'clock.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. We will not be able to reach any conclusion to-night.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But this debate is going in the Record and some people out West are going to read it. They have passed resolutions concerning it, and there is not a word spoken on the question which they do not read if they can get it. If you think that this is a question that the people of the West are not interested in you are mistaken.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not desire to insist upon the suggestion, if the Senator desires to go on; but, as suggested by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], the fact that no conclusion is possible to-night and the fact that the Senator has been speaking a long time suggested to my mind the expediency of adjourning.

I do not, however, insist upon it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I do not wish to call for a quorum to make any suggestion of that sort. I hope, as a matter of fact, to get through shortly, although probably not this evening. I might be able to do so, if I could have condensed my remarks; but I have had in charge the Porto Rican bill, which has monopolized all my time, and consequently I have not had the opportunity to prepare my argument in concrete form as I desired to present it. Nevertheless, if that is not agreeable, I am perfectly willing to let the matter go over.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me a suggestion there?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.
Mr. FALL. I think that this matter should be discussed, and it is going to be discussed here as long as it is kept as a club over the heads of the Members of the body by remaining as the unfinished business; and, so far as I am concerned, so long as it remains the unfinished business, I shall feel inclined from now on to object to any unanimous consent to lay it aside. I think that as we have it before us, we had better discuss it and get through with it.

Of course, it is disappointing, I know, for a Senator to make a speech on a subject which is of such vital and material interest to the people of a great portion of this country, and to know that various Senators will come in when the bill comes to a vote and say, "How shall we vote on this question?" Of course, that is discouraging; but that is one of those things which we have to meet in the Senate of the United States. We all do it. We stay out when we ourselves are not interested in a question, and then come back and ask some other Senator how we shall vote on the pending proposition. As the Senator says, however, he can at least get his remarks into the RECORD, and possibly some persons may read them and become informed on the subject

The people of this country do not know, and a majority of Senators who live outside of the civil-law country, outside of the Territory of the Louisiana Purchase, who live where they have the old common law, do not understand at all the ques-tions involved in this matter; and I think the Senator should proceed and that we should conclude this discussion and take a vote upon the bill. So far as I am concerned, I have no desire to filibuster at all, but I think that this is a matter that ought to be settled one way or the other.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will suggest to the Senator that there are a good many people who watch these proceedings. is not a session of the legislature in the State of Colorado which does not pass resolutions condemning this water-power proposi-

Mr. FALL, Mr. President, I agree that there are several million people who are very materially interested, but they happen to be living in sparsely settled sections of the country.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I want to add my testimonial to the assurances given by Senators that there is a vast number of people out West who are interested in this legislation, who are interested in getting some legislation, and if the legislation before us is not agreeable to Senators I think they will all agree with me that the people out there are begging for some legislation on this subject.

Mr. FALL. I say, Mr. President, that, so far as I am con-cerned, I believe that this legislation is the most serious attack that has ever been made upon the principles upon which this Government was founded. I am firmly and seriously convinced that legislation along this line is an absolute overturning of the democratic principles upon which our forefathers established this Government, and that there has not been a more serious question presented for the consideration of the Congress of the Unifed States since 1846, at any rate, than is presented here by this bill. It is a turning point, possibly. Either we continue along the line of the policy adopted in 1846 with reference to the disposition of our public lands and natural resources in the West, or we make an entire and radical change. That change means that we strike the most vital blow at the State-rights doctrine that has ever been struck in this country. Yet. Mr. President, I, for one, assert that I would prefer to-day that that blow be struck so that we may accommodate ourselves to the new conditions, that we may go home to our people and tell them that we are to become a Nation of tenant farmers, and not a Nation in the West of freemen with free homes; but that we are to hold even our homes subject to the will of a bureau; that all of our great resources are to be developed through the whim of some man, the Secretary of the Interior Department or some other department, or rather through his whim founded upon the action of some $65 clerk, or upon the action of some man not officially connected with the department or with the Government of the United States who is running a press bureau and who is building up a sentiment among the people of the East, who have had the pie that they were entitled to, who have eaten it, and now want to eat ours.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his sent I desire to make an inquiry of him. The Senator is a constructive statesman and not an obstructive statesman.

Mr. FALL. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to inquire of the Senator whether he will accompany his remarks with the tender of a bill express-Mr. WALSH. ing his views, and whether he will take the judgment of the Senate upon the lines upon which legislation ought to be enacted?

Mr. FALL. I will say to the Senator that I will meet him on that proposition at any time. I know the Senator is just as seriously and sincerely in earnest in his desire to build up his country as I am, and while we may differ as to methods and as to what is best, I will take the sentiment of the Congress of the United States, and I will offer now as a substitute for the pending bill, the bill introduced by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. Smith], ceding the water-power rights and water-power sites to the States of the West.

Mr. WALSH. That is a good suggestion, and I trust the Sena-tor will speedily discuss that matter.

Mr. FALL. I will. Mr. WALSH. And take the judgment of the Senate on this matter and pass it along.

Mr. FALL. I intend to speak upon it at the earliest moment, and I am willing to remain here until the dark hours of evening, I shall not engage in any filibuster or in any attempt to delay action on this bill; and it was for that reason that I announced that I had about come to the conclusion that I would not allow the pending bill, the unfinished business, to be laid aside by unanimous consent from now on, but that we must decide it and must settle it in one way or another.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, it is true there are few Senators present; it is true that I can probably get a few more here by calling for a quorum; but the eloquent speech of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Fall] will go into the Record, and he will find that there are many men in Colorado, in New Mexico, in Utah, in California, and in other Western States who will read it and be absolutely wonderstruck that any person can think of enacting legislation that would be contrary to the views which he has expressed. It may take time to develop this position. As a matter of fact, we are making great headway, and I feel satisfied that right now, if a vote were taken, we would defeat this bill. But, Mr. President, a substitute bill might be offered, and it might go to conference; but what would come of the bill when the House conferees, who are all extremely against our position, is another question.

Mr. President, I do not want to consume unnecessary time, but I want to discuss this question fairly, and I want to have my remarks, even if there are very few Senators present, printed in the RECORD.

Mr. President, I was describing the testimony before the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate with respect to one enterprise. I want to say to you that the same order that revoked the permit of that organization also revoked the permit of the plant that furnishes electricity to the city of Denver, a plant that was already constructed, a plant that some six or seven million dollars was invested in, without any citation to show cause, and without any charge that they had not faithfully complied with the provisions of the law, both of the State and of the Nation.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President— Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. I should like to ask the Senator what reason was alleged for revoking the license of a going concern. Where men got a license and did not go on to develop the property, I can see that it would be very proper, after a reasonable time, to revoke it, but, as I understand, this was a going concern.

Mr. SHAFROTH. This was a going concern, furnishing electricity to the city of Denver for street car purposes and for electric-lighting purposes. I will state that the department said: "We will not revoke this permit if you will enter into a contract with us agreeing to pay $1 per horsepower for the power generated by you." Those were the terms, and the company replied: "Why, that would be an expenditure on our part of $20,000 a year, and we can not do it." They offered to give a smaller amount, but $1 per horsepower per year was the ultimate amount that had to be paid, and because they said: "No; these plants have been constructed, as we supposed, under an existing right, and therefore we will not do it," the matter has been in litigation ever since. The department gave notice to them to get off the public domain, and the company answered: "We will do it when the court tells us to do so"; and that case has been in court from that day to this.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me right there for a moment to recite another case?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will.

Mr. FALL. Last year the Congress of the United States passed a law granting a right of way across the Lincoln Forest Reserve, in New Mexico, for a pipe line. This was done by a special act—the first time, I venture to say, that anything of that kind had been done. The reason for it, of course, must have been an unusual one, and it was.

The water along the El Paso & Southwestern Railroad in New Mexico is charged with sulphuric acid to some extent, and consequently can not be used for boiler purposes in making steam. For years the railroad company had been compelled to maintain expensive treating plants a few miles apart to treat the water before it could be used for the boilers. They went across into Lincoln County and purchased outright from individuals there, whose titles date back anywhere from 10 to 40 years, their farms and water rights, expended $150,000, had the water measured, and then undertook to pump this water-it was pure water, water that was fitted for boiler purposes-across the divide, at an expense of $1,250,000, for the purpose of furnishing soft water, or water fitted for boiler purposes, for the engines of that road.

They secured a temporary or revocable permit. Under this permit they constructed their pipe lines. permit they constructed their pipe lines. They were notified finally that that permit would be revoked. Upon inquiry as to the reason for it they were informed that at a point below the point at which they had their pumping station the Marine Hospital Service, a branch of the Treasury Department of the United States, had the management of a sanitarium, and that they had concluded that they would irrigate some 250 acres of land, irrespective of the prior rights of the farmers below them and of the prior rights which had been acquired by this company from the farmers above them. They had no rights whatsoever to the water. They did not undertake to comply with the laws of the State, although the laws of the Congress of the United States said they must do so before they could acquire any rights. They simply claimed that they had the power to force certain concessions from this railroad company. In other words, it was required to give up a portion of the water which it had acquired by purchase for the irrigation of certain lands upon this Government reserve, so that the people below would not be able to enjoin them because they were taking their water. Without compensation they were to take this water. It was not a question of going into court and establishing prior rights, or a question as to whether the railroad company had a right to the water, admitting that, but simply a question of arbitrarily saying: "You must do suchand-such a thing.

Now, this was the Treasury Department. The Forestry Service, a part of the Agricultural Department, notified the railroad company that they were going to forfelt and revoke their pipeline rights. The matter was taken up. The Interior Department said: "Why, we have no objection. There should be a permanent right of way granted. These people have fully comperating their absolutely plied with the law. They are only exercising their absolutely legal rights.

In view of the controversy over this water, however, the company went upon another stream entirely, which did not flow through this marine-hospital reserve, the waters of which could not reach the marine-hospital reserve, and expended $250,000 in acquiring title to that water. They said, "All right; we have a dispute here about this water; we will concede anything in the world to the Government; we will go and buy water that we have no dispute about." The reply was, "Very well; but you can not have a right of way for your pipe line for your water which you own, not in conflict or claimed by the Government at all, entirely off this reserve." "Why?" "Why, because you will not do what we want you to do. You will not surrender your property over here on this stream which does pass through the reserve; and unless you will surrender to our demand, unless you will allow us to hold you up there, unless you will allow the Treasury Department to hold you up on the stream which we know as the Bonito, then you shall not have any right, irrevocable or otherwise, to a pipe line from the stream which we know as Eagle Creek."

Now, this was the condition. The Department of the Interior looked into the matter and said, "Why, the company has the right absolutely, and so far as we can assist you in any way we will do so." The Forestry Service said, "We can not see any particular reason why we should not allow you to continue to run this pipe line, but the Treasury Department does not want us to do it, and therefore we will not do it." compelled to appeal to the Congress of the United States against these departments. We were compelled to come in here and ask for relief, and we secured it from the Congress of the United

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, that simply illustrates the fact that the Government is the worst landlord on earth. It is a bad landlord, because the officials are afraid of criticism if they waive anything. If they do not demand strict compliance with every provision of the lease they think, "Oh, I will be subject to criticism, and what is the use? I will just demand the very thing called for by the lease. If a man has not paid at a certain time, if the provision is that we should forfeit, why, then the forfeit must go."

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes.

Mr. CLAPP. In the case the Senator referred to, where they evoked or sought to revoke the license of the company furnishing light to the city of Denver under the State law, did the State or the local authorities have a right to impose such tax as they saw fit upon the property and the exercise of the right

Mr. SHAFROTH. Under the supposition that it had the right of way which the railroad company had, I think, they imposed taxes upon it; but if the other provision is made, and it is made revocable and recognized as Government land, they will not have the right to impose taxes. Mr. CLAPP. No; but what I was getting at was this: Of course, I believe in the local right rather than the Federal right. If there was no local right, then there might have been justification-I am not prepared to pass on that-for demanding an increased payment from the company; so I was trying to ascertain whether it was within the power of the local authorities to assess this company upon its property or its rights.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why, I think they did, and they paid the assessment voluntarily, until this revocation came along. If it is once established that it is Government land, and if they enter into a lease with the Government-which the Government is trying to force them to do—why, of course, then it becomes subject to these decisions which say that it can not be the subject of taxation.

Mr. President, I want to say that the men who are trying to force this leasing system upon the West are honest. They think that is the one remedy to prevent monopoly. They think that as a matter of fact the people will be much better off, while I think to the contrary. I think that the more restrictions you impose the higher will have to be their charges, and the higher rates the public-utility commissions of our State will have to allow them to charge. If they have to pay something to the Federal Government and then have to make other charges, even if you make a charge here and permit the State to tax it, all of that is going to add together and make a larger sum and that is going to be reflected in increased charges against the people who have to buy this electricity. For that reason it seems to me that the simpler you make the process the better it will be for the patrons of the company.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; and I want to ask the Senator if it is not true that whatever burden or tax is imposed ought to be imposed by the local authorities that have to deal with the problem of the reflection of that tax back upon the community, and the problem of encouraging in a new community the enlistment of capital in enterprises of this kind, rather than to leave that power to an authority two or three thousand miles away that has only one possible interest, and that is to show on the page of a book account a receipt to the Government?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I thoroughly agree with the Senator. think it would be a tremendous mistake for this Government to create a bureau that will control these matters, with the various inspectors and the various forms of machinery that it will be necessary for them to have, the accounting departments which it will be necessary to have to check up as to the amount of rents received, and the various other things that seem to me to be an intereference on the part of the National Government with the local affairs of the State. Mr. President, when the session closed on yesterday I was discussing the proposition as to the leases of water-power sites proposed to be made by the Government. I have said repeatedly that in every attempt that has been made toward leasing by the Government it has provided such stringent terms that the system has proven a failure. I hold in my hand a copy of a leasing application and lease covering the terms and conditions proposed to be embodied in a lease for water-power sites. to call attention to a few of the restrictions and provisions made in the contract for lease and to consider whether any company would enter into a lease of this kind, and would erect a waterpower plant under such a lease investing millions of dollars with consequent risk of a large amount of capital.

Mr. President, all through this lease there are limitations, impositions, and requirements, terms of forfeiture, and provisions of that nature that will, as a matter of fact, make it very difficult for any person to embark on such an enterprise in view of the past experience which lessees have had with the Government.

In article 6 of the lease, under "Power stipulations," there is contained this Item:

contained this item:

That it is understood, if upon any one of the dates specified in article 4 hereof, unless the time is extended by the written approval of the Secretary, after a showing by the permittee satisfactory to the Secretary, and filed with the district forester prior to said date, that such beginning of construction of that part of the project works required to have been begun on the specified date has been prevented by engineering difficulties that could not reasonably have been foreseen, or by other special and peculiar cause beyond the control of the permittee, that thereupon the permission to occupy and use national-forest lands for all parts of said project works the construction of which has not been begun on said date shall terminate and become void, and that the permit, in so far as such part of said project works is concerned, shall become of no effect.

Ant. VII. That it is understood that the date specified in Article V hereof for the completion of construction and the beginning of operation of the several parts of the project works will be extended only on the written approval of the Secretary, after a showing by the permittee satisfactory to the Secretary, that the completion of construction and beginning of operation has been prevented by engineering difficulties that could not reasonably have been foreseen, or by other special and peculiar cause beyond the control of the permittee, and if such extension be not approved that thereupon the permission to occupy and use national-forest lands for such parts of said project works shall terminate and become void, and that the permit, in so far only as such parts of said project works are concerned, shall become of no effect.

Mr. President, article 8 provides:

Mr. President, article 8 provides:

Mr. President, article 8 provides:

That, except when prevented by unavoidable absence of contingencies, the permittee will, after the completion of construction as required in article 5 hereof, operate in good faith and as continuously as may be possible under prevailing market requirements the project works constructed and/or maintained, in whole or in part, under the permit; that the permittee will neither discontinue the operation of said project works nor reduce the amount of power developed or transmitted by the same at such a time or in such a manner as to reduce the output of the electric energy required by the consuming public, or to increase the market price therefor, or to discriminate between consumers, or to prejudice the public interest; and that if there is discontinuance of operation or reduction of the amount of power generated or transmitted for a continuous period of more than 30 days or for an aggregate period of more than 90 days in any calendar year the permittee will notify the district forester of the fact of such discontinuance or reduction, and of the reasons therefor.

Throughout the contract there are forfeiture clauses and Throughout the contract there are forfeiture clauses and other harsh terms. It contains provisions, Mr. President, as to the amount that shall be paid per annum "for the unexpired portion of the calendar year for the first full calendar year of the survey-construction period, and similarly for the first year 10 cents per horsepower" and thereafter running over each year 10 cents more, until the tenth year and thereafter, when the amount is $1. Then follows a provision that seems to me to show the intention of the department, as follows:

It being understood that said estimated rental capacity may be adjusted annually by the Secretary to provide for changes in ownership of lands in reservoir sites and on water-conduit lines and for charges in length of primary transmission; and it being further understood that at any time not less than 10 years after the issuance of the permit, or after the last revision of rates of rental charged thereunder, the Secretary may review such rental rates and impose such new rental rates as he may decide to be reasonable and proper.

Mr. President, this seems to be the form which they have I understand in some instances, at any rate, it is the form printed by the department. If this be the manner in which these rentals are to be paid, there are very few corporations that will ever undertake to construct a plant.

It is provided further:

ART. 13. That it is understood, if any part of the aforesaid rental charge, payable as hereinbefore provided, shall, after due notice has been given, be in arrears for 90 days, that then and thereupon the permit shall be subject to revocation by the Secretary.

That has been changed in the bill, but the evident intention of the Forest Service was to make the permits revocable by the Secretary.

That the decision of the Secretary shall be final as to all matters of fact upon which the calculation of the capacities or rental charges depends.

Mr. President, there are any number of such provisions here. I will not read them all, but there are certain requirements such as this:

To dispose of all brush, refuse, or unused timber on national forest lands resulting from the construction, maintenance, and/or operation of the project works as may be required by the Secretary.

To build and repair roads and trails, as required by the Secretary, whenever any existing roads or trails are destroyed or injured by the construction work or flooding under the permit; and to build and maintain necessary and suitable crossings for all roads and trails which intersect the water conduit, if any, constructed, maintained, and/or operated under the permit.

Mr. President, here is another one:

Mr. President, here is another one:

23. To pay in advance to the United States depository or officer as above set forth in article 10 hereof, to be placed to the credit of the United States, the full value, as fixed by the Secretary, of all timber cut, injured, or destroyed on national forest lands in the construction, maintenance, and/or operation of the project works.

To pay, on demand of the Secretary, to the United States depository or officer, as above set forth in article 10 hereof, to be placed to the credit of the United States, full value for all damage to the lands or other property of the United States resulting from the breaking of, or the overflowing, leaking, or seeping of water from the project works constructed, maintained, and/or operated under the permit, and for all other damage to the lands or other property of the United States caused by the neglect of the permittee or of the employees, contractors, or employees of the contractors of the permittee.

Mr. President, I will not go through all of these: but I have

Mr. President, I will not go through all of these; but I have noted here, on the next page, article 25, article 27, and article 28 as containing harsh provisions.

It does seem to me, in view of that condition, and of the evident purpose and intent of the Forest Service, particularly, to impose harsh terms, that to ask us to take our waters which belong to the States and turn them over to the National Government so that the National Government can use them at will, and so that it can collect revenue for the use of that water power, is something in which every man who believes in the existence of any State rights ought to refuse to concur.

Mr. President, it has been admitted by the Senators generally that the waters of nonnavigable streams belong to the States. That is admitted in the report, and if it were not admitted in the report hundreds of decisions to that effect could be cited. We find also that in the constitution of Colorado there is a provision that the waters belong to the public for the purpose of appropriation by the citizens of the State. We find that that constitution was approved when the State was admitted into the Union. We find also, and we recognize it as a rule, that the United States owns these lands as a proprietor. It may enforce some rules that may indicate a little different opinion, but the majority of the decisions are to the effect that it owns these lands as proprietor, and, as proprietor, it ought to consent that the State or its agencies should have the right to sue the United States in a condemnation proceeding for the purpose of acquiring water-power sites upon payment of just com-The State constitution—the very one that was appensation. proved at the time of the admission of Colorado into the Union-provided that rights of way may be condemned, and that the property may be taken upon the payment of just compensa-

This can not be done against the United States because the United States will not permit a State or an individual to bring suit against it; it in okes the doctrines that we can not sue our sovereign. The right is there, as a matter of fact, to condemn the land; but, as my colleague said, there is not a remedial right.

No way has been provided by law by which service can be had upon the United States Government. But is it fair that the United States Government should play the dog in the manger, and say: "While you have this right, and you have it as against Government land, yet, notwithstanding, I will not give you the right to condemn this public property that you have a right to condemn, because you can not get service upon me, because you can not sue your sovereign"?

Is that right? Is it fair? Is there any justice in it? Is it proper that the United States Government should shield itself behind such a proposition as that and expect the confidence of the people of the States that are affected? It seems to me that it is not fair.

The question of the appropriation of these waters arises from the fact that in this bill there is attempted the subterfuge of making this ownership of land determine the right to control the water. Inasmuch as water power and the use of waters is considered, in all of the decisions of our State, as being superior, and as being of such a nature that you can, for the use of that water, condemn any land, it seems to me that it is an outrage upon the State, under the guise of a lease of land, to take possession and control of the waters of our State.

Mr. President, in the case of an individual, if a railroad company wanted to run a railroad through the land of a farmer, it would be considered a great outrage if that farmer should say: "I will not permit it," if he had the power to do it. You would say that no great public enterprises would ever be undertaken, none of them could ever be accomplished; and the reason would be that if that farmer could oppose the extension, every other person through whose land the railroad company might attempt to construct its road could do the same thing, and thus there would be no enterprises started at all.

When the Government says, "We will not let a corporation organized under the State of Colorado condemn this land which we hold there; we will not permit the work to be done"; it means absolutely that you are revoking the very power of eminent domain of the State and which is recognized by the Constitution of the United States.

But Senators may say that in the railroad case it is the individual opposing the public. Mr. President, the weakness of that argument is that no matter what the object of the individual was, no matter if it was for the most beneficial purpose on earth that he refused the railroad permission to go through his land, nevertheless the courts would not tolerate for a minute such a refusal, and nobody would maintain that it was right or equitable that the individual should refuse to permit a railroad upon payment of just compensation to be constructed through his land. The Government of the United States with respect to its lands is identically in that position, except that by virtue of its not being subject to being sued without its consent the laws of the State can not become effective.

That is not right. It is not fair. It is a condition that men in ordinary dealings would not even negotiate about. They would consider it to be an outrage. You do consider it an outrage in the case of an individual. It might be said that he is using his land for a private purpose; but even if that individual says, "I do not want this railroad to come through my land unless it pays a part of its net earnings to the public," would it in justice have any better right? It would not. If an individual should say, "Before this railroad goes through my land I want an agreement that the railroad shall pay to the public a certain percentage of its net earnings," you would say such a proposition was ridiculous; and yet that is exactly what the United States Government is doing right now in assuming the position that before permission is given to construct a water-power plant upon the public domain the promoters of the enterprise must agree to divide their profits with the Federal Government.

It may be that the charges are not at first large; but the power to impose any charge implies the power at a subsequent time to impose a greater rate, and it is easy to see the danger that lurks in such legislation.

Mr. President, it seems to me to be plain that this bill is constructed, not for the purpose of renting land, but for the purpose of utilizing and renting the water. I do not see how any person can read the provisions of the bill, I do not see how anyone can read the provisions of the leases that have been prepared for application to construct the water-power plants without concluding that it is an arrangement for leasing of the water, and not of leasing the land. But the issue in dodged in this bill. Those behind this bill know that the Federal Government has no right to lease that which does not belong to it, and they know that it is conceded in this very report which is made by their side that the Federal Government has no power whatever to lease the waters of a State or to control them in any way.

Mr. President, the title of this report is:
Development of Water Power.

That is the subject. Take the bill itself, and what is it? It is a bill—

To provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes.

The "public lands" referred to there seem to be an incidental matter, but it is the tail that wags the dog in this instance, because there the Government, by reason of its sovereign capacity, says it will not permit the State to sue under its eminent-domain rights or permit any agency of the State to maintain an action therefor, and thus it blocks the enterprise unless acceptance of its terms is made.

Mr. President, is that right? Is that fair to the State? Is that an equal partnership between the State and the Nation in the development of these resources of the State?

It may be that some Senators think they are doing a high and an honorable thing in providing that the Federal Government regulate the rates and that the Government will do what is fair. Mr. President, we have had some regulation by the Federal Government. It has not been satisfactory to our people; but is it possible that we have to take what the United States Government says shall be done with respect to these waters? Is it possible that the sovereignty of a State can be wined out in any such way as that?

Mr. President, they still deny that this is a leasing of the water. They say it is a leasing of the land. Now, let us see. Not only are these expressions in the bill itself and in the report itself, but, Mr. President, they are in this contract which is drawn on behalf of the Government with the lessee, or which they proposed to make. Of course they will have to change some of it. I recognize that. I want to read from the proposed lease contract, however, to see whether it is the intention to charge according to the water and the water power instead of charging rent for the land itself.

Here on the ninth page—these pages are not numbered, but it is on the ninth page—is this language:

"Nominal stream flow" means the sum of (a) the flow determined by averaging the values estimated for the natural mean flow for the two-month (calendar) minimum-flow period in each successive five-year period or major fraction thereof, and (b) the stream flow made available from storage by project works not under the permit.

Why, Mr. President, would a lessor of a water-power site put in any such provision as that? Would he not say, "Is it possible that these definitions in regard to 'nominal stream flow' and the extent of it in a certain two-months period of the year have anything to do with me?" Is it possible that a man who owned the land would think of putting such a proposition as that to a water-power company that had come to him and said, "I want a lease of your land for the purpose of constructing a water-power plant"?

Mr. President, nobody but some one who is interested in the water power itself would do that, and this shows that the dominant factor in this whole lease is the renting of power, the renting of water. Nobody else could ever think of putting such a provision in a lease.

Let me read a little further:

" Load factor " means the ratio of average-power output to maximum-power output.

What is that in there for? Is there anything in this that would indicate that the land is to be taken and condemned, or that the value of the land can be fairly estimated or ascertained by any such course? I think not, Mr. President. It clearly indicates that this whole system is made up for the purpose of controlling the water powers and absolutely leasing the water powers, for that is the only thing of value there.

Mr. President, the next provision is as follows:

"Total capacity of the power site" means the continued product of (a) the factor 0.08.

And then it has, as a footnote:

The factor 0.08 represents the horsepower at 70 per cent efficiency of a second-foot of water falling through a head of 1 foot.

Would any such provision be demanded by a man who owns a water-power site, and wants to lease it to a man who desires to construct a water-power plant? Why, certainly it would not. He would describe the boundaries of his land, and say: "I will lease this to you for such a length of time, at so much," with no forfeiture except for the nonpayment of the rent itself.

So, Mr. President, it goes on:

(2) The average effective head in feet-

The head of the water measured in cubic feet.

(3) The stream flow estimated to be available at the intake (in second-feet-

That is, so many cubic feet per second-and in amount not to exceed the maximum hydraulic capacity of the project works) considered as the sum of (a) the nominal stream flow and (b) stream flow made available from storage by project works under and (b) stream now made available, the permit; and (4) A factor not less than the average load factor of the power system, representing the degree of practicable utilization of the stream flow estimated to be available, and based on the extent of fore-bay storage and the load factor of the power system.

Mr. President, what do those provisions mean? They can mean but one thing, and that is that the parties who are in control of the machinery for the use of these water-power sites are using it for the purpose of measuring and for the purpose of leasing and for the purpose of controlling the water which all the authorities in the United States courts say belongs to the State.

If you want to put a clause in the bill that this shall become available upon the action of the State or the vote of the State by its legislature, that would be something that might be worth talking about, but when you consider that this is a confiscation, it seems to me, of that which clearly belongs to the State, I can not understand why Senators can sit here and say that they want their States invaded for the purpose of letting the Federal Government control these waters and take away that right which all the authorities say belongs to the State.

Rental capacity of the power site means the capacity on which the rental charges are based. Unless otherwise ordered by the Secretary, it will be determined by making the following deductions from the total capacity of the power site.

What are all these references? Mr. President, they are references which show that the object of this bill is to turn over to the United States Government these waters that belong to the States. It has no more right to lease the waters which do not belong to it than I have to give a lease to the Mississippi River.

In this same lease proposed by the department is the following:

Whenever power projects include water-conduit or intake reservoir sites not wholly on national-forest lands, a deduction will be made from that part of the total capacity of the power site which is due to the use of the nominal stream flow. This deduction will be, in per cent, the sum of (1) the product of the proportion of the average effective head obtained from the dam by the per cent of submerged lands below the flow line fixed by the average effective head that are not national-forest lands, and (2) the product of the proportion of the average effective head obtained from the water conduit by the per cent of the length of said conduit which is not located on national-forest lands.

Can anyone conclude from this paragraph that it is only a leasing of land?

Mr. President, I do not want to read all of this form of lease. It is full of just those things which will demonstrate to any fair-minded man, it seems to me, that the object and purpose is to turn over to the Federal Government these water powers and to utilize them under the controlling power of the Federal Government.

Now, take many of the other provisions that are here. I can not read them all, but here is one on about page 12—the pages are not numbered:

are not numbered:

Or any permanent change in the nominal stream flow, due to storage or otherwise, shall result in an increase or decrease in the total capacity of the power site, or of either part thereof, or of both, as said capacities are hereinbefore taken, said increased or decreased power capacities shall, from the beginning of the calendar year next succeeding the date of such approval, or of such change in nominal stream flow, be deemed and taken to be, for the purposes of this stipulation, the capacities of the power site occupied and used, in whole or in part under the permit; and it being further understood that if at any time not less than 10 years after the original, or after the last preceding determination of the said total capacity of the power site, or of either part thereof, or of both, either the permittee or the Secretary, on the ground of the inaccuracy, insufficiency, or inapplicability of the data upon which said original or said last preceding determination of said capacities was made, shall apply for or give notice of review of said original or said last preceding determination of the capacities shall be made, and the said redetermined capacities shall, for the purposes of this stipulation, and from the beginning of the next calendar year, be deemed and taken to be the capacities of the power site occupied and used in whole or in part under the permit.

Mr. President, in view of the wording of the bill and in view of the terms of these leases, considering that it is claimed to be not a leasing of the water power but is a leasing of the site, I do not see how they can transpose it and, in effect, base the lease upon the water, but represent that it is a rental for the site only.

Mr. President, the charges specified in this permit, beginning at the first year with a very nominal sum, run for the tenth and each succeeding year $1 per horsepower. That tax would be crushing to a water-power plant. We have an enterprise in Colorado which generates 20,000 horsepower. Is that company going to be required to pay $20,000 a year? Is it possible that it shall be required to pay that charge? If it is required to make such a large payment, do we not know the rule that where there is an initial charge it is collected from the consumer; that the cost to the owner of the water-power plant is going to be reflected two, three, and four fold upon the consumer; and consequently such charges are going to make it infinitely harder upon the consumer?

Mr. President, we who live in the Western States want rates as cheaply as we reasonably can obtain. We do not want these water-power sites turned over to people who can plunder us. We are the people who are interested. Why should people away off somewhere else say, "We are looking after your interest; you do not seem to be capable of doing so"? Is it possible that we are going to take the view that under a State government which performs every other function creditably to the United States and to its citizens, yet in its regulation of power companies it will fall short of its duty?

Mr. President, we know in this provision here, specifying the amount the companies will have to pay per horsepower, the result will be that the consumer will have to pay a great deal more. But is it possible that we who are interested in our people and want as low rates as possible should be regarded as being incapable of obtaining for them low rates, but we must have a double machinery, with a bureau here in Washington controlling and attempting in every way to monopolize the control of all the waters of the State?

I recognize that there is an amendment pending providing for a low charge per horsepower, but there is opposition to it, and likely it will not be adopted. No matter what the charge may be, it is wrong when imposed by the Federal Government, which has no right or title to the water which creates the power. It is true also that the bill provides that one-half of the charges collected shall be paid to the State and one-half to the reclamation fund; but what right has it to prescribe any charges when it does not own the water? If the Federal Government makes the distribution of the charges one way to-day, what is to prevent it appropriating all of it to its own use in the future? The State, or any agency thereof, is entitled to rights of way for power plants upon payment of just compensation, and that is what we are contending for.

I wish to take up another feature of this question. It seems to me it is a little presumptuous on the part of people living thousands of miles from my State taking the stand that they are going to control that water for our benefit, that they know how to check high rates better than we do. We have provided in our State for a utilities commission, and I am glad to bear testimony to its general excellence. It is regulating rates and it is making them reasonable.

The water-power men are not the ones who have imposed exorbitant charges. The exorbitant charges have been caused by action of those men who have procured a contract with a city, giving them the right to its streets for 20 years, sometimes by payment of a bonus amounting to as much as $100,000, and they acquiring the right by contract with the city to charge 8, 9, or 10 cents per kilowatt hour. They are the ones who are making the great profits, if there are profits. As to the waterpower plant of which I know, because I was in a lawsuit that was against that water-power plant, I found that they entered into a contract with the city to supply the franchise company of that city with water at one-half a cent a kilowatt hour, whilst consumers pay no doubt in that city 7, 8, and probably 9 cents a kilowatt hour.

Mr. President, is it proper to say to the people out there, "These waters are yours, it is true, but we are going to put extra charges on its use." We will admit the charges must be reflected in the increased price the consumer must pay. recognize that principle as fundamental, but we want to have control of it. We think some good will come out of such an arrangement. Federal control in State affairs has never resulted in benefit.

Mr. President, there are other difficulties which will arise in the administration of this provision of this bill. We have a system of uses of water out in our State that is going to come directly in conflict with its administration. If you pass this bill and put under the Secretary of the Interior or anyone else in the Federal Government the right to control reservoirs, conduits, and the plants themselves you are going to cause no end of conflicts. Ever since Colorado was a Territory we have had a system of laws providing for the generation of power and for the irrigation of land. We provided in our State that the uses of water shall be graded. We have a highest use, the domestic use. The State has a right to say that the irrigation use and the power use must be subordinate to the domestic use.

The irrigation use is placed higher than the power use in our States. You can condemn water appropriated for any of these lower uses for a higher use.

Now, suppose a company undertakes to construct a reservoir under a lease given by the Federal Government. What is the effect? They are under the police power of the State. The State engineer has the power to declare that a reservoir is unsafe and order it torn down. Will it ever be taken down? No; the United States Government will decline to permit it. There you have a conflict, an irreconcilable conflict, between the authorities of the State and the authorities of the Nation.

Mr. President, this demonstrates to my mind that the States having certain powers in local government, that as to those powers the National Government ought not to interfere.

Let us go a little further. As you may know, these reservoir sites are not usually used for power purposes. The intake of a power plant is generally an open ditch leading from the stream at a low grade, and then by reason of the fall of the stream the water is conducted through a conduit. It gains relatively upon the stream, and so at the end of 3, 4, or 5 miles the water is put into a pipe with a pretty steep descent, and thus the power is generated. It does not require a dam of more than 10 or 15 feet at the intake. The Glenwood Dam, to which I have referred a number of times, is about 10 feet high—enough to make a head of water there, just so it will run into the conduit that leads to the water-power plant.

Mr. President, I hope they never will construct reservoirs for water-power purposes only in my State, and I will give the reason why I hope this will not be done: The season of the year when the water is the lowest in the stream is the winter, and then it is necessary to have the water flow uninterruptedly from the reservoir in order to generate power; but in Colorado we need this water for irrigation more than we do for power purposes, and consequently if it is let loose in the wintertime the farming industry will lose the benefit of it. Consequently I never want to see a reservoir site a part of a system of power plants. I do not want to have a reservoir constructed under those circumstances.

You can readily see what a disadvantage it would be to the farmers if the Government through lessees should put up hugh reservoirs and let loose the waters thereof in winter, when their power plants would need it most.

I hope there never will be a reservoir constructed for the sole purpose of generating power. If there is, it will be a waste. That simply demonstrates why the States ought to have the control of these matters instead of the National Government. It shows that whenever you have a conflict between two jurisdictions you are going to have trouble. It is bound to come. Consequently this bill will become a breeder of trouble, in my judgment.

Now, Mr. President, let us consider another phase of the question. As Senators know, the State engineer is authorized to inspect reservoirs as they are being constructed. If he believes that a reservoir is weak, he has a right to order that the That is the exercise of a police power water be turned out. which must be lodged somewhere, for when that reservoir is full of water it may become dangerous. The dams of reservoirs break every once in a while, and somebody must have the power to prevent destruction of lives and property below. the State engineer goes to one of these reservoirs that has been constructed by a lessee of the United States and says, "My dear sir, this reservoir is dangerous. I want you to let the water out of it; I want you to let it out for 40 feet, and then I will consider whether the dam is strong enough to safely hold even that quantity of water." What will be the result in that case? You will find the lessee, who is always looking to the Federal Government, rushing down to the Secretary of the Interior with the complaint that the State is threatening to ruin his enterprise by requiring that water be let out of the reservoir which he has built at a great expense in order to generate power. If the Secretary backs up the man who has the lease, there would immediately be a conflict between the Federal and State authorities. The trouble is bound to come. I do not see how it can be avoided. Is Federal interference right? Is that the fair and equal treatment which is guaranteed to every State in the Union in its enabling act, which says that the rights of the States shall be equal in every respect whatsoever? Has the Government, through lessees, tried to go into Connecticut or Maine or Massachusetts and erect a plant of that kind, which gives discretion and control over the nonnavigable waters, as is contemplated in this bill? Oh, no. You can see, You can see, Mr. President, we are getting into trouble every time we create a double jurisdiction with respect to this matter.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUSTING in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SHAFBOTH. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Is not that the very purpose of the Shields

Mr. SHAFROTH. I voted for the Shields bill. I do not like its leasing provisions, but I recognize that on a navigable stream the Government does own something in the water. It holds the right to say that you shall not obstruct the navigable stream. That is a jurisdiction in the Federal Government which in my judgment gives it a right to exercise some control, some kind of discretion in reference to such dams.

Mr. WALSH. That was not the point. As I understood the Senator, he objected to the Federal Government going into the State and exercising any jurisdiction whatever over the construction of a dam, because whenever it did so it would come in conflict with the State authority.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It will clearly come in conflict with the State as to these nonnavigable streams. I will concede that to the Senator. As a matter of fact, I am not in love with the leasing feature of the Shields bill. The Senator is greatly mistaken.

Mr. WALSH. May I interrupt the Senator once more?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH. Suppose the other way. Suppose you give a perpetual grant to construct a dam across a navigable stream that would seem to the Senator quite right, but the Government will still prescribe exactly the conditions under which the dam shall be built, just how it shall be built, what fishways there shall be, as every bill and as the present law prescribes. So you have to have the same control that the Senator deplores as a feature of this bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I deplored that feature in the Shields bill, but I recognize that where there is a navigable stream the Government has some control over it by reason of being in a position to pass upon questions as to whether certain works constitute obstructions to navigation. I can readily see that we have to yield something because of that; but as to water to which the United States Government does not have a particle of title, I can not see in fairness why the matter should be turned over to the Federal Government.

Mr. WALSH. But that is another question. The Senator is not now complaining about that

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am complaining about that every minute and every second during this entire discussion.

Mr. WALSH. But, in addition to that, the Senator makes the further complaint—

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; I make a further complaint.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator makes the further complaint that the Government would have the supervision of the construction of this dam, and that therefore it would come in conflict with the State authorities.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH. The present law in relation to the construction of dams in navigable streams gives the Federal Government authority over their construction.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is true, but that is of necessity. This, however, is not of necessity, because these waters are waters solely and purely in the State, the title to which remains in the State. Consequently, as a matter of fact, the Federal Government has nothing to do with it and should have nothing to do with it.

Mr. President, you can readily appreciate another feature connected with the distribution of water in Colorado. We have a complete system there for the distribution of water. We have decrees of courts as to the same—decrees for power purposes, decrees for irrigation purposes, decrees for domestic purposes. We have water commissioners, or sometimes called river commissioners. They have a right to go to a man's headgate and shut it down and to say to him, "You can not get any more water; your decree is later in priority than the decree of this other man; there is not enough water for both of you." They have a right to shut down the gates in the case of water that is used for nower purposes in the same way.

used for power purposes in the same way.

Mr. President, those commissioners are officers of the law. They have a right to make arrests. There are 75 or 80 of those officers in my State, each having a certain district. They control the matter; they are armed with decrees from the courts of the State, decrees providing for the right of the appropriator to so many cubic feet of water per second as of date of, say, January 1, 1860. The next decree may be for water appropriated on January 1, 1865, and so forth. Those decrees are somewhat complicated, because a ditch, after it is constructed, may be enlarged, and consequently it may have two priorities. If there is not enough water to cover both priorities, the commissioners must shut down the later priority.

Such an officer is bound to come in conflict with the officer of the United States, who has to do with the waters which are run through a plant where power is generated for a lessee of the National Government. The Government officer may say, "Well, I do not recognize your State decree." So there will be a conflict there, and people will get warm about it. You will find when the rights of a farmer whose crop is burning up are infringed or interfered with that there is going to be some serious trouble. Is it right that the Federal Government should step into our State and attempt to assume a control of that nature? It would do so unquestionably if it thought that its rights were being infringed upon, and the State at the same time would immediately think that it would have a right under its decrees to determine these things.

Mr. President, the interference of the Federal Government in the attempt to control by lease water-power projects is some thing that is inconsistent with our system of Government. was never intended that the Nation should interfere by going into the State and attempting to control local matters of that kind. So it would be inconsistent for a State to attempt to control something that is purely national, such as a military reservation in a State, such as a mint in a State, or such as a post office in a State.

Mr. President, the power of taxation by the State is expressly waived forever in those instances. Before any of those Government institutions can be established the act of Congress always provides that the buildings shall not be erected unless the State government cedes jurisdiction over the territory upon which the governmental function is to be exercised. So, whenever a State officer attempts to go there and attempts to perform any official act the Federal authorities say: "Hold off; this is exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government; it has been made so by your own legislature; and for that reason you can not exercise any power here."

Here, where water-power plants will be upon a stream the water of which is used for other purposes, the determination as to what shall be done as to letting the water into or out of a reservoir affects the flow of the entire stream, and, therefore, affects every farmer who draws water from that stream for irrigation. It will be seen, therefore, that we are going to get into complications that will be serious indeed; and if they are not, it will be merely because the power and domination of the Federal Government will compel obedience, and the sacrifice of property on the part of the people of the State will follow.

Mr. President, I can not understand how any persons who would lock into this matter and see the enormous difficulties and tremendous conflicts involved would want the Federal Government to come in and attempt to take possession of the streams of their State.

Mr. WALSH, Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield. Mr. WALSH. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Colorado if I understood him aright? I understood him to say-it does not seem possible that he could have said so-that he was opposed to the construction of reservoirs in any State as appurtenances to the development of power.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I say this: I say that I hope the reservoir sites will all be taken for irrigation purposes. believe that there will be a conflict whenever the attempt is made to irrigate from a stream which has on it reservoirs purely for power purposes. The Senator can see in just a moment that whenever water is impounded in a reservoir for power purposes only it is going to be let loose in the wintertime, when the farmers below will not need it.

Mr. WALSH. I remember the general line of the Senator's argument.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That was the line of my argument.

Mr. WALSH. But I want to know whether the Senator would advocate an amendment of the law of his State so as to prohibit the construction of reservoirs for power purposes?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know that I should be willing to go that far; but I must say that such reservoirs involve a danger, because conflicts are bound to arise; and, so far as I am individually concerned, I hope that all of the reservoir sites will be taken for irrigation and domestic purposes, for unquestionably the times when the waters will be let loose for irrigation purposes and power purposes will be different. By reason of that fact the use of the water for power purposes is going to interfere with the use of water for irrigation purposes

It is possible that electricity may become so costly and may be so generally needed that the power purposes might become dominant and be of more value to the people of the State. In that event perhaps it would be well to construct reservoirs for power purposes instead of for irrigation purposes; but that is l not the condition now, nor is it anticipated that it will ever become the condition.

Mr. WALSH. Then am I right in assuming that the Senator from Colorado is not really anxious about any water-power development at all?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, yes, Mr. President; I am. I recently met on the street the man who was the State engineer of Colorado when I was governor. I asked him whether there had been any water-power development in the State. "No," he said, "not since permits were revoked by the Government."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, did the Senator ask the State engineer if there had been any water-power development in Montana?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No. He was the State engineer of Colorade; he was not the State engineer of Montana. I am referring to my own State. But I have noticed that the Senator from Montana has repeatedly said that the water-power development throughout the entire United States is at a standstill, and that he urges the passage of this bill in order to overcome that emergency condition, as he terms it. My Colorado friend, Mr. Comstock, also said that if the law were in force as it was when he was first appointed State engineer there would be a hundred million dollars placed in the State of Colorado for the development of water power, and he is a conservative man. But, Mr. President, you can appreciate these difficulties, and you can see what enormous wrongs are going to be perpetrated upon the people of the States by the Federal Government invading the States and confiscating property that unquestionably belongs to the States.

I desire to close before we adjourn, and I will try to get along as fast as I can. We also have laws in the States requiring diligence in the work upon reservoirs. There will also be requirements as to diligence provided by the rules and regulations which will be promulgated under the proposed leasing system by the National Government. When there is a conflict of that kind what will be done? The State law requires that a certain work shall be done in a certain length of time. If it is not done, then some one else has a right to file on the site. In the case of a site owned by the Federal Government is it going to let anybody file on it? Oh, no; it is going to insist upon its own way in defiance of State law. The Federal Government can grant extensions of time in construction, and thereby absolutely nullify the law of the State in this respect. Is that right? Is it fair? Is that the equal treatment that we were guaranteed when we came into the Union, when we were assured that we were entitled to and should receive equal treatment with the original States in every respect whatsoever? Oh, no, Mr. President; that is not fair. And I can not understand why men who advocate a bill of this kind can not appreciate the difficulties that are bound to arise and the conflicts that are bound to grow out of the situation, whereby the State is going to be subordinated in every particular when there is a conflict of jurisdiction between it and the Federal Government.

Mr. President, the State has the power to condemn any reservoir in the State of Colorado as unsafe and to order it to be torn down. Is the Federal Government going to permit that when it requires one of its lessees to construct a dam? Is it going to say to the State: "Yes, you are supreme and your officer can determine the question"? It is necessary to have such officers, because some one has to determine whether a reservoir is unsafe, for thousands of people may live below that reservoir, and the breaking of the reservoir might destroy their lives. Consequently we have got to lodge somewhere the power to ascertain whether the reservoir is unsafe, and that is lodged in the State engineer.

It all simply shows that the relations between the Nation and the State are distinct and separate and should be kept distinct and separate; that we have no right to mix the two together; that we have no right in fairness to our obligations to the Constitution and our form of Government to say that the National Government can invade a State and exercise powers that absolutely belong to the States.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.
Mr. WALSH. Then, what will the Senator do in the case of a navigable stream? The Government of the United States has authorized the construction of a dam across the Connecticut River, but, as I understand, the Senator asserts the doctrine that the Government of the United States has no power to invade the State of Connecticut and say how that dam shall be

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, the Senator is mistaken. That is a navigable stream, is it not?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly, it is a navigable stream.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That makes all the difference in the world. The National Government has a right in that instance in the interests of navigation and of interstate commerce, according to the Constitution of the United States. Under the Constitution the Government has jurisdiction. It does not even own the waters of navigable streams, but it has a veto power, and it has a right to say that an obstruction can not be put in a stream, and under that leeway and that little clause of the Constitution, of course, it has the right to withhold a permit for any improvements, unless they meet with governmental approval.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The National Government has the right to authorize the construction of a bridge, has it not?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Not as against the State.
Mr. BRANDEGEE. How does it authorize bridges over navigable streams, then? It is necessary to have a permit from the Mr. SHAFROTH. State in order to do that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Not at all.
Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, yes; it is. There must either be a general law or a specific provision in regard to it. The State can say that a bridge shall not be built. It might be at an improper place, or might be dangerous, or there might be any number of objections which the State can urge, and the State has the power to say that bridge shall not be built.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The State would have the power to say that a bridge that is unsafe should not be built, of course, but it would not have the power to say that a bridge should not be built across a navigable river.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know as to that. The State has a right to say that it shall not be built at all. The powers of the Federal Government and the State government are not equal, and the State has the power to say that that stream shall not be bridged or that it shall be bridged.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I am rather inclined to agree with the Senator from Colorado that in the case of a dam across a navigable stream the State could prescribe the conditions of construction. If that is correct, if that is the law, the courts will be obliged to enforce that law; and where is the conflict that the Senator is afraid of?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I want to tell the Senator

Mr. WALSH. That is to say, the State of Colorado passes a law requiring that every dam constructed in the State of Colorado shall be constructed in accordance with the plans and specifications prescribed by the State engineer of the State of Colorado, but a dam is constructed without complying with those specifications, and the constructor of the dam is arrested. Then comes up the question whether the State of Colorado has the power to pass that law, and if it is determined that it has that power the constructor of the dam will be punished, and thereafter there will be no trouble about it at all. Now, where is the awful conflict which the Senator so much dreads?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will tell the Senator where the conflict is. It is in the physical interference on the part of the Federal Government, which does not seem to want to do what is right, or else there would not have been 40 permits revoked two days before one Secretary of the Interior went out of office, without giving anyone notice, without preferring any charges or indicating at all that there had been any noncompliance with the terms of the law.

Mr. President, there is one statement in the hearings I should like to read just to show the manner in which the people of the West have been mistreated with respect to the administration of these matters. They have been mistreated, and, furthermore, the people have not the means to combat the United States Government. You must remember that when a person undertakes a job of that kind, with all the lawyers employed by the National Government at high salaries, he is going to get into difficulties financially, even if he is absolutely right. There is recorded on page 83 of the hearings on the water-power bill one of the most flagrant outrages that I ever knew perpetrated in the world, and I will read it into the Record in order that people may see and know what it is. I quote from a witness before the Public Lands Committee, a Mr. Britton, who said:

I want to deploy for a moment from a discussion of the bill to illustrate what has happened in one of our districts in California, as descriptive of the great injustice that may be done by such regulations as are here proposed within this bill. The Pacific Gas & Electric Co., in 1912, undertook the proposition of building a dam in the South Yuba

River and by the waters impounded there, through aqueducts, pipe lines, and power houses, to develop practically 200,000 horsepower. The company owned in fee simple the lands surrounding Lake Spaulding and the lands and the waters of the old Lake Spaulding. It evened in fee simple all the land involved in the aqueduct excepting a portion of a quarter section of forest-reserve land. It owned in fee simple every other part of that power development down to its ultimate use, including the transmission lines, except a small portion from the power houses to the centers of distribution.

At the upper end of the lake to be created by this big dam and the enlargement of the present lake then in existence were practically 28 acres of land cornering on the forest reserve, off to the northern end of the lake, 28 acres, more or less, of land—I think not to exceed 30—which would be submerged at certain contours following the height of the dam as raised. The Agricultural Department demanded that the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. take out a permit to cover all of its entire properties, including the right to regulate not only the power houses directly contingent to the Lake Spaulding development, but also every one of their power houses, there being 10 of them in the large system of this company, and to abide by all the rules and regulations prescribed by the Department of Agriculture, because, forsooth, in all of this large development, involving over $60,000,000 of invested capital, and this new development, entailing an expenditure of finally over $10,000,000, there were 28 acres of land that would be ultimately submerged and the water used out of this great reservoir for the purpose of not only the generation of power under the control and regulation of a State commission fixing rates and charges, but the water being used also for the irrigation at the present time of over 20,000 acres of fertile land of the State, and the possible use of that water, after it had been used for power, to irrigate over 50,000 additional acres.

There was a great, big enterprise. The company owned every particle of the land except 28 acres, and when they built this new construction it flooded that land, and the department would not let them occupy that land unless they submitted to the rules and regulations of the department as to lessees. Why, Mr. President, they have that matter in court yet, as I understand. But that same company had another little experience there.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that that is not an isolated case.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have not any doubt about it.

Mr. SMOOT. There are many such cases in different parts of this country

Mr. SHAFROTH. They said:

We protested, and were unfortunately forced to bring suit against the Secretary of Agriculture to determine whether he had constitutionally any right to demand of us the permit that he required we should take out.

A revocable permit, after they had owned a fee-simple title! Mr. President, that was not all in that case. I want to read what occurred at the afternoon session, for it is still worse than that. I understand that if they do not win the suit the only recourse they have is to build a wall that will cost, as I am told, $70,000 to keep the water off that 28 acres of land that is not worth $20 an acre, and yet that was the requirement; and that is the kind of a noose that we are putting around our necks.

Mr. President, Mr. Britton goes on:

Mr. President, Mr. Britton goes on:

I was discussing, as I recall it, just before adjournment, the question of the occupancy of the forest-reserve lands by the Pacific Gas & Electric Co., and was about to speak of another feature as showing the great injustice to developments of that character by the rules and regulations now enforced.

We had made, as early as 1905, preliminary surveys from the outlet of the reservoir to the site of the power plant, to secure the largest fall possible and the greatest utilization of the water. In making that survey it passed over a certain section of land which was not, at that time, involved in the forest reserve, but which subsequently and before the construction was begun and before the operation of that plant was placed in the forest reserve, but the only part that affected our construction was a matter of 1,320 feet crossing a quarter section of the forest-reserve lands. The construction of the canal or aqueduct carrying the water, to an extent ultimately of 400 second-feet, passed, as I told you this morning, over land owned by the company, and the aqueduct over the 1,320 feet of forest-reserve lands would have cost, in construction, somewhere between $12,000 and $15,000.

I personally made application to the Secretary of Agriculture to secure a temporary permit without tying ourselves to all the other regulations of the department to pass over and occupy this 1,320 feet of forest-reserve lands pending the determination of the suit brought in the Federal court against us to determine the constitutional rights of the Secretary to enforce the rules and regulations. That was declined, and rather than submit to those rules and regulations the company was compelled, at an expense approximately of $60,000, to build a siphon on its own land to get around this 1,320 feet of land.

Mr. President, is there a private landlord who would ever

Mr. President, is there a private landlord who would ever deny the right to occupy that 1,320 feet?

[The conclusion of Mr. Shafroth's speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, i speak, I move that the Senate adjourn. Mr. President, if no one else wishes to

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator make that a motion for a

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me ask the Senator from Arkansas to move that the Senate adjourn. I make that request for this reason: This morning we began at 11 o'clock after having recessed from the night before, and I am quite sure that there has been more time taken up by Senators coming in at any time of the day and asking permission to introduce this resoluthe of the day and asking permission to introduce this resolu-tion and that bill and this report than if we had had a morn-ing hour and had the whole of them presented at once. The request is not for the purpose of delay. It is only in the interest of an orderly way of conducting the business of the Senate, and to save time. I believe that we save time every time we adjourn, unless there is some matter as to which we all agree that there shall be no introduction of bills or any other business while it is under consideration. I will ask the Senator from Montana if his experience has not been exactly the same?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I wish I could agree with the Senator from Utah about that matter, but I can not. My experience is quite the reverse. The morning business is taken up. Various matters are disposed of. Bills are introduced, and some Senator wants to make a speech explaining his bill. Another presents a petition; he has something to say in connection with the petition, and, of course, he wants to have it go out to his constituents. Two hours are easily consumed in this way in the morning. When it is desired for any purpose at all to expedite a bill the consideration of which has been long delayed, it is the uniform practice of the Senate—recently, at least—to recess from day to day so that it will be taken up and gotten out of the way.

I am sincerely hopeful that to-morrow morning we shall be able to agree by unanimous consent to vote on this measure; and I shall ask to-morrow morning, on the convening of the Senate, unanimous consent to vote on this measure not later than 4 o'clock on Saturday afternoon. That leaves two days still for debate on the bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, does not the Senator realize that whenever you fix a time for a vote, nothing whatever is said on the bill until the very morning and the very hour when the time is set for the vote? Take the prohibition bill. Because a great debate was going to occur on it it was set off for 10 or 15 days, and yet not one word was said on it until the very morning of the day when the vote was to be taken.

We want a discussion of these matters, because we believe that if the people understand them they will vote with us, and for that reason we want to hear the discussion. I do not believe I have consumed one minute of time that was not occupied directly in the discussion of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson] has the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply wish to say to the Senator that I will withdraw my request.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Montana that if possible I should like to have an adjournment. A number of Senators have expressed to me a desire to introduce bills and resolutions. Some of us do not insist upon breaking into the orderly procedure here to introduce bills and resolutions, but if the Senator from Montana, who is in charge of the bill, prefers to move to take a recess, I shall yield to him for the purpose of doing so.

Mr. JONES. It will take a quorum to take a recess. I shall not object to adjourning until 11 o'clock.

Mr. JAMES. We can recess by unanimous consent. Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to the Senator from Montana that if he makes the request which he has indicated he would make, he will have possibly a day's debate on the question as to whether he can get unanimous consent, not on the bill at all but on the question of granting unanimous consent. He is just laying out a day's work for himself

Mr. WALSH. That would be interesting. If it is the pur-ose of the Senator from New Mexico at this stage of the public business, with all the important legislation that is before us, to take that course, the sooner we learn about it the better, perhaps, it will be.

Mr. FALL. The Senator from Montana must not misunderstand the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. WALSH. Under what circumstances, permit me to inquire, would the Senator from New Mexico expect to debate for a day the question as to whether we could have unanimous consent to vote?

Mr. FALL. I should like to ask the Senator how many unanimous-consent agreements he has seen adopted in the Senate until after hours of debate on some question concerning the unanimous-consent agreement? That is what I had reference to.

I want to say to the Senator that, so far as the Senator from New Mexico is concerned, there will not be one moment of filibustering against this bill. I am one man who is opposed to this bill who will vote on it at any time, even without discuss-

Mr. WALSH. The Senator from New Mexico gave me that assurance on yesterday, and so I was surprised to hear the Senator suggest in the Senate here that there will be a day's debate upon a simple request for a unanimous-consent agree-

Mr. FALL, Mr. President, in view of the statement of the Senator from New Mexico to the Senator from Montana, the Senator from Montana was not justified in making even the suggestion that the Senator from New Mexico proposed to filibuster on this bill.

Mr. WALSH. I take the judgment of the Senator from New Mexico upon the matter, then, and say that I was not justified.

Mr. FALL. Merely from my experience in the Senate, which has been similar to that of the Senator from Montana, I say that whenever a question of unanimous consent on a matter of this kind is suggested there will be a day's debate, or hours of debate, on the unanimous-consent agreement, entirely aside from the question at issue. I now give notice, Mr. President, that to-morrow morning I shall address the Senate on the pending measure; and, further than that, I am going to object to laying aside the unfinished business now for taking up anything else.

Mr. ROBINSON. What is the wish of the Senator from Mon-

Mr. WALSH. I shall be glad to defer to the wish of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 9 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m., Thursday, February 1, 1917) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 2, 1917, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 1, 1917.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, who art able to heal our moral and spiritual in-firmities and to impart strength for the daily duties of life, inspire us with wisdom, courage, and fortitude to meet the changing conditions as they unfold themselves hour by hour; that we may be profitable servants unto Thee and unto the people here represented on the floor of this House; that with brave and manly hearts we may stand to our convictions with minds ever open to higher and larger conceptions through Him who was the embodiment of truth, justice, mercy, and righteousness, and who died a martyr to His convictions. Amen

EULOGIES OF THE LATE SENATOR CLARKE, OF ARKANSAS.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Sunday, February 18, 1917, be set aside for addresses upon the life and character and public services of the Hon. J. P. CLARKE, late a Senator from the State of Arkansas.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that Sunday, the 18th of February, be set aside for the purpose of delivering speeches on the life and character of the late Senator Clarke, of Arkansas. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. MURRAY rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Oklahoma rise?

Mr. MURRAY. I desire to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the amendment I have introduced providing for a cumulative electoral and suffrage system.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimoush consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the sub-ject of a constitutional amendment which he has introduced looking to cumulative voting. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 8090. An act granting the consent of Congress to Washington-Newport News Short Line, a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Potomac River; and

S. 7963. An act to prohibit the manufacture or sale of alcoholic liquors in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE POTOMAC RIVER.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, there is a Senate bill on the Speaker's table and an identical measure on the Calendar of the House, reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I ask the Speaker to lay the Senate bill before the

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays the bill before the House. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 8090) granting the consent of Congress to Washington-Newport News Short Line, a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Potomac River.

the Potomac River.

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Washington-Newport News Short Line, a corporation chartered under the laws of the State of Virginia, with principal place of business in the city of Newport News, State of Virginia, and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Potomac River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Riverside, in the county of Charles, in the State of Maryland, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman from Georgia yield for a moment?

Mr. ADAMSON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Is there any bridge over the Potomac now

Mr. MANN. Is there any bridge over the recent south of Washington?

Mr. ADAMSON. There is not.

Mr. MANN. Of course, the Potomac River, I suppose, up to that point is used more or less by the war vessels of the Gov-ernment. Is the gentleman sure that, in approving the plan, the War Department will be able to protect all the interests of the Government?

Mr. ADAMSON. The committee has that assurance, Mr. Speaker, I will say in response to the gentleman. As he knows, there are other rivers similarly situated in the United States on which bridges have been permitted, and the general bridge law, which the gentleman himself drew, authorizes the War Department to protect the interests of the Government.

I will further state that the War Department has knowledge of the bridge that the railroad is ready to construct, and has made a preliminary investigation of the matter, and the department is satisfied that it can protect the interests of navigation. I will state, further, that this section of Virginia, as you all know, is cut off from all communication with the Capital except by a line of steamships, and you have to make a detour in getting to and from that region. The country thereabouts needs development and needs transportation.

Mr. MANN. This is to construct a short line carees the

Mr. MANN. This is to construct a short line across the Potomac River and to come into Washington on the north side of the Potomac?

Mr. ADAMSON. It comes up on the west side until it reaches this bridge, and then it comes up on the east side.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. How far below Washington is it proposed to erect this bridge?

Mr. ADAMSON. My information is that it is from 25 to 30

Mr. STAFFORD. In crossing rather large navigable waters the modern, up-to-date policy is, instead of erecting a bridge that may interfere with navigation, to construct a tunnel. For instance, in Detroit the Michigan Central has constructed a tunnel, and in New York it is the same way. I would like to direct this inquiry to the gentleman: Whether it is possible, by reason of the depth of water, to construct a tunnel at some convenient point down there?

Mr. ADAMSON. I have heard two suggestions made about this bridge. One is that it will be constructed so high that it will not obstruct navigation, and the other is that it can be provided with a draw. But the War Department has satisfied itself that it can build the bridge without obstructing navigation. I am informed by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Jones] that the Navy Department also holds to that opinion.

Mr. STAFFORD. It ought to be, in any event, constructed so as not to interfere with the navigability of the stream.

Mr. ADAMSON. I am advised that the plans will not interfere with the movement of war vessels. The matter has had the attention of the Navy as well as that of the War Department.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Adamson, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

On motion of Mr. Adamson, the House bill (H. R. 20534) of similar import was laid on the table.

PERMITS FOR INAUGURAL CEREMONIES.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous con-sent to call up for present consideration House joint resolution

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it. The Clerk read the title, as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 358) authorizing the granting of permits to the committee on inaugural ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President elect on March 4, 1917, etc.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House joint resolution?

There was no objection.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution. Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that the House joint resolution be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution. The Clerk read as follows:

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution. The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to grant permits, under such restrictions as he may deem necessary to the committee on inaugural ceremonies for the use of any reservations or other public spaces in the city of Washington under his control on the occasion of the inauguration of the President elect on the 4th day of March, 1917. Provided, That in his opinion no serious or permanent injuries will be thereby inflicted upon such reservations or public spaces or statuary thereon; and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may designate for such and other purposes on the occasion from under their control as they may deem proper and necessary: Provided, however, That all stands or platforms that may be erected in the public spaces aforesaid, including such as may be erected in connection with the display of fireworks, shall be under the supervision of the said inaugural committee and in accordance with the plans and designs to be approved by the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia tendent of the United States Capitol Eudling and Grounds: And provided further, That the reservations or public spaces occupied by the stands or other structures shall be promptly restored to their original condition before such occupation and that the inaugural committee shall indemnify the War Department for any damage of any kind whatsoever upon such reservations or spaces by reason of such use.

Bereby authorized to permit the committee on illumination of the inaugural committee for the inaugural ceremonies, March, 1917, every necessary and in the nearest practicable connection with the present supply of light, for the purpose of effecting the said illumination: Provided, That if it shall be necessary to erect wires for illumination: Provided, That if it shall be necessary to erect wires for illumination: Provided, That the structure is a provided parther, That the server and par shall give bond, with security satisfactory to the Secretary of War, to do the same.

Sec. 4. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to permit the Western Union Telegraph Co. and the Postal Telegraph Co. to extend overhead wires to such points along the line of parade as shall be deemed by the chief marshal convenient for use in connection with the parade and other inaugural purposes, the said wires to be taken down within 10 days after the conclusion of the ceremonies on the 4th day of March, 1917.

SEC. 5. That the Superintendent of the United States Capitol Building and Grounds is hereby authorized to permit the inaugural committee to use for the temporary quartering of troops participating in said inauguration, so much of the United States courthouse, in Judiclary Square, in the city of Washington, as in his judgment is available for such use: Provided, That the inaugural committee shall indemnify the United States for any damage of any kind whatsoever to said courthouse by reason of such use.

The amendment was agreed to.

Page 2, line 16, after the word "their," strike out the word "original."

The amendment was agreed to.

Page 2, line 22, after the word "for," strike out the word "the" and insert the word "said."

The amendment was agreed to.

Page 2, line 23, strike out the words "March, 1917."

The amendment was agreed to.

Page 4, line 21, after the word "of," strike out the word "the" and insert in lieu thereof the word "said."

The amendment was agreed to.

Page 4, line 22, strike out the words "March 4, 1917."

The amendment was agreed to.

Page 5, line 17, after the word "ceremonies," insert a period.

Mr. MANN. There is no such amendment as that in the printed bill. That amendment does not go in there.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 18, strike out the words "on the 4th day of March, 1917."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I notice that there is no date fixed for the inaugural ceremonies. When are they to occur? Will the gentleman state that as a matter of information?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The committee understood they were to occur on March 5.

Mr. MANN. Has there been any other instance in the history of the Government where the inauguration occurred on March 5?

I have not examined to see.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not know.

Mr. BARNHART. If the gentleman will permit me to answer, I notice by the newspaper reports that there have been other instances, and that in each instance the President took the onth both on Sunday and on the day following.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. This joint resolution is with reference to the inaugural ceremonies.

Mr. BARNHART. I know; but the date March 4 was stricken out for the purpose of making it clear that this would apply to the inauguration, whether held on March 4 or March 5.

Mr. MANN. The inaugural exercises will take place, as I learn from the gentleman, on March 5. I apprehend that there will be no practical hiatus in the office of the President, whether he is sworn in on March 4 or on March 5. There are always a few minutes after the theoretical end of March 5. at noon on March minutes after the theoretical end of March 3, at noon on March 4, before the President is sworn in, anyhow.

Mr. BARNHART. The gentleman from Illinois will agree with me, I think, that inasmuch as we have an extraordinary President he ought to be sworn in on both the 4th and 5th this time, so as to make sure that we get him.

Mr. MANN. I will admit that swearing him every day of the year will not make him observe fully his duties of office, or preserve the rights of the Congress, as far as that is concerned.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

By unanimous consent the title of the joint resolution was amended by striking out after the word "elect" the words "on March 4," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "in March."

On motion of Mr. Clark of Florida, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

MAINTENANCE OF PUBLIC ORDER DURING THE INAUGURAL CERE-MONIES.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate joint resolution 203, to provide for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property in connection with the presidential inaugural ceremonies in 1917.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays the joint resolution before the House. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That $35,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, payable from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and from the revenues of the District of Columbia in equal parts, is hereby appropriated to enable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to maintain public order and protect life and property in said District from the 28th of February to the 10th of March, 1917, both inclusive, including the employment of personal services, payment of allowances, traveling expenses, hire of means of transportation, and other incidental expenses in the discretion of the commissioners. Said commissioners are hereby authorized and directed to make all reasonable regulations necessary to secure such preservation of public order and protection of life and property and fixing fares by public conveyance, and to make special regulations respecting the standing, movements, and operating of vehicles of whatever character or kind during said period and fixing fares to be charged for the use of the same. Such regulations shall be in force one week prior to said inauguration, during said inauguration, and one week subsequent thereto, and shall be published in one or more of the daily newspapers published in the District of Columbia, and in such other manner as the commissioners may deem best to acquaint the public with the same; and no penalty prescribed for the violation of any of such regulations shall be enforced until five days after such publication. Any person violating any of such regulations shall be hisle for each such offense to a fine not to exceed $100 in the police court of said District, and in default of payment thereof to imprisonment in the workhouse of said District for not longer than 60 days. And the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby likewise appropriated, to be expended by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for the construction, rent, maintenance, and expenses incident to the operation of temporary public-comf

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I have not seen this resolution, and I do not think it has been printed as it passed the Senate. What is the difference between this resolu-

mr. MANN. This carries now $40,000.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. This carries now $40,000. I propose to move to amend it so as to make it $25,000, which was the amount carried in the resolution four years ago and in the resolution eight years ago for this identical purpose.

Mr. GARNER. Reserving the right to object, does the gentleman hope to retain in the joint resolution the amount carried four years ago and eight years ago instead of what is now carried in the resolution?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I certainly do. I see no reason why it should not be retained.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.
The SPEAKER. This is on the Union Calendar.
Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to consider this joint resolution in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, this resolution as it comes from the Senate is identical in verbiage with resolutions passed for this purpose on former occasions, and, as I have just indicated, in reply to the interrogation of the gentle-man from Illinois [Mr. Mann], the only difference is in the amount that it undertakes to appropriate. I find upon investigation that for the last two inaugurals, both in 1908 and in 1912, the same amount was appropriated for that purpose, and at the proper time I shall move to amend the joint resolution so as to make it conform to the amount appropriated in the past.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can offer the amendment

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, in line 3, on page, I move to strike out "$35,000" and insert in lieu thereof $23,000."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 1, line 3, by striking out "$35,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$23,000."

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, on page 2, line 22, by striking out "five thousand" and inserting "two thousand."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, line 22, by striking out "five thousand" and inserting "two thousand."

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I want to discuss this and another matter for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes. Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I avail myself of this opportunity to make a statement in response to many inquiries I am receiving every day. They relate to the distribution of tickets to the inaugural platform in front of the Capitol. Let me say very briefly that four years ago I think we secured the largest allotment of tickets for distribution for the membership of the House that had ever been received. We then had seven tickets for each Member-two tickets for each Member elect—to the platform, plus one to the Senate gallery, making eight tickets to each Member. This year, through the persuasiveness and fidelity of my associates on your committee, we have been able to do a little better for the House. [Applause.] This year, for the first time, we have allotted tickets to both of the great national committees, Republican and Democratic, in equal numbers. We allot 10 tickets extra to the Speaker, and for the first time we have made an allotment of 10 extra tickets to the majority leader and 10 extra tickets to the minority leader

After having made these allotments, I think I am safe in saying to the membership that we will have for distribution 9 tickets to the platform for each Member, plus 1 to the Senate gallery, making 10 as against 8 four years ago.

Members elect-that is, Members who are elected to the next Congress and who are not Members of the current Congress, four years ago received two tickets, but this year we will be able to give them three tickets.

Now, if there is any gentleman who desires to ask me a question I will try to answer it; otherwise I have completed my statement.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question for information, but not in regard to tickets. I believe the practice is for the Senate to meet and swear in the Vice President and then proceed to the platform outside, where the President takes the oath of office. My recollection is that the House has remained in session until noon of March 4, and then proceeded as a body to the Senate. But this year the House will not be in session on the morning of March 5. Is it the intention of the committee to provide that the Members of the House shall meet in the Hall of the House by noon on March 5 and march in a body to the Senate, as has been done hitherto, but always when we were, in fact, in session?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I will say to the gentleman that matter has not been particularly discussed by the committee, although in a general way it is the understanding of the committee that the House, on somebody's suggestion, will convene in the Hall of the House between 11 and 12 o'clock on March 5, and move from here in a body to the Senate.

Mr. MANN. I think it would be very desirable for the House to meet informally on Monday, March 5, and at the proper time proceed to the Senate. Of course, there will be no organization and no Speaker.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. That suggestion will be made to the House, and it is hoped that the House will respond to it generously and unanimously.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE].

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Page of North Carolina, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed, was laid on the table.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Indian appropriation bill, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

Mr. MANN. I have not seen a copy of the bill printed with the Senate amendments.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have it here.

Mr. MANN. I have not been able to get one, and I wish the gentleman would let it go over until we have an opportunity

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I am willing for it to go over.

Mr. MANN. We could not get a copy yesterday, and I have not had a copy this morning.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request for the present.

MINORITY VIEWS ON THE NAVAL BILL (H. REPT. 1392, PT. 2).

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, Tuesday afternoon leave was granted for the filing of minority views upon the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 20632), during yesterday. They were not filed, and a request has been made that they be filed to-day. make the request that the minority may have to-day to file minority views on the naval appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the minority members of the Naval Committee have to-day to file minority views on the naval appropriation bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE REVENUE BILL.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the revenue bill; and pending that I ask unanimous consent that all general debate be concluded in 25 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the revenue bill, and, pending that, asks unanimous consent that general debate close in 25 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection. The motion of Mr. KITCHIN was then agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. SHERLEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20578) to provide increased revenue to defray the expenses of the increased appropriations for the Army and Navy and the extensions of fortifications, and for other purposes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, in concluding this debate I trust that the House will permit me to express profound regret that many statements on both sides of the aisle have been made in this discussion that ought not to have been made. There never was a time in the history of our Republic, when at this moment the 10,000 wires that stretch the earth are flashing the anxiety of the American people over the grave and I may say tragic situation that confronts them, that patriotism demanded more emphatically than now the conquering of every sectional prejudice and the dissipation of every sectional thought. [Applause.] It is no time, my countrymen, for crimination and recrimination. It is incumbent on every American citizen who loves his country, be he Republican or Democrat, to forget that there ever was a difference between the sections of this country. [Applause.]

It is the duty of every patriotic Representative in this Chamber, be he Democrat or Republican, to frown down upon any statement coming from either side or from any source that will tend in the slightest degree to rekindle sectional animosity. [Applause.] It is incumbent upon every American citizen who [Applause.] It is incumbent upon every American citizen who loves his country, and is doubly incumbent upon the American Representative in this House, to do everything that will promote at all times, and especially in this hour, national unity, national love, national fraternity. [Applause.] Let Republicans and Democrats alike throughout our country resolve to consecrate anew all of their patriotism, all of their wisdom, all of their courage, all of their loyalty—and all of their coolness—to the one country, to the one Union, to the one flag. [Applause.] I shall say nothing in this debate, as I have never said anything in any debate, or any discussion of any measure, here or elsewhere, which will in any way tend to revive sectional feeling or draw sectional lines, although the metropolitan press continues to assert and reassert daily that in preparing press continues to assert and reassert daily that in preparing and presenting the pending bill I did so. Mr. Chairman, I repeat, I have never uttered a sentiment here or elsewhere in my life that would in any way tend to rekindle sectional feeling or produce sectional prejudice. [Applause.] I am and have been a partisan Democrat, and many of you are and have been partisan Republicans, and you esteem me no less and I esteem you no less for it. We both know that we are honest in our views upon the issues that divide the two parties. But I have never permitted my political partisanship to entertain a sectional thought.

Returning now to the pending bill, I desire to put the real, palpable, incontestable facts before this House and the country, and then when the vote is taken the judgment of the House will be asked of Republicans and Democrats. We know, every Republican and Democrat, it matters not how it came about, that we are under the absolute necessity of raising an additional amount of revenue in excess of the revenues to be produced by existing laws to the amount of at least $200,000,000. We do know, however one side or the other may charge extravagance, that the necessity for the large tax measure of last session and for the revenue bill which we now present was created not by Republicans alone, not by Democrats alone, but by the joint action of Republicans and Democrats in the House and Republicans and Democrats at the other end of the Capitol, and by the administration. We know, every one of us, and the people throughout this country ought to know, that we would not have been under the necessity of presenting a tax measure at the last session, or this bill at this session, had not the demands of the people, or of some of the people, per-suaded or forced Congress to enter upon a career of unparalleled increases of appropriations for the Army and Navy and fortifications. Whether right or wrong, wise or unwise, proper or improper, that is the fact. Republicans more solidly than Democrats voted for these increased appropriations, but Democrats voted for them as solidly as they ought, and I thought at the time more solidly than they ought. The responsibility for the need of increased revenues at the last session and at this session is upon Democrats and Republicans alike. The taxpayers of the country must realize the inevitable fact that we can not have big preparedness without big appropriations, and we can not have big appropriations without having big taxation. If the people demand of Congress large and unparalleled increase of appropriations for militarism, Congress must of necessity demand of the people large and unparalleled increase of taxation. Taxes will yearly increase as long as the appropriations for the Army and Navy yearly increase. Taxes will never be reduced until appropriations for the Army and Navy are reduced.

Yesterday in debate and the day before I heard our colleagues upon the other side say-and I know it was said in the heat of debate and, perhaps, for political purposes, for their constituents at home-that but for Democratic extravagance in appropriations in the rivers and harbors bills, and in the public-buildings bills during Wilson's administration, not one dollar of additional taxation would have to be raised. Oh, my friends, there is not one word of truth in it, and when you reflect you yourselves know it is not true. On the contrary, even if we strike out the public-buildings bill which passed the House recently-and it has not yet passed the Senate, and not a dollar, even should the bill become law, will be appropriated for the ensuing fiscal year of 1918—if we were to strike out both the public-buildings bill and the rivers and harbors bill, neither of which has yet passed the Senate, and if Congress had accepted the amendments which Republicans proposed last session and are proposing at this session to the appropriation bills, we would be compelled to raise one hundred million dollars more than we are providing for in this bill. Every Republican here who has taken the time to reflect at all knows that. Let us see about this alleged Democratic extravagance in the rivers and harbors and public-buildings bills. If I make a mistake in any statement of fact, I want some Republican Member of the respective committees to correct me. The Democrats under Woodrow Wilson's administration, even if we include the rivers and harbors bill, which has just passed the House and has not yet passed the Senate, have economized by millions in appropriations for rivers and harbors, as compared with such appropriations under the Taft administration. The Congress during Mr. Taft's administration appropriated $50,000,000 more, in its four years, than the Democrats, even including the rivers and harbors bill now before the Senate and not yet passed, have under Mr. Wilson's administration. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Under Mr. Taft's administration for four years Congress authorized $177,000,000 of appropriations for rivers and harbors, while the Democrats under Mr. Wilson's four years, including the bill that has not yet passed the Senate, appropriated, though the growth of the country and of commerce demanded more appropriations, only $127,000,000. Ah, gentlemen, no Republican can be honest with himself and honest with this House and honest with his constituents and continue to make the charge that on account of extravagance in the rivers and harbors appropriation bill we are under the necessity of raising this revenue. One more fact. Let this be known by us here and by the people of the country who desire to know the truth, that of the $127,000,000 appropriated by the Democratic Congress under Wilson's administration, including the last bill passed by the House and now in the Senate, more than five out of every six dollars go to complete or further projects to which the Government was committed by Congress under Mr. Taft's and Mr. Roosevelt's administrations, and not under Mr. Wilson's. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Less than $20,000,000 of the $127,000,000 that we appropriated

Less than $20,000,000 of the $127,000,000 that we appropriated in the last four years goes for new projects under the Wilson administration. I remind gentlemen that the rivers and harbors bill now in the Senate, which Republicans denounce, received in this House a majority of Republicans voting.

How about the public-buildings bill, for which Republicans denounce us? I want to state the facts, and then appeal to the conscience and the judgment of honest Republicans here and elsewhere to refute and condemn the charge, by whomever made, that the Democratic Congress has been wasteful and extravagant with respect to public-buildings bills.

Under Mr. Roosevelt's four years, when the country was not nearly so wealthy, when there was not nearly so large a population, when the demand and the necessity for public buildings were not near so urgent, there were authorized $61,000,00 in public-buildings bills, while under Mr. Wilson's four years' administration up to this moment Congress has enacted into law no public-buildings bill; and if we assume that the bill recently passed by the House will pass the Senate—and I do not believe it will—theu we shall have appropriated only $32,000,000. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Be it further known that this public-buildings bill, for which Republicans now denounce us, and which has not yet passed the Senate, received in the House an overwhelming majority of the Republicans voting.

What else? Under the four years of Taft's administration the Congress passed public-buildings bills amounting to $75,000,000, two and a half times more than the total amount under the four years of Woodrow Wilson's administration, even if the $32,000,000 public-buildings bill becomes a law. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, gentlemen, there is plenty of politics, and there are plenty of issues upon which gentlemen can display their partisanship, but it is not right, it is not square dealing, for Representatives of the people to stand here on this floor and denounce and charge one party with extravagance in rivers and harbors and public-buildings bills, or in any bill, without stating the whole truth. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentlemen who made these charges ought in justice to themselves, in justice to truth, have the manhood to get up here and confess that they were wrong and admit that, certainly as compared with the bills under Republican administrations, there has been no extravagance in rivers and harbors and in public-buildings bills under Woodrow Wilson's administration, but most commendable economy. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But these appropriations, small as they are in comparison with the appropriations under the Taft administration and under the Roosevelt administration, are not responsible for a dollar of the tax which will be produced by the revenue bill of last session or the tax which will be produced by this bill if it becomes law. Now, gentlemen, the Republicans and Demo-crats alike are responsible for this unparalleled increase in "preparedness" appropriations; Republicans and Democrats "preparedness" appropriations; Republicans and Democrats alike are responsible for the necessity of producing additional revenue, but the difference between the Democrats and Republicans, as has been shown in this debate, and I fear will be shown in the vote, is that recognizing their joint responsi-bility of such increased appropriations the Democrats have the courage to share in or take the responsibility of providing means to defray them, while the Republicans run away and are too unmanly to stand here and help finance the very appropriations for which they voted and relieve the very financial situation they created. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I wish here to call their attention and to call the attention of the House and of the country to the fact that from the time the people, Republicans and Democrats alike, began to demand these huge increases of appropriations for "preparedness"-and they did not demand it until the war had made a slaughterhouse of Europe and had brought fright into the minds and hearts of all neutral people the world over-every time a bill has been presented to Congress to provide money to meet such preparedness appropriations the Republican Party on this floor has almost solidly voted against it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I want to call the attention of the country that while urgently demanding and persistently voting for the largest appropriations at any time suggested, the Republicans in this House, when confronted with the duty of financing them, have never yet been willing to sacrifice the cause of a protective tariff, the cause of the tariff barons, to the cause of their country's preparedness and defense. [Applause on the Democratic side.] They voted for them, but when it comes down to providing means for defraying the appropriations they say, "No; we will let the country go unprepared, even in the hour of impending crisis, if by such preparation we must touch one jot or tittle of our tariff policy or cross for one moment the demands of our tariff-fattened favorites." [Applause on the Democratic side,] In order to rally "the boys" to the standard of Republican solidarity in the House our opponents abandon discussion of the merits of the pending bill, raise the old battle cry of "tariff and protection to American industries," and, to procure the required revenue, audaciously demand a return to the Payne-Aldrich Protective Tariff Act. Why try to fool anybody by such appeal and demand? Do you not know—yes; every minority Republican member of the Ways and Means Committee knows, absolutely knows, that it is absolutely impossible to raise the necessary amount of revenue to take care of the increased appropriations for preparedness by a protective tariff or by any tariff. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I am going to show it so clearly, to bring proof so incontestable, that not a Republican can deny or dispute it.

I ask the careful attention of gentlemen here, and I wish every man in the country, Republican and Democrat, could hear while I recount these facts. The largest amount of customs receipts and taxes ever collected in any one year under the Payne high protective tariff act, and all other revenue laws under the Taft administration, was $663,000,000. This was the last year of the Payne Act and the Taft administration.

The estimates of appropriations for the fiscal year 1918, for which this Congress must appropriate, and for which Republicans will vote almost to a man, for the Army, Navy, and fortifications alone, are $777,000,000. [Applause on the Democratic side.1

One hundred and fourteen millions more for Army, Navy, and fortifications alone for the next fiscal year than the biggest amount collected in any one year under the Taft administration from the Payne Tariff Act and every other source of taxa-

Let me repeat. The total amount of money collected from all sources of taxation during the life of the Payne-Aldrich Act, under the Taft administration, from customs receipts, Act, under the Tart administration, from customs receipts, corporation tax, from internal revenue, the tax on liquor, beer, and tobacco, from every kind of tax in the year 1912—13, the biggest collection year under Taft and the Payne Act, was $663,000,000. The estimates of appropriation for 1918 for the Army, Navy, and fortifications alone for which this Congress will appropriate, and for which you Republicans are voting, is $777,000,000—over $100,000,000 more than the total amount of taxes raised from all sources in the best year. total amount of taxes raised from all sources in the best year of Taft's administration and the Payne Act. And yet with of Tait's administration and the Payne Act. And yet with that bald, stark-naked fact staring you in the face you have the audacity to attempt to fool the House, and attempt to fool the American people, with the statement that the way to finance this $777,000,000 and the more than $500,000,000 required for other functions of the Government is to have the Payne-Aldrich or some other protective tariff measure encoded.

Let me remind the gentlemen that the customs duties collected under the Payne Act, in its last year, was only

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman yield for a minute?
Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.
Mr. FORDNEY. It has not been so contended by any man speaking from this side of the House. Will the gentleman pardon me a little further?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. FORDNEY. The proposition from the Republican side of the House has been—and I as well as others made that state-ment—that to provide for this increase in the Navy and the Army, and the money spent on the Panama Canal, it should be taken care of by a bond issue.

Mr. KITCHIN. Why, you do not say that in the report which you signed yourself and wrote yourself. You demanded a protective tariff to get the revenue. [Applause on the Democratic

Mr. FORDNEY. I pointed out to the gentleman in my remarks that if the rates of duty provided for in the Payne tariff law had been in effect last year they would have furnished an additional amount of $248,000,000, the exact amount you proposed to raise from direct taxes in this bill. And that is as far as we went. [Applause.]

Mr. KITCHIN. And I have shown time and again on this floor how impossible it was to raise that amount by your tariff. I hold in my hand the minority report, signed and written by the gentleman himself. I read:

To meet this deplorable condition of our National Treasury two radical courses should be followed:

Proper and rigid economy observed in all appropriations.
 A return to the sound fiscal system of four years ago—

[Loud applause on the Republican side].

Gentlemen, I trust that applause upon the part of his Republican colleagues does not mean the refutation of the statement relative to bonds which the gentleman solemnly made upon the floor a while ago. [Applause on the Democratic side.] In answer to the statement I made that they propose a return to the Payne-Aldrich or some protective tariff act for the production of revenue, after I have proved that it was impossible to do it, the gentleman gets upon this floor and deliberately says that Republicans do not ask that, that they ask for bonds with which to meet the revenue requirements. Republicans then applaud when I show that the ranking minority member of the Ways and Means Committee [Mr. FORDNEY] flatly misrepresented the position which he and his colleagues on the committee took less than 24 hours ago. I would have applauded that myself. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I hold in my hands the minority report, filed yesterday morning, signed by J. W. FORDNEY, A. P. GARDNER, J. H. MOORE, W. R. GREEN, CHARLES H. SLOAN, NICHOLAS LONGWORTH, and G. W. FARCHILD, the minority members of the Ways and Means Committee, and it demands not bonds but a return to the Payne or some protective tariff act to meet the revenue requirements. We proved in the debate yesterday after the filing of that report that it was impossible to do this by a tariff, and to-day they realize that we have knocked them from that position, and now, for the first time, we hear a demand by the opponents of this measure for bonds to meet the preparedness appropriations.

Mr. FORDNEY. If the gentleman will look at the date of the report, he will find that it was presented and printed on January 29, and not on yesterday.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mine is January blank. I never saw or received the report until yesterday morning.

Mr. FORDNEY. Get the report made by the minority members and you will find it was made and printed on January 29. Mr. KITCHIN. I have it in my hands. I said you changed your position in 24 hours, but we will make it that you changed your position in 48 hours.

Mr. FORDNEY. It does not make any difference—
Mr. KITCHIN. My point is—
Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. KITCHIN. I will yield. Go ahead.
Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman be fair? I have always been fair with you.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. Mr. FORDNEY. You You have misstated the statements and remarks from this side of the House when you make the statement that we have recommended that to take care of this extraordinary expenditure in the Army and Navy we propose to raise it from a tariff law.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is what you have put in the report. That is what you demanded last session when the last revenue bill was pending by which to raise money for preparedness

Mr. FORDNEY. Nothing of the kind. It is the direct tax that we propose to offset that you have provided for in your bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. Look at that report. Is not that your name, the first to the report? Who forged your name to that? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Nobody. [Laughter.] And nobody but you is misrepresenting what I said in the report, either.

Mr. KITCHIN. Will you please, without omitting anything, read that yourself to the House?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will reply to you in my own time.

Mr. KITCHIN. Now, let me read exactly what you yourself said in that report which was filed exactly what you yourself.

said in that report, which was filed, as you say, on January 29, and show to the House how completely it repudiates and contradicts your position and declarations to-day.

Mr. FORDNEY. Read it all, in order to be fair.

Mr. KITCHIN. Here is the way the gentleman and his minority colleagues say we should get this money. Remember every dollar of it is for preparedness:

A return to the sound fiscal system of four years ago, under which our national debt was gradually and substantially being reduced. Prudent national enterprises were being met and their expense paid. A safe and substantial surplus was maintained in the Treasury, and a reasonable protection to American industries maintained, which contributed largely toward full and constant employment at good wages to our labor, and gave a fair opportunity to American capital.

They demand a return to the fiscal system of four years ago. What was that? The Payne-Aldrich Act. Let me read further from this remarkable minority report and settle this little dispute between the gentleman and myself. On the very first page which he himself wrote they urge a return to the policy of economy and the immediate adoption of an adequate tariff law not only to provide a large amount of additional revenue but to afford protection to American industries.

There is not a suggestion or word about bonds from beginning to the end of the gentleman's report. Forty-eight hours ago you were going to meet the appropriations by a protective tariff, but now you are going to finance them by an issue of bonds. They have been telling the people that the only way to keep Japan from landing on the western coast, and France and Russia and Germany and Great Britain from landing on the eastern coast, after the European war is over and from conquering us and capturing you and me and our wives and children is to tremendously increase the military appropriations. You Republicans are scared, and you have been scaring the country, and yet you have not the manhood and the courage to help finance your own fright [applause on the Democratic side] but are so unmanly and so selfish that you wish to put that burden off on your children and grandchildren by a bond issue and make them pay the bonds. [Applause on the Democratic I would rather be branded a legislative idiot and stand for the impossible thing of raising the needed revenue by a protective tariff, for which up until to-day you stood, than to stand here, a legislative coward, insisting upon putting burdens on the shoulders of my children, for my benefit and my protection, which I am unwilling to put on my own shoulders. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Be it remembered that these preparedness appropriations which Republicans now propose to finance by issue of bonds and force our children to pay are not war-time but peace-time ap-They will recur each year as other necessary propriations. expenses of the Government will, and if we continue to follow the war traffickers and jingoes, will increase each year. as their advocates claim, are our guarantors of peace. They are intended to frighten other nations off.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think the gentleman from Michigan trenched on my time for some minutes. I do not know whether that is the way you can do it or not.

Mr. MANN. You can read the first paragraph of the bill and then get unanimous consent for 10 minutes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Well, let the first paragraph be read by the

Mr. KITCHIN. I move to strike out the last word. Mr. MANN. The Clerk did not read all of the first paragraph.

Mr. KITCHIN. Let the Clerk go ahead.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the first section.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE I .- SPECIAL PREPAREDNESS FUND.

TITLE I.—SPECIAL PREPAREDNESS FUND.

Section 1. That the receipts from the tax imposed by Title II and one-third of the receipts from the tax imposed by Title III of this act shall constitute a separate fund in the Treasury to be used only for the expenditures incurred under the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes," approved August 29, 1916; the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes," approved August 29, 1916; and the act entitled "An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armanent thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes," approved July 6, 1916, or any other act or acts subsequent thereto making appropriations for Army, Navy, or fortification purposes. In addition to such receipts from the taxes imposed under Titles II and III of this act, there shall be credited annually, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, to such separate fund, the sum of $175,000,000, such sum being the estimated additional revenue to be derived under the act entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," approved September 8, 1916, in excess of the revenue to be derived under then existing laws: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may use such fund for other purposes, but such fund shall be relimbursed for any portion thereof so used.

Mr. KITCHIN, Mr. Chairman, I stated a moment ago that policy of the Republican Party, the Democratic Party, or any other party that has ever written a tariff. If you could com-bine the policies of all parties on the tariff you could not get more than $400,000,000 of revenue from it, while, on account of the enormous increases, the appropriations for preparedness alone at this session will be $777,000,000. I have shown you that preparedness of itself will cost annually $114,000,000 more than the total amount of revenue that was ever collected in any one year from all sources of taxation, including the Payne Tariff Act, under Republican administration, or any administration, up to 1915. If we add to that the $160,000,000 to be appropriated for pensions, we have a total annual appropriation for preparedness and pensions alone of $937,000,000, which is $274,-000,000 more than the total amount of taxes collected from all sources in 1913, the biggest collection year of the Payne Act, and the Republican administration. In addition to the pension and preparedness appropriations, about $450,000,000 are required for other functions of the Government. Let me again put this further fact in the RECORD, a fact that I emphasized day before yesterday: If in each of the four years under the Taft administration and the Payne Tariff Act and all other then existing revenue laws Congress had appropriated as much for military preparedness as Congress, according to the esti-mates and demands of the administration, will appropriate this session, and the Republicans will vote almost to a man for them, or as Congress appropriated last session, for which the Republicans voted, Taft would have turned over to Wilson the very day he was inaugurated a bankrupted Treasury, with a deficit of $2,114,000,000! [Applause on the Democratic side.] And yet the Republicans are trying to fool the country into the belief that they could finance preparedness by a protective tariff!

Our opponents argue with us, and when we are not convinced they threaten us, and in their threats they discredit the humanity, the integrity, and the patriotism of the honest manufacturer and business man of this country. In a half dozen speeches made yesterday by Republicans in this debate we are given notice that if we do put this tax upon the profit makers, if we do put this tax upon the manufacturers, who are making more profits than ever before in the history of American industry, these manufacturers and business men will not pay a cent of it, but that they will deliberately shift it to their labor. How can they shift it to their labor? Either by increasing the hours of labor, by reducing the wages of labor, or by increasing the price of the necessities of life which labor must have in order to live. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The Republicans, in the name of the business men and manufacturers, make the bold challenge that if we dare to touch even a penny of the immense pile of wealth and profits which in the last four years of the Democratic administration the business men and manufacturers have piled up they will make labor pay every dollar of it back to them. The Republicans have them saying to their labor, "We know that the cost of living to you and your wife and children is higher than ever before; we know that the dollar your daily toil earns will buy less than ever before; we know that your increase of wages has not halfway kept pace with the increased cost of living; we know that you never clam-ored a moment for these increased appropriations for preparedness; we know that we, your employers, did clamor, dld demand the enormous appropriations. We notify you and we warn the Democrats that, while from your loyal toil and sweat we have piled up our billions of wealth and profits, if the Democrats pass this bill our Government shall not take one penny from that pile, but we propose to shift to you the payment of every cent of the tax proposed to finance the country's defense

Were I a Republican I would rather abandon every policy of my party, even protection, than to put my party in the position of bringing such an indictment of cruelty and inhumanity against the honest, patriotic business man and manufacturer of our country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Gentlemen, I want to say to the business men and manufacturers of this country that I, the Democratic chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, have more confidence in your patriotism, in your humanity, in your integrity, in your sense of justice than have these Republican gentlemen who so indict you. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I want to say to you that I believe a majority of the business men and manufacturers in this country who demand these increased appropriations are honest enough, patriotic enough, have a sense of fairness and equity enough to willingly pay this small tithe of their immense profits. In the name of the humanity and the integ-Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I stated a moment ago that it was absolutely impossible to raise this revenue by any kind of a tariff that may be written in accordance with either the against them. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, gentlemen, the plain question before the House is, How shall we procure the required amount to meet the big increase of preparedness?

Two propositions are presented. One is the Democratic proposition—a tax upon excess or surplus profits. The other is the Republican proposition—restore the protective tariff. the proof is conclusive that such a tariff would not produce the required amount; but let us assume that it will. sition the Republicans insist that the tax should be levied on consumption, on the necessities of life; that it should be levied on tea and coffe and flour and meat, on hosiery and underwear, on blankets and clothing, on hats and shoes-on everything that people must eat, drink, and wear to sustain life. cost of living is higher than ever before, though the advance in wages has not halfway kept pace with the advance in the cost of living, though the purchasing power of the dollar, and especially the dollar of the wage earner and the widow and the orphan is less to-day than ever before, they insist by their proposition that the cost of living should be made higher, that the purchasing power of the dollar should be reduced still lower. They insist that, though the wealth accumulators of the counthe big business men and manufacturers-demanded and forced these huge appropriations they shall be exempt from taxation to defray them.

They insist that—though the big business men and manufacturers are making the most enormous profits in the history of industry-the whole burden of this tax shall be shifted from them to the people, and especially to the wage earner, and that by the inevitable operation of their proposed protective tariff these same manufacturers shall be enabled to increase, out of the necessities of the people, their already swollen profits. In other words, they insist that those most able to pay shall be exempt from any tax and that those least able shall be made to pay it; that from those who have not it shall be taken, and to them who have it shall be given. That, sirs, is the Republican

In these days of the high cost of living we Democrats felt that would be an act of inhumanity to force by law that cost still higher by putting the required tax upon the necessities of lifeupon what the people must eat, drink, and wear. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

We knew that such a tax would fall most heavily on the mechanics, the wage earners, the widows, and orphans.

According to the most available statistics, the clear net profits of partnerships and corporations taxable under this measure exceed annually $5,500,000,000.

Of these immense profits over $3,500,000,000 are exempt from the tax by the deduction or exemption provisions of the bill. The tax only attaches to the $3,000,000,000 in excess of these

Rather than force those who make no profits, who accumulate no wealth, who have no excess over the bare means of existence to pay for these big appropriations by a tax upon their necessities of life we concluded that the most just, the most humane, and the least burdensome way was to take from these billions of excess profits a small part to help prepare our country to defend itself against foreign invasion, to help prepare our country to protect, in the hour of danger, the very wealth that produces these billions of profits and which Republicans insist should be exempt from all taxation. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That, sirs, is the Democratic proposition, upon which we appeal to the House and the country for judgment.

In preparing and advocating this bill I will tell you what was in my thought and how I personally felt. I knew that not one officer in a hundred of a corporation, not one member in a hundred of a partnership that will pay one penny under this bill will ever enlist, in time of war, as a private soldier to defend his country. I knew, too, that when war came it was the men who accumulate no wealth, who make no excess profits that at the bugle's first sound would go to the front. These are the men who are going to be called upon in the dangerous hour of the country's destiny to sacrifice, not income, not profits, but blood, and limbs, and lives. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

And I said to myself that as long as I was a Member of this House, these men, so far as I could prevent, should never be taxed one penny to prepare this country for war, but I would try by law to make it the duty of wealth to furnish in times of peace the instruments with which in time of war the brave boys from field and factory and mine and counter, who have no wealth, who make no profits, will be called upon to defend not only their country, but that very wealth. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

If it be the right thing for these patriotic men who are unable to make profits, who are unable to accumulate wealth, to go out at the trumpet's call and pay in time of war with their blood and their limbs and their lives their country's demands, it is only right that the men who accumulate large wealth, who make large profits, and who in the time of danger will never face the enemy, shall pay, in time of peace, out of their incomes and profits for the ships and guns with which these brave, loyal defenders of their country must fight. [Applause on the Democratic side.1

Let me say to my Democratic colleagues who, like myself, oppose the large and extravagant increases in appropriations for military preparedness that we can not, as some claim, reduce or prevent further increases in such appropriations by the defeat of this bill. I know that these enormous appropriations are going to come in spite of my and your protest, in spite of my and your efforts. You and I can not prevent them. Now, it is up to us. Do you want to defeat this bill and force an extra session, and encourage the Republicans to believe or hope that in the next Congress they can get enough protective-tariff Democrats to join with them and foist again a high protective tariff upon the country? Fellow Democrats, can you afford to help them do it? I, like many of you, am against this big, unparalleled program for preparedness. They can not build the ships authorized in 10 years, and before they build the last ones the first will be obsolete. I am against it, but I can not prevent it. But if I can not prevent it, I do want to have some say as to how the taxes are to be levied with which to pay for that program. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I know that if this bill is defeated it will mean an extra session. I know that tariff-reform Democrats, like most of you, will have little or no say-so in the writing of a revenue bill at an extra session, because enough Democrats can be secured then to join with the solid vote of the Republicans to put upon the statute books the highest and most oppressive tariff ever written. You can not afford to do it. We, you, are to decide which of the two propositions you will stand for—the Republican proposition to tax consumption, the necessities of life, or the Demo-cratic proposition to tax the surplus profits of wealth. Who proposes to tax consumption? A solid Republican Party in this House. They have drawn this aisle with a chalk line, and the party lash never cracked so loudly and effectively as during the last two days to drive every Republican into line to vote against this bill in the hope that a protective tariff may come. Ah, gentlemen, if the Republicans can be so loyal to their policies and principles, in God's name why can not the Democrats be as loyal to theirs? [Applause on the Democratic side.] The proposition which they present has back of it the solidarity of the Republican Party in this House and this country. It has back of it every man who opposed the Underwood bill; it has back of it everyone who opposed the enactment of the income tax; it has back of it every man who opposed the inheritance tax; it has back of it every man who opposed the revenue measure of last year, so just and so wise that 40 Republicans-for the first time in the history of revenue legislation-broke ranks and voted for it. The same influences that have fought the Demo-cratic Party in every step it has taken in its long march for revenue reform are fighting this bill; and, fellow Democrats, you can not afford to line up and touch elbows with the solid Republican phalanx that in the defeat of this bill see an opportunity to restore their revenue policies to the statute books. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Let me say to you that for weeks, for months, night after night and day after day, the 14 Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee looked down every possible avenue for revenue. They considered every subject, every method of taxation suggested inside and outside the Capitol. moned to the task before them all their industry, all their wits, all their wisdom, and finally concluded unanimously that this bill was the wisest, the most equitable, and the least burdensome of all methods of taxation suggested.

While I have reminded you of the opposition to this bill, I want to say that every Member in this House who is a friend of revenue reform, a friend of the income tax, a friend of just taxation, should be a friend of this bill and should vote to put the tax on those the best able to bear it and not upon those the least able to bear it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I want to tell you that the widows and orphans, whose income from their money loaned is not over half as large as the 8 per cent exemptions, are friends of this bill; every man that labors, every mechanic, every workman on the farm, in the shop, in the factory, in the mine, or elsewhere who gets his living by daily toil and does not want his dollar reduced in its purchasing power over the necessities of life is a friend of this bill. The Democratic Members on the Ways and Means Committee are united behind the bill. The membership of the Democratic caucus is for the bill, and the great Democratic administration, the President, the Secretary of the Treasury, heartily indorse this bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

My Democratic friends, reconsider, take the second thought, do not do the rash thing and go against the people, the wage earners, the orphans, the widows, the whole membership of the Ways and Means Committee, the Democratic House, the Democratic administration, and join hands with our Republican friends and thus encourage them in the hope by the defeat of this measure that they can hereafter destroy the policies you have been fighting for all your lives. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I was in hopes-I know now by this debate it can not be that every man in the House, Republican and Democrat, in his vote on this important measure could forget his political partisanship and let the patriotic instincts of the loyal American heart inside of this Capitol predominate over the demand of commercial avarice outside of this Capitol. [Prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I might remind the Chair that although the clock at the Chair's desk may have stopped the clock over the Chair's head is still running.

The CHAIRMAN. With the permission of the gentleman the Chair would like to make a statement. It was apparent to the Chair that the House desired that the gentleman from North Carolina might be able to complete his remarks. waived an hour and a half due his side in general debate, and while the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union can not increase the time for general debate during the reading of the bill he was given 10 minutes, and it seemed to the Chair that it would expedite matters and be in accord with the plain desire of the committee if he was not interrupted exactly upon the expiration of 10 minutes and so the Chair somewhat extended the time.

Mr. MANN. It is not the duty of the Chair to extend the time on his own motion, though I did not call attention to it for that purpose, but I do not desire the Chair to let me run on ad libitum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope he will not.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I speak with considerable difficulty owing to a slight physical ailment, and shall address the House for only a very few minutes. Permit me to suggest to the Democratic side of the House in response to a statement made by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Kitchin] that the party whip or the party lash has not been used upon the Republican side of the House in connection with this bill. [Applause on the Republican side.] The party lash on the Republican side of the House is seldom effective, whether an effort be made to use it or not. We appeal to the intelligence of Members, we do not depend upon orders from the White House for our way of thinking. [Applause on the Republican side.] We do not depend upon the gentleman from North Carolina to crack the whip as he has just been endeavoring to crack it, with a sad appeal to his side of the House. We endeavor to be patriotic, we endeavor to do the thing which we believe is for the best interest of our country and our people, and we have had no occasion this time even to make any special appeal of any kind, because some of the provisions in the bill pending before us are so bad that nobody would be for them except under the stress of partisan administrative appeal, and that does not appeal [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, we could raise a large portion of the additional money needed in this time of emergency by additional revenue legislation. We are met with an emergency. We appreciate the fact that there is an emergency in the country that is the cause of the preparedness legislation. We foresaw it ahead of you gentlemen on the other side of the aisle. You are merely catching up with us. Everyone in the country recognizes the fact that there is some emergency at the present time in the world and in this country. A majority of the people of the country have believed in putting the country in condition for defense and for protection of its rights. This requires additional legislation. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] said he did not believe in the issuance of bonds for the purpose, because he was not willing to pass on to his children the payment for preparation now in the present emer-I have been taught to believe by experience and observation in life that the greatest value that comes to a man or a concern, and it applies also to a country by acquiring good credit, is the power to borrow money in a time of emergency to tide him over. The gentleman from North Carolina says that fortifications are temporary, not permanent; that the construction of battleships to-day is purely temporary. Of course, they are not permament, though they last over a series of years. He is opposed to the issuance of bonds that we might properly issue to prepare for the present emergency, and which we could The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Kitchin] speaks of take care of during a series of years by additional revenue raised from a proper protective tariff. [Applause on the Republican side.] But, Mr. Chairman, think of the irony of the gentleman from North Carolina when he states that he is opposed to the issuance of bonds to construct permanent fortifications, to provide permanent improvements in the Navy, to provide battleships which last for a series of years, and then says he is in favor of the issuance of bonds that our children and grandchildren must pay for the benefit they will receive from our fiasco in Mexico! [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.] He proposes an issue of bonds to the extent of $162,000,000 to pay past expenses for what? Our little trouble on the border of Mexico. What benefit will your children get from that? He proposes that your children shall pay for that benefit by the issuance of bonds. "Consistency, thou art a jewel"-never known on the Democratic side of the House. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. First, in reply to the remarks made by the gentleman from North Carolina

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman begins. can we not have some understanding that we shall vote on this paragraph after the gentleman is through?

Mr. FORDNEY. Personally I do not want more than 5 or 10

Mr. BUTLER. How long would the gentleman like? I have listened to the gentleman from North Carolina for 25 minutes under an extension of 10 minutes, Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman from North Carolina was very fair about the time on yesterday.

Mr. KITCHIN, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania and to others that it was understood by the gentleman from Michigan that I should have a little longer time to-day, because yesterday the other side was ahead by two

Mr. BUTLER. I am not objecting to it.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am willing that the gentleman from Michigan shall have all the time he wants, but I do desire to begin the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule, as was agreed on yesterday, just as soon as the general debate was over.

I am willing that the gentleman shall have what time he desires.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, permit me to make a statement to this side of the House. There was a suggestion made that general debate should be limited and closed earlier than it was. Of course, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], if he had the votes, and probably he had them, had the power to close debate. General debate ran along through yesterday, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] and myself agreed to expedite the consideration of the bill as far as we could reasonably, without cutting off the rights of Members on this side of the House to offer amendments and to discuss the bill. We have no desire to delay, and only desire to protect our rights. I have never known gentlemen upon this side of the House to abuse that privilege.

Mr. KITCHIN. I suggest to the gentleman from Michigan that he proceed and take whatever time he desires, and after that let both sides try and hurry the matter along under the five-minute rule without using any more time than is necessary.

Mr. FORDNEY. I shall not take more than 10 minutes. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman from Michigan proceeding for 10 minutes? [After a pause,] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from North Carolina have any one on his side to reply to the gentleman from Michigan? Mr. KITCHIN. No.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Because if he has I would like to have five minutes

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, no; we will go right into the five-minute

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is going to close after this on this paragraph?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.
Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the members of the House to the fact that I do not believe the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] or any Member on the Democratic side of the House can point to anything in any revenue legislation that has been passed by the Democratic Party in the last four years that gives any encouragement to any industry in the United States, or to American labor.

First. They passed the Underwood tariff law reducing the duties on imports, which discouraged both capital and labor in the United States and encouraged both capital and labor abroad.

the extravagance of the Republican Party and the great economy of the Democratic Party. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to the situation to-day. There has been no increase in the Army or the Navy, notwithstanding the fact that such laws have been put upon the statute books by our Democratic friends, authorizing an increase both in the Army and the Navy. There has been no substantial increase in either, yet when the Republican Party went out of power March 4, 1913, let me repeat, that over and above all the liabilities of this Government they left in the Treasury $130,000,000 for the Democrats to use in their coming extravagance.

In addition to that the Democrats sold and received $12,535,000 from the proceeds of the sale of two battleships to Greece, which money went into the general fund on the 10th day of July, 1914. In addition to that there has been returned to the Treasury of the United States, under the provisions of your revenue laws enacted last year, stamps to the extent of from three to five million dollars which have not been redeemed and not any acknowledgement of a remittance has been given since November last by the Treasury Department. Again, there is $5,000,000 of Treasury certificates outstanding, a liability of the Government. $130,000,000 to those items and you have a deficit of $187,000,000 in four years. That is the situation of the Treasury to-day. addition to that, as was pointed out yesterday by myself, if we had had the Payne-Aldrich rates of duty in effect since the operation of the Underwood tariff law you would have collected, in round numbers, $515,000,000 more from customs duties than you have collected [applause on the Republican side], making a total deficit in those items mentioned to-day of $702,535,000 since you came into power. You have not met any extraordinary expenditure of Government. What have you done with this surplus? If you had permitted to remain upon the statute books the Republican wise revenue laws you would have no occasion for this law which my good friend from North Carolina has so eloquently appealed to the Members on that side of the House to [Applause on the Republican side.] If that is not a party whip, what is a party whip? There has not been a suggestion made by any man to my knowledge on this side of the House that a single man on the Republican side of the House should be influenced to vote for or against this measure. [Applause on the Republican side.] I believe, I firmly hope, that there is not a Republican or a Progressive on this side of the aisle who will stultify himself by voting for this damnable meas-[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. FORDNEY. I yield to the gentleman. Mr. KELLEY. I would like to inquire of my colleague how much revenue could be raised by an increase of 10 per cent on the Underwood rates?

Mr. FORDNEY. If the gentleman means a sliding scale of 10 per cent on all articles on the free and protected list as provided for in the Underwood law, based on imports of last year, we would have collected $248,000,000 more than has been col-

Mr. HELVERING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I do.

Mr. HELVERING. Is the gentleman in favor of that propo-

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, no; I will show to the gentleman what I am in favor of before we finish this bill, good sound Republican legislation [applause on the Republican side] which you have [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. FORDNEY. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman is on the Ways and Means Committee, is he not? Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Was this bill ever considered by your committee before being reported?

Mr. FORDNEY. The Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee were never called together until the bill had been introduced and a report made and placed in their hands, two days before, in which this Democratic report stated, "Your committee reports back to the House this bill without amend-[Applause on the Republican side.] When the chairman presented that bill for consideration in full committee I made the statement that it was nonsense to spend any time considering it, owing to the statement in their report made two days beforehand, and a vote was immediately taken, and it was a strictly party vote, all Republicans voting against a favorable report on the bill. We are complaining, gentlemen, not of the increase in the Army and the Navy. We do not refuse to join you in some equitable method of raising revenue to meet the additional enormous expenses, as we have stated on the floor of the House; and I repeat, as far as I am personally concerned, we are ready to join and vote for a bond issue for these extraordinary increases in our Navy and for the money spent on the Panama Canal that will be enjoyed by our children and our great grandchildren, and it is only fair that that great and enormous expense should be placed on some future generations, in view of the fact that your appropriations for general expense of this Government is greater by hundreds of millions of dollars than the appropriations of any previous Congress in the history of the Republic. [Applause on the Republican side.] Your nitrate plant, your armor-plate plant, your ship-purchase bill, and a whole lot of other absolutely unnecessary expenditures at this time are absolutely nonsensical when you are busted financially. [Applause on the Republican side.] That is what we are complaining about.

Mr. HELVERING. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. FORDNEY. I will.

Mr. HELVERING. The gentleman made a statement a few moments ago that not a single bill had been passed by a Democratic Congress which would prove a help to business in any

Mr. FORDNEY. A revenue bill; no revenue bill.

Mr. HELVERING. Let me ask the gentleman-

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. HELVERING. Did the gentleman see the report of the commission or league for foreign trade which met in Pitts-burgh on last Saturday which indorsed the shipping bill which the gentleman just mentioned?

Mr. FORDNEY. Is the shipping bill a revenue bill?

Mr. HELVERING. The gentleman said legislation— Mr. FORDNEY. I am talking about revenue bills and said revenue bills, and I say if I had a 10-year-old boy who was fool enough to propose to establish a merchant marine under existing conditions as a business proposition, I would put him over my knee and paddle better sense into his head. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HELVERING. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; I will yield.
Mr. HELVERING. And at the time the shipping bill was being considered the gentleman stated that he would rather put upon the people of this country a subsidy.

Mr. FORDNEY. I never said anything of that kind in your presence or in any other man's presence.

Mr. HELVERING. I want to be fair to the gentleman.

Mr. FORDNEY. I never voted for a subsidy bill in this House; never. I would favor a subsidy if all conditions were favorable. I have opposed it on the lines on which it was presented. But let me say to you, my friend, my objection to the shipping bill, as I point out now, and I will not take too much time of the House, is that abnormal conditions all over this world prevail, and neither an American citizen, the Government of the United States, nor any man on earth can buy a ship made in this or in any other country at less than four times its normal value at this time. As I pointed out the other day, I knew of two ships that were built 10 years ago, one of them, and the other 12 years ago, at a cost of less than $250,000 each. One of them has been recently sold for $1,000,000 cash and the other for $1,300,000 cash.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORDNEY. I pointed again that the proprietors of the great shipyards of this country came before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries and stated that 90 per cent of the cost of construction of a ship is labor, and that our labor is from two to ten times higher than the skilled labor in the shipyards of any other country in the world, and that alone is a bar to the building in this country of ships to go into foreign trade.

In addition to that extra cost, our marine laws, as I have pointed out, provide that all officers must be American citizens, and although it is a fact that our shipowners can go into other countries of the world and employ the balance of their labor, our labor laws and regulations make it impossible to do that, for the reason that the officers on board a ship under our flag will not work with a foreigner until he receives the American scale of wages.

And again, there is not an important country in the world, except the United States, that does not pay a subsidy to her ships. And with that difference in the cost of construction, and the great additional cost of labor in operating, and the subsidy received by the competitor, it is impossible for an American citizen or the United States Government to engage in foreign shipping to-day in a successful manner. That is my objection. [Applause.]

And I say that your $50,000,000 appropriated to purchase ships at this time, when the whole world knows the conditions are abnormal in cost of living, in cost of production, and in every cost all over the world, is nonsense. These plants that you have proposed you could well defer until a time when you could raise revenue.

We object to your direct tax, gentlemen. That is the difference between the Republican Party and the Democratic method of raising revenue to meet the normal or the ordinary running expenses of the Government. We propose a protective tariff law that will build up our institutions in this country and furnish employment to American labor, in order that that American labor and our American citizens will have more purchasing power to buy the agricultural and manufactured products produced in this country, instead of encouraging both capital and labor in foreign lands. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE II .- EXCESS-PROFITS TAX.

SEC. 200. That when used in this title—
The term "corporation" includes joint-stock companies or associations, and insurance companies;
The term "United States" means only the States, the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, and the District of Columbia; and
The term "taxable year" means the 12 months ending December 31, except in the case of a corporation or partnership allowed to fix its own fiscal year, in which case it means such fiscal year. The first taxable year shall be the year ending December 31, 1917.

Mr. MOODE of Ponysylvania, Mr. Cheirmenn I move to strike

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

It was stated recently by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] that Republicans are as much responsible for this legislation as are the Democrats; that they are responsible for the preparedness agitation equally with our friends upon the other side. He has overlooked a number of very material facts, to which I desire to call the attention of the committee.

Our President was the original peace President, so far as the present agitation for preparedness is concerned. It will be recalled that the fires had to be burned under the President of the United States before he became an advocate of preparedness. One or two of his earlier messages in this House declared for peace, and I am inclined to think that those addresses converted a number of Democrats to the theory of peace, to a firm and abiding faith in the peace policy. But a change came over the dreams, even of the President of the United States, and on December 7, 1915, he came into this House and, addressing the Members of the Senate and House, said in support of a plan for the armanent of the United States and for the increase in the Navy and military forces:

The obvious moral of the figures is that it is a plain counsel of prudence to continue all of the present taxes—

That is to say, the direct taxes that were levied because the customs taxes had failed, owing to the Democratic tariff lawor their equivalents, and confine ourselves to the problem of providing one hundred and twelve millions of new revenue rather than two hundred and ninety-seven millions.

The President was confronting a condition that was not anticinated when the customs revenues were cut down. If was a condition for which Republicans were certainly not alone responsible. The country had been talking about preparedness when the President was talking peace. The President drifted into the preparedness business in response to a sentiment that had been gradually arising in the country. When at last the President turned to preparedness the Government was financially embarrassed, and so the President, finding himself unable to proceed with his program, put the usual question:

How shall we obtain the new revenue?

It was the usual Democratic question.

We are frequently reminded-

Said the President-

that there are many millions of bonds which the Treasury is authorized under existing law to sell to reimburse the sums paid out of current revenues for the construction of the Panama Canal, and it is true that bonds to the amount of approximately $222,000,000 are now available for that purpose. Prior to 1913 $134,631,980 of these bonds had actually been sold to recoup the expenditures at the Isthmus, and now constitute a considerable item of the public debt.

The President knew he had authority to issue bonds to meet the then existing indebtedness, but the President did not want to issue bonds, because he said:

But I, for one, do not believe that the people of this country approve of postponing the payment of their bills. Borrowing money is short-sighted finance. It can be justified only when permanent things are to be accomplished which many generations will certainly benefit by and which it seems hardly fair that a single generation should pay for. The objects we are now proposing to spend money for can not be so classified, except in the sense that everything wisely done may be said to be done in the interest of posterity as well as in our own. It seems to me a clear dictate of prudent statesmanship and frank finance that in what we are now, I hope, about to undertake we should pay as we go. The people of the country are entitled to know just what burdens of taxation they are to carry, and to know from the outset, now. The new bills should be paid by internal taxation.

I repeat, the President did not want to issue bonds: he told the Congress how his new internal revenue was to be raised. It was to be raised by taxing gasoline, by taxing the horsepower of automobiles, by taxing internal-explosion engines, and by taxing bank checks.

The Democratic Party, and particularly the present floor leader of the party, did not agree with the President as to the new forms of taxation which the President suggested. Democratic leader, however, did then agree with the President, as he does agree with the President now, that no bonds should be issued—but bonds are to be issued. The time has come when, in the ordinary course of events and under the conditions of delinquency that prevail, the President of the United States and the Democratic leader both are obliged to come to this House and to the country and to succumb to the issuing of bonds. It is the last blow, but they have to come to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to continue for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was on objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Who was it that brought about this new condition in the Congress of the United States? What part did the President play in it? The President himself started on a preparedness journey over this country in January of last year, just one year ago. He toured the country, not in the interest of peace, which he had previously advocated in this House, but he toured it in the interest of preparedness. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] yesterday indicated that we on this side of the House were responsible for this.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can not in three minutes. The President started this agitation in New York on January. He imbibed the warlike spirit there. Then, next he spoke in Pittsburgh, where he found the country in great danger. At Cleveland the sparks of the great conflagration were beginning to fly all around. Then he went on to Detroit and to Chicago and Des Moines and Kansas City and St. Louis, and by the time he got back to Washington he was thoroughly convinced that the whole country was on the verge of a volcano and that we must prepare for war.

My friend from Texas Mr. Dies over there did not agree with him then. I do not know whether he agrees with him now or not, because the gentleman from Texas was a consistent advocate of peace. But the President of the United States drove the people of the country into the thought that we must have a larger Army and a larger Navy in the United States. Still the President did not want to issue bonds. He did not want to go down in history alongside of the only two Presidents who ever did issue bonds to meet the current expenses of the Government. But this bill as presented by the able gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] does at last put the President in the historic group of bond-issuing Presidents. He stands now with James Buchanan, the first Democrat who was obliged to issue bonds to meet the current expenses of the Government, and with Grover Cleveland, the second President who was obliged to issue bonds for the same purpose. So, gentlemen, we have the "trinity of Buchanan, Cleveland, and Wilson," the three Democratic presidential proofs of the incompetency of the Democratic Party to run this Government in times of peace without issuing bonds to pay the current expenses. [Applause on the Republican side.]

vania has again expired.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, if I vote for this bill, as I may do, it will not be because I am for the bill, because it is as bitter a pill, if I swallow it-and I never know when my stomach is going to rebel against a bitter pill—it will be the bitterest pill I have ever swallowed in this House. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.] Not that I have any sympathy with your objections to it over there. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] My objection to this bill is because it proposes to raise money to increase the expenditures for the Army and the Navy and fortifications, which I think are large enough already.

When the fortification bill came on I did not find any Republicans to speak of that were against it. You were pushing us into that expenditure. The debate on this bill has conclusively shown to me that you want to appropriate the money, that you are going to vote for the Army increases and for the Navy increases. You are not in sympathy with my position, which is that the money is to be worse than wasted. You give me no encouragement in my effort to prevent this great peaceful Republic from being converted into a military Government. You are pushing preparedness advocates on this side of the Chamber into every sort of expenditure.

Your objection to the bill is that you do not want the money to be taken from the pockets of the wealthy. You want it to be taken by a consumption tax. You do not want to tax a man in proportion to the wealth that he owns in this world, but in proportion to the shoes and clothes and raiment and food that he wears and eats.

If I vote for this bill, it will be to prevent you from inflicting upon this Government a tax not according to the wealth of the people, but according to their wants. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If you can show me the slightest prospect of holding the Army and the Navy bills down to the appropriations of last year, there is not any force in this world to make me vote for this bill to raise revenue to increase those appropriations. But you have notified me and you have notified the country that you intend to vote for the Army and Navy increase, and between you and me there can be nothing in common, because you want to raise the money by means of a protective tariff and I am opposed to that way of raising the revenues to run this Government. I would rather take the money to be raised by this bill and carry it out into the ocean and dump it there than to spend it to convert this peaceful Republic into a military government. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But seeing that you are determined to increase the appropriations, seeing that nothing will satisfy your souls but to constantly increase these appropriations for the Army and the Navy, you leave me no choice except to help select the method of the taxation itself. And, you know, I get a sort of grim, unstatesmanlike satisfaction out of this thing that I am compelled to swallow-this thing that stinks to heaven [laughter]-and that is in the reflection that this unjust tax, this revenue bill to raise the money for a needless waste of the substance of the people, comes very largely from those who have howled this country into this hysteria about preparedness.

I had the honor to make a little speech over here in New York at the beginning of this row, and I told them then they would pay the bill, and I told them that I knew of no better way to stop this needless waste of public treasure for the building of great armaments and the building up of a great standing army in this country than by taxing those people who have the influence over, who have the control of, the public press of the country, those who are the high and mighty ones, than by making them go down and get their money. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. DIES. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to proceed for five minutes. I have not occupied any time in the gen-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

I believe in this Republic. I believe in it as a student of history, and I have small patience with those who proclaim that it is now following out the genius of the founders of this Government. This year we will spend in preparedness, so called, more money than any civilized nation ever spent in time of peace on an army and navy and fortifications in two years. We need not make wry faces at Germany. And I want to tell this House something else. From $95,000,000 that you spent for the Army two or three years ago you now propose to spend approximately $400,000,000, and you are not getting an army. You are not going to get an army, my friends. No nation in this world ever in time of peace could have a large standing army without compulsory military service. France, after the war of 1870 with her neighbor, Germany, could not get Frenchmen to go into the army except under compulsion. Germany, with all the love of her population for the fatherland, could not get a large standing army without compulsory military service. No nation upon this earth that ever did exist was able to maintain a large standing army in time of peace without putting the shackles on the young men of the country and driving them into military service under a compulsory system. You talk about raising the money to have a standing army in this country. What have you got to-day? Mr. I You could not get the 20,000 men that you appropriated for in is read, the last Congress. You can not get them. You can not get them to go into the standing Army of this country. not got it to-day, and you can take all the wealth of this country that you can wring from the blood of the commerce of this country, first through one system of taxation and then through another; you may tax incomes, you may tax inheritances, you may tax profits, you may go to the farm, you may exhaust every source of revenue in this country by taxing them all, and you can never have a standing army until you have compulsory military service. And the reason why I wish to throw myself across the path of this thing is because I see it coming. The President says his mind on this question is to let. Every general, every admiral, every military expert in the country will tell you that compulsory military service is coming. They are only fertilizing the field by heavy taxation to-day. To-morrow they will be here to test you on the question of passing a compulsory military service bill in this Congress. I will join a Republican against it, as I would join the Republican Party now against this bill if they did not propose to give us a worse one to accomplish the same purpose. If the Republican Party stood here to-day to say that these needless ex-penses should stop, and if they asked me to join with them in that purpose, I would do so at all hazard; but you Republicans only ask me to help you defeat one form of revenue in order that you may fasten a more onerous one in its stead upon the . country. That is the trouble with you.

As I say, it gravels me like hell to vote for this bill. not deceived into believing that the rich will pay all of this tax. We Democrats, when we opposed the tariff tax, were accustomed to say that the big corporations paid the tax at the customhouse and then put it on the consumer when he bought the boots, or the iron, or the steel, or the clothes, or the other things that he consumed. Just so it will be with this tax. When you take from the Bethlehem Steel Co., when you take from the United States Steel Corporation, when you take from the other great corporations of this country the money which will be paid in taxes under this bill, wherever they are able-and in most cases they will be able to do it—they will pass it on down to those who toil in the fields and work in the workshops of this country, just as they pass down every other tax. But with all of its iniquity it is not so bad as the one you Republicans would give us in its stead; and if I vote for it, it will not be because I love it, for I detest it. It will be not that I love Caesar less-I do not love anything involved in this situationit will not be because I despise it less, but because I despise your substitute more. [Applause and laughter.]
Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, we have had four speeches this morning not directly on the amendment, and I believe it is the tacit understanding that we shall now proceed to offer bona fide amendments, to discuss the merits of the amendments, and to vote on them.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it. Mr. LONGWORTH. Is it proposed to read this bill by sections or by titles?

Mr. MANN. By sections.

The CHAIRMAN. The understanding of the Chair is that the Clerk will read the bill by sections.

Mr. MANN. The first section and title were identical. I think it should be read by sections, although it is customary to read such bills by paragraphs.

Mr. KITCHIN. The other bills have been in sections and paragraphs, and this is in sections and titles.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then I desire to inquire at what point will a motion be in order to strike out the sections included in Title II?

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman, I think, could do that when the last section was read.

Mr. MANN. I think under the rules of the House it would require a separate motion on each section, but I ask unanimous of Title II to move to strike out all of Title II.

Mr. KITCHIN. I agree to that. That will be all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that after the reading of the sections under Title II it shall be in order to strike out all of those sections. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentelman will state it.

Mr. MEEKER. In case that question is put to a vote and Title II is not stricken out, then will it be in order to offer amendments to the sections?

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman can do that as each section

The CHAIRMAN. Amendments to the sections under Title II will be in order as each section is read.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words and insurance companies" in line 25, page 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Benner: Page 2, line 25, strike out the words "and insurance companies."

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina spoke about putting these taxes on the larger and more competitive business interests of the country. Without commenting at all about that portion of his speech, I call the attention of the House to the fact that insurance companies do not come under that head. I call the attention of the gen-tleman from Texas [Mr. Dies] who just spoke so feelingly on the matter that here is a provision which puts the tax directly and immediately upon the poor people, for of course insurance companies are the medium through which people not of the wealthier classes, as a rule, but people of the business classes the lesser business classes, the mechanics, the clerks with small incomes, make some provision for those whom he hopes will live after him. The farmer relies to a very large extent for supplementing his revenue upon the insurance policy. It is proposed by this unnecessary inclusion of insurance companies to impose these high taxes immediately upon every holder of a life-insurance policy in the United States of America, mutual, corporate, and every other form. It does not seem to me that the amendment requires any extended discussion; the point is so obvious that I hope the House will sustain the amendment and strike out these words.

I am opposed to the entire bill. It is a direct blow at the industrial life of the city and State which I represent in part. I hope that before this bill finally passes it will receive the attention both of our city and State governments. My colleague [Mr. FAIRCHILD], who represents our State on the Committee on Ways and Means, has taken the matter up with our legislature, and I hope that that body will put our State formally on record against this bill.

The field of Democratic blunder in revenue administration affords opportunity for indefinite criticism. I shall, however, under the circumstances of the present debate, confine myself to a single additional comment on this most recent handicap to American industry pending before us. The proposal of an excess profit tax of 8 per cent upon annual profits above 8 per cent might more accurately be described as a proposal to pauperize the States for the encouragement of Federal extravagance, to penalize industrial enterprise, to restrict reproductive industrial investment, lessen opportunity for employment, and raise ignorance of the conditions that conduce to national prosperity to a commanding position in national administration. Personally, I object to raising revenue for the Nation by a deliberate and unnecessary invasion of the established domain of State taxation, while ignoring those easily ascertainable, collectible, and equitable and exclusive sources of Federal impost which have historically yielded returns commensurate with our needs, without unduly burdening our citizens or trespassing upon the subjects of direct tax, where our States alone find substantial support.

The report of the State tax commission of my own State presents very clearly the difficulty which the richest Commonwealth of the Union is finding in securing sufficient revenue to meet its requirements. During the years between 1890 and 1915, while my own State has experimented in indirect taxation, there has been only five years in which it was not necessary for the State to levy direct taxes in addition to the immense revenue which its unique situation and resources enable it to obtain by indirect means. The cost of State government is growing like that of national government, but if a Commonwealth possessing the exceptional resources of the greatest commercial and industrial wealth in the Union is compelled to admit that its efforts to secure sufficient revenue from indirect taxation is a special failure, what will be the effect of this last and greatest step in the field of direct Federal taxation upon those poorer Commonwealths whose industrial life is yet in its those poorer Commonwealths whose industrial life is yet in its infancy? I admire the courage, the enterprise, and I applaud the success of the southern manufacturer, who, in the face of many discouraging circumstances, is contributing so much to the development of our southern Commonwealths under many adverse conditions. Yet I can not perceive how the nascent industry of the South, in whose development I take as great a pride of I do in that of my own great State can have to at pride as I do in that of my own great State, can hope to at once contribute to the needs of the State and survive the burden of this last Democratic handicap upon industrial progress.

Let me direct the attention of the majority to a pamphlet entitled "Assessed valuation of property and amounts and rates of levy for the years 1860 to 1912." It was compiled by a present member of the Federal Trade Commission, the Hon. William Harris, then head of the Bureau of Census. 41 you will find the tax rates of all the States for 1912. will perceive these rates range from $1.02 per $100 of assessed value in Kansas to $4.73 per $100 in New Mexico. It is generally admitted that rates have now risen approximately 25 per cent between 1912 and 1916.

It is therefore safe to assume that corporate business is presently paying to the States upon assessed value an average rate of not less than 24 per cent for State, county, and local pur-To this you now add a 2 per cent net corporate income tax, a tax of 50 cents per thousand upon the value of each corporation's stock issue above $99,000. If the industrial organization contributes in any way to what you have termed "munition" manufacture, it pays upon the profits derived from these sources 121 per cent, and to this you now add an excess profit tax of 8 per cent upon all net income above 8 per cent. Can the gentleman believe that as a business proposal the subject of impost can bear this load and yet adequately bear the burden which the State must impose?

If you tell me that State appraisal is faulty, I can answer in the light of experience that increased valuation has never decreased a tax rate, because history, especially in New York City, demonstrates that valuations are increased only for the purpose of raising revenue at a prevailing rate.

Moreover, let me call your attention to a fact which your own experience must verify. Individuals largely escape personal taxes. Corporations can not. State legislatures pursue corporations until they secure adequate personal-tax returns. States are therefore getting from corporate property substantially all it is within their power to get. In New York, Ohio, California, and Massachusetts they are taxing corporate franchises as well as their real and personal property. Even now the State of California is so impressed with the danger of the present conflict between State and Federal taxes that the State tax commission has recommended a convention of all the States to urge upon this Congress a definite plan of separating State and Federal fields of taxation.

For years the gentlemen of the majority have proudly ac-claimed themselves the peculiar guardians of the States' rights. To-day they are coming dangerously near being State pick-pockets. The great field of taxation upon exports is forever closed to the States. Are you forever closing it to the Nation? It was exclusively yielded to you not only to protect each State against the imposts of the other but to give you a field of revenue that would prevent you from unduly trespassing upon the only means by which our 48 Commonwealths can sustain their public necessities.

If you are not impressed with the dangers which lie in killing the industrial goose that lays the golden eggs of Federal support, I appeal to that sense of reiterated regard for the rights of the State which should at least keep you from taking all the

By the form of the excess-profit tax you lay your extraordinary burdens upon manufacture and merchandising, because these forms of business are largely conducted in corporate form. You are substantially exempting agriculture, doubtless in the belief that you can gull the farmer into believing that you rid him of your additional tax burdens. Yet he must buy what others make to meet his needs, and if they can not translate their tax they themselves can not ultimately pay it. You undertake to hide your tax in the farmer's plow. You dare not write it where he can see it and realize that congressional extravagance is exacting tribute from every household.

Surely the gentleman recognizes that the larger processes of industry and commerce can be successfully carried on only in corporate form, yet you are arbitrarily discriminating, by the very form of your measure, between the doing of business in corporate as distinguished from individual capacity. If it is your deliberate determination to discourage the corporate form of business, you have adopted the best means of doing so. If it is your idea to turn back the hands of time, to place a premium upon the disintegration of business combinations and encourage the formulation of new schemes, to return to individual modes of doing business and place in every man's hands ruder tools for doing business the size of ours, I congratulate you on the method you are adopting. If you want to turn us back into a Nation that uses a hand shovel instead of a steam shovel, an ox cart instead of a railroad train, a hand flail instead of a thrasher, you do well to exert your power to penalize business in corporate form and give tax exemption to those who do it in individual capacity.

It must be equally obvious that if you overburden existing enterprise, you operate to restrict its extension and exercise birth control over the growth of the business family,

But your philosophy is false. Your excess-profit tax is not an excess-profit tax, as its title would suggest. In actual operation it would prove to be a tax upon not merely normal but often subnormal profit, for your plan utterly ignores the practical and varying risk of all forms of business which necessarily rely upon the larger return of their successful years to meet the actual and probably lessened returns of leaner years. Thus a corporation may show net profits of 12 per cent this year. On 4 per cent of that you would charge an excess-profit tax, yet if last year their profit was 8 per cent, in the preceding year 6 per cent, and in the year before that 4 per cent, you will perceive that their average profit during the four-year period was but 71 per cent. Can gentlemen with any practical judgment believe that in such conditions there is any opportunity for the accumulation of a protective surplus or any assurance to investors?

Most of all, can the gentlemen not clearly perceive that you are deliberately laying a penal tax upon the most valuable of national assets, initiative and energy, for you discourage bold enterprise and give your disapproval to the pioneer.

As a fundamental and general rule, risk and profit are closely associated. In stable, well-established lines of industry that particular business earns relatively small profits which tend to approximate correct interest rates. If an expansion of demand or changed conditions bring about higher returns, the entrance of new capital into the field tends to restore the old rate of income; and the safer the general character of the industry the more immediate will be the response of capital to any increase in established returns. We accept it as a general principle that the safest investment is usually the one that carries the lowest

On the other hand, high profits are associated with high risk. It is the pioneer-the man who carries the banner of industry where none or only a few dare follow-who makes the high profit while this period of high risk obtains. When the pioneer days are past and the industry becomes safe for general investment the profits of the pioneer fall, and for one pioneer who succeeds and who by success adds to national prosperity and wealth and progress there are a hundred who fail.

At the present we need more than ever before the pioneer spirit to develop our national resources and to extend our trade to other lands. We never needed the fullest and freest exercise of the American qualities of invention, enterprise, initiative, and energy more than now. The safe, solid, and stable business will not normally return excess profits that would come under the proposed law. The tax will chiefly reach the pioneer. The very fact that the principle of taxing excess profits is accepted and established will go far to deter men from taking the risks neces sary to develop new enterprise. Once the principle is established, who can tell what the particular rate of the tax will be, or whether in the hand of a radical government it might not amount to confiscation?

Upon particular classes of business the proposed tax will be an oppressive and unfair charge. The corporation organized to develop and manufacture patented articles is a special instance of the pioneer. Large sums may be spent in developing or acquiring the original invention. Oftentimes many of these preliminary expenses are not of such a character as can be capitalized in the form of stock, especially under the stricter class of State laws. From the beginning the whole venture is involved in the greatest risk, not only in the success of the particular invention but in finding a demand for it on the market. Recompense for all initial costs and risks must be secured in a limited term; that is, the life of the patent. After that the rules of competition will force the returns down to ordinary and normal levels of corporate income. To the excess profits over ordinary return, which are hoped to be secured during the life of the patent, the inventor and the promoter must therefore look for the chief inducement for their ingenuity and enterprise and To such excess profits they also can properly look for reimbursement for losses in previous unsuccessful endeavor, as well as costs of experimentation and promotion. Such charges as these should fairly come out of the pominal profits accruing from any successful invention before it could be fairly said that actual profits exist.

Many of the same considerations apply to the business of mining, where much preliminary cost is often entailed and where the nominal yearly profits really represent a reduction of the value of the investment, inasmuch as ore once mined can not be mined again. Other businesses could be named in which, by their very nature, the above elements are present to a greater or less degree, and in which in all equity and fairness there should be charged to going profits items of either preliminary or prospective expense, or both. Where such conditions are inherent in the nature of the business, taxation of going profits becomes inequitable and directly affects the incentive for entering into such business in the first instance.

The excess-profit tax is, moreover, a proposal violating the most elementary principles of sound taxation. It is fundamental that a tax should be so laid as to be certain and regular in its return, that expenditures may be predicated upon it with security. The amount of excess profits within the terms of this measure is entirely conjectural. It will vary with the changing conditions of business, and the contraction and expansion of industrial returns will be followed by an inflation and deflation of the tax return within unknown limits. You not only can not rely upon any fixed amount of returns from this source but by its very nature your mode of taxation will tend toward the establishment of new expenditures that can not be sustained. You are deliberately setting on foot a scheme that promotes extravagance and expenditure resting upon conjectural returns.

The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee has not hesitated to frankly declare that the burden of this tax will fall north of Mason and Dixon's line. He is among the first to deplore the introduction of sectionalism into political discussion, yet he has been the first to make sectional tax burdens the subject of an appeal to political constituents. The gentleman and his associates apparently blind themselves to patent facts of economic relation. Sectionalism persists only in the mind and conduct of the gentlemen who use their control of government to penalize industry in the erroneous belief that they can unduly burden any part of this country without compelling the section from which they come to participate in the penalties which they impose. Southern cotton is spun by northern mills; northern capital is pouring into southern factories. The agriculture of the South finds its largest customers in the more populated States of the North and Middle West. All the forms of communication which give value to our common life represent the common investments of the Nation. So intimate has become the relationship between all the parts of our business being that an injury done to industry that lessens its buying, employing, or producing power is reflected in every section of the Nation. Imperil the credit that underlies the great banking centers of my own State and the smaller establishment that ministers to the needs of a southern constituency trembles on its foundations. Handicap the operation and extension of the mills of the North and you do it at the expense of the planter of the The political bigotry that permits the gentlemen of the majority to believe they can work injury to a constituency other than their own and profit by it does as little credit to their intelligence as to their sense of justice.

For 10 years gentlemen have done what they could to wreck the New York Cotton Exchange. They have injured it to some extent, but how much more have they injured themselves?

There was no support in the cotton market this morning. Gentlemen had worked their will on the New York Cotton Exchange, but the cotton farmer of the South who saw his product drop $25 a bale is probably wondering what his Representatives have gained for him by their fight against free trading on our exchange,

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York will not accomplish the object which he desires. Even if you strike out insurance companies, I think they would be included under the terms "corporation" and "joint-stock companies." I suggest a further amendment to section 201, page 3, lines 17 and 18. If you strike out, after the word "insurance," the words "combined in one policy issued on the weekly premium plan," you will exempt life insurance companies.

Mr. BENNET. I will say that my colleague from New York [Mr. Dempsey] has that amendment prepared, and I believe the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] has also one prepared.

Mr. FULLER. I have an amendment of that kind which I proposed to offer, but if you cover the ground I have no objection. All I want is to see that life insurance companies are exempt, because that interests more than half of the people of the United

Mr. BENNET. If the gentleman will state his substitute, perhaps it is preferable to mine.

Mr. FULLER. My amendment is to strike out, in lines 17 and 18, page 3, after the word "insurance," the words "combined in one policy issued on the weekly premium payment plan."

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is not in order until that section has been read.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York. I offer as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from New York the words "insurance companies excepting purely mutual insurance companies."

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman's amendment is not a substitute, although it is a preferential amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment, page 2, line 25, by adding, after the word "companies," the words "excepting purely mutual companies."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, the business of mutual insurance is one that is carried on entirely for the benefit of the people. Not a dollar goes into the hands of any stockholder or corporation. The moneys that are received are all paid in by the people interested as their share of the business of the company. The money paid out is of the following classes: Their expenses of the business, which would be deducted under all circumstances. The return premiums, which are especially ordered to be deducted. Page 15 of the act, at the end of section 12, has this deduction:

And life insurance companies shall not include as income in any year such portion of any actual premium received from any individual policyholder as shall have been paid back or credited to such individual policyholder, or treated as an abatement of premium of such individual policyholder.

But, besides this, every life insurance company has to put by in what they call a reserve parts of the premium, or of their interest on investment, as a reserve for the payment of policies which do not belong to them. As long as that reserve remains in their hands there is not a dollar that goes to that company as profits. Nevertheless, under the old law the Secretary of the Treasury tried his best to hold that all receipts by the companies for the benefit of the policyholders and to be returned to the people should be charged as their income; whereas these are the policyholders' payments for their own benefit on their pol-icies, which is all going to be returned to the policyholders. I see no reason why mutual companies doing a purely mutual business should be taxed as if they were making profits, because if they do a large business they are receiving millions of dollars in premiums and not paying out so much in losses, because they had to put the money by in a reserve. The companies are saving for the people, not for themselves. It is not profits; it is a charity done for the whole people of the United States, which had to be put under careful laws to see that it was executed rightly. That is done under the laws of the several States in order to do justice to the people and so that the companies shall not make profits for anyone. I ask, therefore, that purely mutual companies shall be exempt from the extra profit tax, because in justice they make no profit whatever. [Applause.]
Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, the whole question is whether mutual companies be excluded from the operation of this tax. The Chairman will notice that in line 25, page 2, the words "insurance companies" are used, and section 201, page 3, in line 15, is another place where an amendment can be offered to except mutual insurance companies.

I ask unanimous consent that amendments to section 201 and section 200 with respect to excepting mutual insurance companies be considered together, and that all debate on the two sections and all amendments thereto be closed in 20 minutes, 15 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] and 5 minutes by myself.

Mr. MANN. Section 201 has not yet been read.

Mr. KITCHIN. I ask unanimous consent that that be considered, because if one amendment is adopted the other ought to be. One is dependent upon the other, and I think we can save time in this way and put it more clearly before the House.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that we can dispose of this particular amendment first.

Mr. KITCHIN. They are interdependent. If one section is amended, the other curett to be amended, the other ought to be.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. We want to determine whether this will include mutual companies.

Mr. KITCHIN. I know; but this will come up in my request. Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I ask for a vote upon my amendment first.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from North Carolina whether he intends to insist on the bill as it is written?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman will oppose an amendment to either section?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understand we can not agree upon that?
Mr. KITCHIN. We can not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I intended to offer an amendment to section 201 along the line that other gentlemen have entioned. What is the gentleman's request as to time? Mr. MANN. This is what the gentleman desires to domentioned.

unanimous consent that section 201 may be read, and that amendments may be in order then to both sections, sections 200

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; and with a further request that all debate upon the sections and amendments thereto close in 20 minutes, 15 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] and 5 minutes by myself.

Mr. MANN. I think there ought to be more than 20 minutes of debate allowed.

Mr. KITCHIN. Make it 25, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania to control 20 minutes and I to control 5.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania, Mr. Chairman, can not the gentleman make it half an hour?

Mr. KITCHIN. Well, one-half an hour-20 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and 10 minutes by Mr. MANN. This side would like to have 30 minutes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Let us put it at 25 minutes for that side, and I will control 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that section 201 may be read at this time, that amendments to sections 200 and 201 shall be in order, and that all debate upon the two sections and all amendments thereto shall close in 30 minutes-25 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] and 5 minutes by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN]. Is there objection?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, desire to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the request

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. I would not object to that, but I have an amendment to the $5,000 exemption which I desire to offer.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand the request it is that debate shall close upon all amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman from North Carolina desires to limit debate upon all amendments or upon only those that relate to insurance companies?

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have it upon all amendments. Why not offer the amendment at this time, I will ask the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. BURNETT. I want five minutes upon it. Mr. KITCHIN. Very well. Make it 35 minutes, 5 minutes of that time to be given to the gentleman from Alabama upon his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina modifies his request, that the debate may conclude in 35 minutes, 25 minutes of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] and 10 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Kitchin]. Is there objection?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I desire to offer an amendment, which, I think, will not be objected to by the gentleman from North Carolina. I desire to add to section 200, as it now stands, after the words "in-surance companies," the words "but not building and loan as-I would like to ask the gentleman whether it is sociations."

his intention to oppose an amendment of that kind?

Mr. KITCHIN. Building and loan associations are already excepted. This bill excepts all corporations, insurance companies, and joint-stock companies that are exempted and excepted under the income-tax law. It does not apply to what the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Under those circumstances I do not wish to offer the amendment.

Mr. KITCHIN. Those are exempted under the present law. Mr. LONGWORTH. I wanted to be perfectly certain that they were not included here.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina? [After a pause.] hears none, and the Clerk will read section 201.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows;

SEC. 201. That in addition to the taxes under existing laws there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of every corporation and partnership organized, authorized, or existing under the laws of the United States, or of any State, Territory, or District thereof, no matter how created or organized, excepting income derived from the business of life, health, and accident insurance combined in one policy issued on the weekly premium-payment plan, a tax of 8 per cent of the amount by which such net income exceeds the sum of (a) $5,000 and (b) 8 per cent of the actual capital invested.

Every foreign corporation and partnership, including corporations and partnerships of the Philippine Islands and Porto Rico, shall pay for each taxable year a like tax upon the amount by which its net income received from all sources within the United States exceeds the sum of (a) 8 per cent of the actual capital invested and used or employed in the business in the United States, and (b) that proportion of $5,000 which the entire actual capital invested and used or employed in the business in the United States bears to the entire actual capital invested; and in case no such capital is used or employed in the business in the United States the tax shall be imposed upon that portion of such net income which is in excess of the sum of (a) 8 per cent of that proportion of the entire actual capital invested and used or employed in the business which the net income from sources within the United States bears to the entire net income, and (b) that proportion of $5,000 which the net income from sources within the United States bears to the entire net income.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, should amendments be introduced now or as gentlemen are recognized?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize anyone for an amendment to the section now.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey still pending?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; there are two amendments pending-the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York and the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the two pending amendments may be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will put the request after the Clerk has reported the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 18, after the word "plan." insert the words "and from the business of life insurance companies issuing policies upon the mutual plan."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to relieve the mutual life insurance companies of the taxes which would otherwise be imposed by this bill. I understand that certain mutual companies are not included in the income-tax law but the mutual life companies are, and it would be an unnecessary hardship upon the members of those associations who participate in the distribution of their own money to have this 8 per cent tax added. There are no profits, as such, arising from the business of a mutual insurance company. The money is paid in by the members and it is returned to the members, and there are no such profits or accretions as are usually regarded as profits in a business concern. When the income-tax law was before the House the thought generally was that the mutual companies should be excepted and certain mutual companies were excepted in the

Mr. FULLER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will. Mr. FULLER. Would it not be well to have an amendment where you mention policies issued on the mutual plan to say "or participating companies that are not purely mutual issuing participating policies," so that the dividends and earnings go to It might not be a mutual company and yet issue the insurer? participating policies.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It seems to me that question would be covered by the amendment that is already at the

Mr. FULLER. I think it would be better to say mutual or participating policies, and there are many such.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It might tend to complicate the situation as involving stock companies. If the gentleman thinks "participating" would not prejudice the mutual feature of it, I have no objection, but I hope the gentleman will discuss that matter when his time comes to discuss it.

Now, the whole theory of the mutual life insurance companies, as I understand it, is to relieve a community or a State of a very great burden-that of caring for the poor and the dis-It is a theory that holds in foreign countries, particularly in England, and it is the basis upon which these mutual companies are organized and conducted in the United States. A great deal has been said about what England does in matters of this kind. I am informed that England, which was the parent of income-tax legislation, exempts one-sixth of the amount of income if devoted to life insurance. If a man dies without insurance and leaves a widow and a family of children, their only recourse, if they are dependents, is to go to the State, and the State must bear the burden of their maintenance. The mutual company steps in by virtue of the contributions of its members and relieves the State of the burden of taxation that must necessarily ensue if such independent provision were not made for the maintenance of the widow and the orphans or the beneficiaries of the family. I do not care to make a lengthy statement on this subject, except to say that it is a matter of economy to any government, State or National, to have these insurance companies established with a view of encouraging the members to take care of themselves in their dependency, and that is actually done.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman tell us to what extent the mutual companies are relieved from the operation of the existing law?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, there are certain companies that are relieved, certain mutual companies, agricultural companies

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. All mutual insurance companies, I think, except life, are exempt from the income tax.

Mr. BUTLER. Now, will the companies that are being relieved from taxation under the existing law be relieved under

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understand so. This bill brings in the mutual companies—I mean the life companies. Their taxes would be increased from 2 to 10 per cent. It is rank discrimination in this instance in the matter of mutual companies now intended to be included. Mr. Chairman, how much time remains of my 25 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-one minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR].

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the amendment excepting mutual life insurance companies from taxation under the provisions of this bill. This burden will fall particularly hard upon poor, struggling people who are endeavoring to carry insurance to provide for their families after their departure from this earth, and I think an exception ought to be made in such cases. In connection with this I desire the Clerk to read this telegram that expresses my views and the opposition of the agent of a very large insurance company in protest against this bill taxing those companies.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the telegram in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

SCRANTON, PA., January 31, 1917.

Hon. John R. Farr.

Congress Hall Hotel, Washington, D. C.:

In behalf of mutual life insurance companies I desire to enter a protest against the passage of the Federal emergency revenue measure in its present form. I regard it as being unfair and unjust to them, and the reasons for this conclusion will be placed before you later. In the meantime please use your endeavors to secure a fair hearing for the companies on this measure.

J. D. James.

Mr. FARR. I yield back any time I have not used.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY].
Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like for my amendment to be read first.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, lines 16, 17, and 18; in line 16 strike out the word "and" and insert "or" in place thereof, and in lines 17 and 18 strike out the words "combined in one policy issued on the weekly premium-payment plan."

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the committee which prepared this bill has inserted an exception exempting policies where they are issued for life, health, and accident, combined, on the weekly payment plan. Now, that is a very proper provision; but if it is proper, then the amendment proposed is equally proper. The purpose of exempting the kind of policy which is exempted is to encourage those who otherwise would not provide for their families upon their death to take policies, and in that way leave something for those who would be left without means of support.

Now, is there any insurance which is not issued upon that basis? I think that you will all agree upon consideration that there is none. The man of small means, the salaried man, the workman take insurance policies for that reason, and for that reason alone; and for what reason does the man of large means take insurance? Why, he can not take it as an investment, because everyone concedes that you can do better in normal times, and much better in such times as this, by a great variety of investment. You can derive larger income in many ways than you can from insurance; and it is questionable whether you derive substantially any income at all from insurance. The man of large means takes insurance and takes it only because he is about to embark on large risks, and he wants in the event of his death or in the event of the miscarriage of the undertaking in which he is about to engage, to provide for that casualty. I say to you now that what you should do is to extend this exemption so that the man of large means will be encouraged to promote prosperity, to undertake great undertakings, to employ labor, to take great risks, where he may win or may lose; and encourage the man of small means to take insurance, whether he takes it by this particular plan or by any other plan.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. WASON].
Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer the following amendment to section 201 of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Hampshire offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Wason: Page 3, line 18, after the word "plan," insert: "and further excepting income of every corporation or partnership authorized or existing under the laws of the United States or any State, Territory, or District thereof, that is divided annually among employees of such corporation or partnership."

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, I hope the genial chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means will consider this helpful amendment to the laboring classes in our industries. He has professed, and his side of the House has professed, by frequent utterances, to be favorable to the laboring classes, and I desire to read a couple of lines from the RECORD, uttered by the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris], in which he said:

What we

are doing is providing that those people who pay and whose earnings yield an income of more than $5,000 plus 8 per cent on their entire invested capital stock, net, shall pay this additional tax, and that the tollers, and farmers, and poor people of the country shall be exempt from it.

Those sentiments, I believe, are the sentiments of the chairman of this committee, and I want to say that the purpose of this amendment is this: In these days of prosperity many of the employers of labor who have been successful in the last two years in their business have seen fit, in addition to repeatedly raising the wages of their employees, to divide yearly a part of their surplus earnings with those employees. Under the bill as it stands before the committee at this time, without this amendment, a corporation which has cash on hand, accumulated as I have indicated, will have to pay the tax to the Government, and then they can divide the balance, if they wish, with their em-

Mr. Chairman, I believe that the mite or the tithe that is taken from that fund that is about to be divided among the employees should not go to the Government of the United States but should go to the employee, and increase his dividend therefrom that much more.

I trust that my distinguished friend from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] will note the purpose of this amendment, offered in the interest of the honest toiler, which he and I admire and are willing to aid in all matters that make for his benefit that are reasonable and right. It is from the toiler in these institutions that the money will be taken if this amendment is rejected. I trust the gentleman will accept it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I have received a number of telegrams from California, from responsible citizens, in opposition to this provision of the bill. I ask unanimous consent that I may insert them in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record by inserting the telegrams referred to. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my

The following are the telegrams referred to:

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., January 30, 1917.

Hon. Julius Kahn, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Eight per cent tax proposed by Democrats on profits life insurance companies, less certain deductions, will seriously increase cost to policyholders, who have voluntarily protected themselves by taking out life insurance. In our opinion it is a tax on a man who is doing right thing by protecting dependents. Urge you vigorously oppose it.

GEORGE D. CLARK.
GEORGE A. MOORE.
VICTOR ETIENNE, Jr.

Los Angeles, Cal., January 30, 1917.

Hon. Julius Kahn, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Co., a California institution, and the largest company of its kind west of the Mississippi River, pays a large annual tax to the State of California of 2 per cent on its premiums. In addition to this, it pays a similar tax to each State in which it transacts business, besides many other license taxes, etc. In addition, it pays a Federal income tax of over $18,000 a year, and this year an additional excise tax to the Federal Government of about $2,500 on its capital stock. And it is now proposed by the new Federal income-tax bill to collect a further tax of 8 per cent on its profits, which would amount probably to about $80,000 a year in addition. When you remember that the profits of a life insurance company are largely savings from mortality and earnings on reserves for the benefit of its policyholders which are returned to them, you will readily see that these so-called profits are not the kind of profits which this emergency tax is intended to reach. We submit that life insurance is already tremendously taxed, and that this additional tax is simply in excess of the limit. We ask you in the name of our policyholders, who are over 100,000 in number, to use your influence to exempt life and accident insurance companies from this unfust tax.

GEORGE I. COCHRAN,
President Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Co.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsyqlvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the amendment to exempt insurance companies from the operation of this profit tax. It is a system which really takes from the beneficiaries of the policies after the one who has purchased the policy is dead and gone. It is a system of grave robbery, to which the Government of the United States should not be committed. It would seem to me that the statesmanship of this House could find some way of meeting the exorbitant expenditures which have been voted rather than taking from the widow and orphan that fund which ripens by reason of the death of father or relative.

I submit here several telegrams which I have received or have had handed me as a part of my remarks:

LINCOLN, NEBR., January 29, 1917.

CHARLES H. SLOAN, M. C., Washington, D. C.:

Emergency-revenue measure proposes 8 per cent tax on insurance funds. Calling this tax on savings an excess-profit tax, is ridiculous. Show it up. Please furnish copy of bill.

They regard it as being unfair and unjust to the companies; and the reasons for this conclusion will be placed before you later. In the meantime please use your endeavors to secure a fair hearing for the companies on this measure.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the time-honored constitu-

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the time-honored constitutional policy which we find in article 1, section 8 of the Constitution, enumerating the powers of Congress, should be our guide. It is as follows:

To lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises; to pay debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

This clearly shows what the fathers thought should be the principal source of revenue for the support of the Government. It seems to me that the men who were wise then handed down to us a system that is especially wise and desirable now. Not entirely to the exclusion of the more modern methods, but it still should remain the principal method. I should rather collect money necessary to run this Government very largely at the ports, to be paid by the foreigner, than to collect it from the widow, the orphan, or the fairly prosperous business here in our own country.

To demonstrate the advisability of collecting revenues at our ports I submit the following tables, which show the wisdom of following the constitutional method laid down by the fathers for the major portion of our national governmental support.

Table A shows the imports, free and dutiable, duties collected and average ad valorem rates for the four years under the Payne-Aldrich law and the three years under the Underwood law; also the average per year under both laws and the per cent of increase or decrease.

¹ Laces, embroideries, etc., formerly included in Schedule J, are, under the law of Oct. 3, 1913, included in Schedule N.

An examination of the foregoing statistics for the years 1897, 1912, and 1916 will show the following facts:

(1) That Schedule G in 1897 in point of view of dutiable imports ranked No. 5, in 1912 it ranked No. 1, but in 1916 had dropped to No. 3.

(2) That Schedule G as a revenue producer among the schedules in 1897 ranked ninth, in 1912 had risen to third, but in 1916 dropped to fourth.
(3) That Schedule G in 1897 showed dutiable importations of only $33,716,958, in 1912 it had risen to $117,711,156, and 1916 had fallen to $94,634,995; Schedule G in 1897 produced only $8,613,987 revenue, in 1912 it increased in revenue to $34,146,017, but in 1916 decrease in revenue reduced to $16,164,123.

(4) That while Schedule G in 1897 had but 8 per cent of the dutiable imports, in 1912 it had risen to 14 per cent, and in 1916 decreased to 7 per cent.

(5) That while Schedule G in 1897 produced only 5 per cent of the import revenues, in 1912 it produced 11 per cent, and in 1916 only 7 per cent.

(6) Between 1897 and 1912 Schedule G increased as a revenue producer by 296 per cent, but from 1912 to 1916 decreased by 52 per cent:

Table D.—Imports into the United States of certain farm products for 9 months ending June 30, 1914, under tariff law of 1913, together with imports of same articles for 9 months ending June 30, 1913, under the tariff law of 1909, and the per cent of increase. Also the imports of the same articles for 12 months ending Oct. 1, 1915, and 12 months ending Oct. 1, 1914, and the per cent of increase under the Underwood law; total imports of these articles two years ending Oct. 1, 1913, under the Payne-Aldrich law, and imports of same articles for first three years ending Oct. 1, 1915, and per cent of increase; also imports of these articles for the last three years ending Oct. 1, 1915, under Payne-Aldrich law, and imports of same articles for first three years ending Oct. 1, 1915, under the Underwood law, and the per cent of increase; also rates of duty on these articles under both laws.—Estimated revenue if duties under Payne-Aldrich law had been collected on the imports for the first three years under the Underwood law; actual duties collected under the Underwood law and estimated loss of revenue for the three years.

By July 1, 1918, probable loss of revenue on these articles would be $262,938,378.

A study of the foregoing tables would seem to convince almost anyone of the large amount of revenues that the present administration has been throwing away and demonstrate the special favors we have been extending to the foreigners and the special burdens that we are placing upon business and upon our own people. Further, it will be readily seen that not only would a large amount of revenue have been collected, but our industries in this country would have been fairly protected against unwarranted competition had we followed the suggestions of the minority report filed with this bill in adhering to-

(1) Proper and rigid economy observed in all appropriations.
(2) The sound fiscal system of four years ago, under which our national debt was gradually and substantially being reduced; prudent national enterprises were being met and their expenses paid; a safe and substantial surplus was maintained in the Treasury and a reasonable protection to American industries maintained, which contributed greatly toward full and constant employment at good wages to our labor and gave a fair opportunity to American capital.

Mr. SLOAN. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, how much time is remaining on this side?

The CHAIRMAN. Twelve minutes,

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fuller].

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I will not offer the amendment I proposed a few minutes ago, because the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Dempsey] covers precisely the ground that I proposed to cover. I think the amendment is sufficient to cover the entire claim that we make, that these companies-life insurance, health insurance, and accident insurance companies-should be exempted from the payment of this tax, if the tax is justified in any case. These companies exist for the benefit of the people who are left dependent, perhaps, by the death of the protector of the family, and if anything on earth ought to be exempt it is insurance policies of this kind.

I do not see how, under the arguments made by the gentlemen on the other side yesterday, they can for a moment justify this kind of a tax against the funds provided for those who may be left destitute when the head of the family is taken away. I sincerely hope that either the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Dempsey] or that of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] may be adopted. I think either one perhaps covers the ground, but the one offered by the gentleman from New York perhaps more thoroughly, according to my view, than any of the others. I also favor the amendment introduced by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. Wason], which, however, is on a different subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. MILLER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Delaware is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Chairman, I shall support the amendments offered to sections 200 and 201 of this bill as they relate to insurance companies, because I think any amendment that will perform a legislative operation on this bill is a good move and should be adopted.

Further, I believe that the first amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Parker] exempting mutual insurance companies is unassailable and one that the majority in this House may well consider and adopt at this time.

In the few minutes remaining I am going to hand to the Clerk to read a portion of a letter that I received to-day which covers fully my views on the matter of taxing these insurance com-

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Unlike any other country in the world, civilized or uncivilized, the United States already imposes a tax of over $1,000,000 per month upon American policyholders—to be exact, $13,676,096 last year. These taxes in 1890 aggregated $2,000,000; last year, $13,676,096. This premium tax imposed would have furnished insurance protection of $500 each to 1,159,200 more families, now left without a dollar, and yet it is estimated that the United States is paying for dependency in various ways—organized channels, public and private—between $350,000,000 and $400,000,000 per annum, not including the amount paid in Government pensions.

Why should legislation seek constantly to restrict expenses of life insurance companies, yet compel officers to pay this one increasing arbitrary, excessive, and unjust expense?

Why not label laws taxing life insurance policyholders "An act to restrict trifft and providence by taxation"; "An act to encourage dependency"; "An act to tax almshouses, orphanages, and philanthropic institutions"?

"If village neighbors collected $1,000 for a destitute widow and her orphans and were met at her house by a taxgatherer demanding $70, he would probably be mobbed. Yet this is what our States take from every $1,000 paid to the widows."—Haley Fiske.

Yours, very truly,

W. W. KNOX.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to further extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Dowell].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, in the time allotted to me I shall be unable to discuss any of the provisions of the bill. As I understand it you are seeking here to levy a tax on mutual companies or associations, or, rather, you are seeking to tax the funds which have been laid aside for the widows and the orphans after the policyholders have died. It seems to me that you should not increase the tax on the funds which have been placed in the hands of these companies or associations for the purpose of assisting the widows and orphans after those upon whom they were dependent have gone.

I have received a number of telegrams protesting against the increase of the taxes on these funds, and, while I recognize this bill can not be amended, it occurs to me these protests should be considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, how much time remains to me?

The CHAIRMAN. Five minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman from North Carolina desire to proceed? We are within five minutes of the expiration of our time.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will close with five minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. With but one speech on that Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. We have but one other speaker. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then I yield five minutes, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. McArthur]. fraternal and labor organizations?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon is recognized for five minutes

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, the ground has been so thoroughly covered by other gentlemen on this side of the aisle that I do not deem it necessary to enumerate the very potent arguments that have been advanced against this proposition to levy a tax on industry and thrift. 'I wish, however, to include in what I have to say a couple of telegrams that I have received from people in my district relative to this matter. I yield back the balance of my time.

Following are the telegrams referred to:

PORTLAND, OREG., January 29, 1917.

Hon. C. N. McArthur, Washington, D. C.:

Some of us Oregonians are very much interested in the developments of local life insurance companies, and it strikes us that the proposed emergency revenue applied to life insurance acts as a burden upon the small income of life insurance policyholders, and appears to us a tax upon the thrift that the small individual is making to protect his family, thereby relieving the State of a burden which too often falls upon it.

C. F. ADAMS.

PORTLAND, OREG., January 30, 1917.

C. N. McArthur, Washington, D. C.:

Newspaper reports indicate new Federal revenue bill would levy tax of 8 per cent annually on insurance companies on net income exceeding $5,000 and percentage on capital invested, in addition to present taxes. In the case of mutual assessment life insurance associations, all savings are held in trust for sole purpose of protecting policyholders and beneficiaries in same manner and for same purpose as are accumulations of fraternal societies; hence by all means exempt them from this special text.

C. A. SHEPPARD.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DILLON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota is recognized for one minute.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Chairman, in behalf of numerous policyholders of my State I want to enter a protest against the feature of this bill that seeks to levy-a tax upon the funds accumulated for the widows and the orphans, and as a part of my remarks I ask unanimous consent to incorporate in the RECORD three protests that I have received. I yield back the time I have not consumed.

Following are the telegrams referred to:

PIERRE, S. DAK., January 28, 1917.

Hon. C. H. Dillon, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Proposed emergency revenue measure agreed to by Democratic House caucus imposes oppressive tax on insurance companies operating in South Dakota, which must be shifted to policyholders. Please do all you can to eliminate.

LORING E. GAFFEY, President First National Life Insurance Co.

SIOUX FALLS, S. DAK., January 30, 1917.

Hon. C. H. Dillon,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C...
In behalf of mutual life insurance companies I desire to enter a protest against passage of Federal emergency revenue measure in its present form. I regard it as being unfair and unjust to them, and reasons for this conclusion will be placed before you later. In meantime please use your endeavors to secure fair hearing for companies on this measure.

JOHN MALLANNEY.

WATERTOWN, S. DAK., January 29, 1917.

Hon. C. H. Dillon,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.: Three hundred stockholders and officers of Dakota Life Insurance Co. protest against enactment of Federal emergency revenue measure, and hope you can see your way clear to oppose and defeat the assassination of life insurance business.

JOHN B. HATEN, President.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairmau, I yield one minute to my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. GARLAND]. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for one minute.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Chairman, there is one point in connection with this bill that I want to call to the attention of the Members of this House, and especially I want to attract the attention of the chairman of the committee who has this bill in charge. Labor organizations and fraternal organizations, many of them, which are giving sick and funeral benefits to their members, accumulate funds, and with those funds they purchase homes and lay by considerable money for the purpose of paying sick and death benefits.

Now, the chairman states to me that this amendment would not include them for the reason that they are not taxed an income tax. But supposing the collector of income tax decides that they are taxable, which he is likely to do at any time. Is there not any way you can arrange in this bill to exempt those organizations from a tax of that kind-a tax on the funds of

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say to the gentleman that all the insurance companies that are excepted in the income tax are stated just as clearly as they can be, and this bill excepts the same incomes of all kinds from the operations of this bill as are excepted in the income-tax law.

Mr. GARLAND. The gentleman thinks the collector of the income tax would not decide that labor and fraternal organizations are included?

Mr. KITCHIN. Of course, if he concludes contrary to the plain words of the statute, they would have an appeal to the Supreme Court.

Mr. GARLAND. I simply wanted to be assured on that point.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. Mr. GARLAND. I w I wanted that to be in the RECORD.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How much time is remaining,

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two minutes remaining, Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Oakey].

Mr. OAKEY. Mr. Chairman, I come from one of the great homes of life insurance, and for the last few days have received a great number of protests against this provision of the bill. In the moment allowed me I want simply to join hands and heart with the gentlemen who are making this protest against taxing the policyholders of the mutual life insurance companies of America. Their voice goes out to you, my colleagues, as well as that of the officers who conduct these great companies, asking you to strike from this measure this unjust and unfair provision, and I ask you in all sincerity to help us do it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I had intended to yield the last minute to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good], but he has kindly turned it back to me in order that I may say a word or two about amendments that are of very great importance; one offered by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. Wason], which proposes to exempt corporations or partnerships where the employees participate in the profits; that is to say, where there is an actual profit-sharing by the employees. Then the mutual life insurance amendments. I hope we may have careful consideration of these proposals to exempt mutual companies from the operation of this tax.

The mutual life insurance company is the last thing in the world that ought to be taxed in war time or any other time. It makes no profits like the business concern makes. It has no opportunity to make such profits. It is not in the profit-making business, and in war time in particular it stands in the stead of the Government, whose funds are depleted, to take care of the widows and orphans that the Government can not possibly take care of. It seems to me that in the interest of that humanity of which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] spoke so feelingly in the earlier part of his address these two amendments should be agreed to.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Burnert: Amend line 20, on page 3, by striking out "$5,000" and inserting "$10,000" in Heu thereof.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, the speech of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee was most eloquent and able—one of the ablest I have ever heard fall from the lips of any Representative on this floor. The purposes of the bill as outlined by him are perfectly right, if it accomplishes what the gentleman thinks it will. I agree with him that those who have been piling up their millions as a result of war conditions and those who, by every means, fair and foul, have been helping to get up this hysteria in favor of preparedness and pilling up millions of dollars of expense on the Federal Treasury, should pay the expenses necessarily incurred thereby. But he said that the bill would exempt those who were the innocent victims of such wild extravagance. In that the gentleman is mistaken. All over the country, and especially throughout the Middle West, the West, and the South, there have been for several years banking and business institutions growing up in which the working people and the farmers own the main part of the stock. The gentleman attempts to answer that by saying that when you exempt $5,000 and then 8 per cent additional it will never affect any of those people. In ordinary or lean years that would be a correct proposition; but the last few years have been years of great prosperity to those people, and many of these banking and business institutions have been making perhaps 25 or 30 per cent, and gentlemen from all over the country are going to find when this bill is put into operation back to the policyholders.

that they will receive protests from those people who are not responsible for existing conditions and who are not protected by the small exemption of $5,000. It is in the interest of such as these that I offer this amendment. The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee says that my amendment, if adopted, will cut down the revenue proposed by this bill in the amount of twenty-five or thirty million dollars. My answer to that is that by cutting out one battleship from the proposed naval program we will not need that twenty-five or thirty million dollars

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. I have only five minutes, and I hope my colleague will not insist.

Therefore, in the utmost good faith, Mr. Chairman, I insist that this amendment ought to be adopted for the purpose of carrying out the objects that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Kitchin] has said were the purposes of this bill, and which I admit to be legitimate. Therefore I say that when we come to vote on this section that amendment ought to be adopted by which the earnings of these people, thousands of whom have earned their little money by the sweat of their brows and put it into these partnerships and corporations, may be protected by an increase of the maximum exemption to $10,000 instead of $5,000.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr.

KITCHIN] is recognized for five and one-half minutes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] will not be adopted. I do not think he understands exactly the operation of the excess profits provision, because hardly any of the corporations or copartnerships to which he refers will be touched by this If his amendment were adopted the small corporations to which he refers, say those having a capital of $25,000, would have to make a 48 per cent profit before the tax would touch them at all. Corporations of $50,000 would have to make 28 per cent net profit before this tax would attach, and corporations with $100,000 would have to make a net profit of 18 per cent before the tax would attach. I think the exemption in the gentleman's amendment is entirely too high. It ought not to be adopted, and if adopted we would lose about $25,000,000 in revenue.

Mr. BURNETT. Could we not cut it off of one battleship? Mr. KITCHIN. If we could do that, Now I want to ad-Now I want to address myself to the amendment offered with respect to exempting mutual insurance companies. Why, gentlemen, the policy-holders in this country will not feel the sensation of the loss of a penny by the operation of this law. Every insurance company, fraternal beneficiary society, or any other kind of insurance company that is exempted under the present income-tax law is exempted from the operation of this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; I have not time. I can not be interrupted, because I have not time. Mutual insurance companies which now have to pay taxes under the present income-tax law will have to pay under this law, and those which are exempted under that law will be exempted under this.

Let me say to the House that the 20 largest insurance companies in this country have reserves aggregating nearly $4,000,-To-day these 20 largest insurance companies of the United States have an income from the invested reserve outside of what the policyholders pay, outside of the excess of assets over their legal reserve, amounting to $200,000,000. And yet, there are so many exemptions and deductions under the incometax law that they paid last year only about $300,000 income tax; and under the present income-tax law, paying double the normal tax, they will pay about $600,000. All other corporations with anything like the assets these companies have will pay many times that amount under the operation of this law as compared with the amount these insurance companies will pay. this tax the 20 insurance companies will pay about $1,000,000. This taxes only the net income. Every dollar of the premium returned to the policyholders is deducted. The tax can not fall on the policyholder, and I trust that no man will vote for the amendment on the ground that it falls on the policyholder. If the insurance companies are opposed to this tax let them pay the excess of the net income over the 8 per cent deduction to the policy-holder as a refund, to which it rightfully belongs.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Do not they have to put by a trust fund in what is called the reserve?

Mr. KITCHIN. That is not taxed now.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes; it is taxed.
Mr. KITCHIN. The net income will be taxed, not that put aside as a reserve. If they do not want the tax, let them send it

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired, all time has expired, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 5, after the word "companies," insert "excepting purely mutual insurance companies,"

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Moore of Pennsylvania) there were 111 ayes and 113 noes.

Mr. MANN. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The Chair appointed as tellers the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ALLEN] and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER]

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported that there were 133 ayes and 171 noes.

So the amendment was rejected. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 25, strike out the words "and insurance companies."

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 18, after the word "plan," insert "and from the business of life insurance companies issuing policies upon the mutual plan." The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Dempsey], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, lines 16, 17, and 18: Line 16, strike out "and" and insert "or" in place thereof; after the word "insurance," line 17, strike out "combined in one policy issued on the weekly-premium payment plan."

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. WASON], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, line 18, after the word "plan," insert "and further excepting income of every corporation and partnership organized, authorized, or existing under the laws of the United States, or any State, Territory, or District thereof that is divided annually among employees of such corporation or partnership."

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Wason) there were 115 ayes and 137 noes.

So the amendment was lost.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 20, page 3, by striking out "$5,000" and inserting "$10,000."

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Bennet) there were—ayes 102, noes 127.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DILLON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate has been exhausted on this

A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DILLON. I understood that applied only to the insurance features of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair particularly asked the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] whether his request for unanimous consent was that debate should be closed on all amendments to the paragraph, and he replied that it was, and it was with that understanding that debate would close. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 203. That the tax herein imposed upon corporations and partnerships shall be computed upon the basis of the net income shown by their income-tax returns under Tile I of the act entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," approved September 8, 1916, or under this title, and shall be assessed and collected at the same time and in the same manner as the income tax due under Title I of such act of September 8, 1916: Provided, That for the purpose of this title a partnership shall have the same privilege with reference to fixing its fiscal year as is accorded corporations under section 13 (a) of Title I of such act of September 8, 1916: And provided further, That where a corporation or partnership makes return prior to March 1, 1918, covering its own fiscal year and includes therein any income received during the calendar year ending December 31, 1916, the tax herein imposed shall be that proportion of the tax based upon such full fiscal year which the time from January 1, 1917, to the end of such fiscal year bears to the full fiscal year.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from North Carolina if he is certain, before we come to the next section, that mutual building and loan associations are covered by the exemptions in section 204?

Mr. KITCHIN. The same kind of mutual building and loan associations that are exempted under the income-tax law are exempted under this. This bill specifically says so in another

Mr. BENNET. As I recall it, the income-tax law exempts the ordinary building and loan association?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. I remember discussing the matter with the gentleman when we were considering the income-tax law at the last session. The same companies that he thought ought to be exempted and which were exempted in the income-tax law are exempted here.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Chairman, I will say this to the gentleman from New York, that I talked to the president of the National Association of Building and Loan Associations, and he is entirely satisfied.

Mr. BENNET. Very well.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not see any possibility of getting through with this bill until after the dinner hour.

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, I should think we could easily.

Mr. MANN. Well, I am a pretty good guesser about what the House does

Mr. KITCHIN. Of course the gentleman can prevent it if he

Mr. MANN. I am not trying to prevent it. I would like to expedite it. What I want to get at is this: I think it is fair to the House to know whether it is the intention of the gentleman from Alabama to keep the House here to-night until we have a final vote upon the veto message of the President upon the immigration bill. If the gentleman from Alabama does not know now, I wish he would canvass the subject and let us know later.

Mr. KITCHIN. I know there are a few gentlemen on this side, and, I think, on the other side, who have made arrangements to go home.

Mr. MANN. I understand; but I am asking for information for the benefit of the Members of the House. Undoubtedly the House will do what the gentleman from Alabama desires to have done.

Mr. KITCHIN. Does the gentleman from Alabama desire to hold the Members here to get a final vote upon the veto message of the President on the immigration bill?

Mr. BURNETT. I do.

Mr. MANN. No matter how late it may be?

Mr. BURNETT. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. Very well.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to voice my earnest protest against the passage of the pending revenue bill. I wish to do it in the name of the business men and manufacturers of the great industrial district which I have the honor to represent. I wish also to do it in the interest of the deserving men engaged in the mining, lumbering, and manufacturing business throughout the Southern States-in the name of every cotton mill, every knitting mill, every textile plant, every marble mill, every coal company, every iron furnace, every steel mill, and every business corporation in the South. I wish to do it in the name of the commercial and business organizations of the cities of the South. If we were to take a vote to-day of the progressive business men whose money and energy and enterprise are building up and developing the wonderful resources of the South, that vote would, in my opinion, be practically unanimous against this un-American bill. [Applause on the Republican side.1

I am opposed to a low tariff and direct taxation by the Federal Government-the same system of taxation which has filled Great Britain with paupers. I protest against my country adopting the system and method of taxation used in that counbecause it has filled and overcrowded public hospitals, asylums, almshouses, and poorhouses with the plain common In Great Britain one out of every four persons who die is buried at public expense. Under their system of taxation, with a population of 45,000,000 people in 1911, they had 1,057,000 paupers, as against 64,000 paupers in the United States the same year, with a population of 91,000,000, under a protective tariff law. Fifty-three per cent of their people over 75 years of age are cared for in the poorhouses. As I recall it, the prime minister of England recently made the statement that out of 475,000 people who had passed away 425,000 died without leaving a farthing apiece. And yet the party now in power has committed Congress to a tariff for revenue only, a low tariff, and is to-day by this bill forcing upon the American people a system of direct taxation-the same system which has made paupers of countless thousands of the working people of Great Britain. I protest against following the tariff for revenue only and direct taxation laws of Great Britain, which have filled that land with poverty, misery, unhappiness, and created an army of over a million paupers. I stand for the American protective-tariff system, which has made this country the marvel, the envy, and the admiration of the world, made it the richest, the most favored, and the most prosperous land beneath the sun.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], the Democratic leader, appeals to the entire Republican side to favor the pending bill because it practically voted for prepared-In supporting that legislation the Republicans did not commit themselves to raising the money to meet it by a system of direct taxation by the Federal Government. I submit this challenge or test to the gentleman from North Carolina: Bring in a protective-tariff bill to meet this emergency, to cover the cost of preparedness, and every man on this side of the House will vote for it. [Applause on the Republican side.] When in a majority the Republicans passed the appropriation bills to run the Government—for the Army and the Navy, and so forth the Democratic side voted with them in favor of said bills. Later, when a protective-tariff measure to raise the needed money to meet the expense the Democrats and Republicans had voted to incur was introduced, the Democratic side, including the Member from North Carolina, voted against the protectivetariff bill.

The Democratic leader [Mr. KITCHIN] complains and attempts to defend his side against the charge of extravagance, and now let me call his attention to the statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], the Democratic chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of this House, in which he said that the Democratic Members had been so reckless, so extravagant, so wasteful of the public funds that at times he felt tempted to resign his position. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson] and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Page], both Democratic members of the Committee on Appropriations, appealed to their Democratic colleagues to stop their wasteful extravagance of public money. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson] said that the Democratic side owed the Republican Members an apology in view of the charge in the Democratic national platform that the Republicans were wasteful and extravagant.

The bill under consideration provides for new and additional taxation amounting to $248,000,000. Now, this is about equal to the following items of expenses authorized by a Democratic Congress over Republican opposition and caused by the administration's mistakes in handling the Mexican question:

Armor-plate plant	$50, 000, 000 20, 000, 000 11, 000, 000 160, 000, 000
-------------------	-----------------------------------------------------------------

In this table is not included the expenses of capturing Vera Cruz, Mexico, or the thousands of new offices created by a Democratic Congress over the protest of the Republicans. All of these expenditures now calling for more taxes is chargeable to a Democratic Congress and administration and not to the Republican Members of Congres

Now, the gentleman from North Carolina, in answer to my question to know if the money we needed to run the Government could not be raised by taxing foreign manufacturers for the use of our market, especially those whose goods were coming in free without paying a duty at our customhouses, replied that raw materials were placed on the free list for the benefit of our manufacturers.

In this connection I wish to call his attention to the fact that there are over a hundred different kinds of manufactured articles on the free list, and the value of these articles coming into this country runs into millions of dollars. These same articles are manufactured in the United States. We exact no taxes or duties on these foreign-made goods, but the American manufactures are taxed in cities, counties, and States, and the party in power proposes in the pending bill to add additional Federal or national taxes and at the same time refuses to make the foreign manufacturer whose goods are on the free list pay a cent to meet the running expenses of our Government. I protest against this unjust, unwise, and unfair treatment of the American business men and manufacturers.

The Republican Members of this House demand that before you lay the additional burden carried in the bill under consideration upon the American business man you exact taxation from the foreign manufacturers and exporters now flooding the American market with foreign-made goods. [Applause on the Republican side.] We now have the lowest tariff law ever enacted in the history of this country, the average duty less than 10 per cent, with over 70 per cent of the foreign imports on the

Mr. GORDON. And the greatest prosperity in the history of the country

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; on account of the European war, and in spite of the Underwood low-tariff law, which filled our country with 4,000,000 idle workingmen in 10 months. [Applause on the Republican side. 1

The Republican Members of this House stand for military and naval preparedness, and they stand equally firm for industrial preparedness to meet conditions which will confront us at the close of the war in Europe. The Democratic leader [Mr. KITCHIN] and others have during this debate criticized and condemned the Payne-Aldrich tariff law. I am proud of the fact that my vote aided in passing that great measure, which was supplanted by the existing Underwood low-tariff law, which the gentleman from North Carolina greatly assisted in preparing and passing through Congress. Prior to the European war, during normal times, both of these tariff laws were tested. Under the Payne-Aldrich law every American plant was running full time, every man in America could find employment at good wages, sufficient money was raised to meet the expenses of the Government, the balance of trade was in our favor, a surplus in the Treasury of $126,664,000 when the law was repealed. Prosperity and good times were on every hand-from ocean to ocean, in every State, county, city, village, and community. Within 10 months after the repeal of the Payne-Aldrich law and the substitution of the Underwood law the land was full of idle men, plants were closed down, one-third of our railroads were placed in the hands of receivers, more than 18,000 businesses failed, one-third of the steel mills were closed, and 270,000 miners were idle for the want of work. Public soup houses were opened throughout the land, our balance of trade was wiped out, and the $126,664,000 we turned over to the Wilson administration was soon used up. Our exports fell off $158,000,000, and imports from foreign lands increased $100,000,000. Had the Payne-Aldrich law continued in force the Treasury Department would have collected $500,000,000 more at our customhouses and the direct taxes provided in the pending bill would have been unnecessary.

The coming of the horrible war in Europe saved our country from one of the most disastrous business, commercial, and financial panics in the history of the world; yet, in the face of this record, certain gentlemen on the other side of the House condemn the Payne-Aldrich tariff law and praise the Underwood tariff law and insist that we shall live under it when the war closes in Europe. What we insist upon is not only an adequate Army and Navy, but we insist upon wise and patriotic legis-lation which will protect the American workshop and the American wage earner against cheap competition from abroad. [Applause on the Republican side.]

FREE LIST.

The following is a list of manufactured goods and products on the free list-shipped into the United States by our foreign competitors without paying any tax or tariff duty to the American Government:

Bagging, barbed wire, leather belting, Bibles, blankets, books, boots, brass, burlaps, cash registers, cast-iron pipe, cement, coal, coke, copper plates, bars, ingots or pigs, cotton gins, dyestuffs, fencing, barbed and galvanized wire, flat rails, iron and steel, galvanized wire, glass plates, gloves, granite, gunpowder, handle bolts, sewing machines, harness, harvesters, hides, hoop iron or steel, horseshoes and nails, ingots, iron ore, iron or steel bands, iron and steel billets, iron or steel nails, rails, and scrap, leather, boots and shoes, harness, saddles, linotype machines, loops of iron, lumber, certain machines, mowers, nails, needles, paper, pigs, copper, iron pipe, cast iron, plows, printing paper, pulp woods, rails, flat, iron or steel, railway bars, iron or steel, reapers, shingles, shoes, sole leather, spikes, staves, T rails, iron or steel, tacks, thrashing machines, type-setting machines, typewriters, wagons and carts, wire, barbed fence, galvanized nails, staples, wood pulp, wrought and cast iron, wrought-iron and steel nails

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, it is remarkable to me how difficult it is for one to see who does not wish to see. I could not help thinking when the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] was talking about poverty-stricken England under what he called her free-trade laws, of how he closed his eyes about the conditions that prevail in Italy, France, and Germany under what he calls protective-tariff laws. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The truth is, every time a tariff bill comes up those gentlemen are urging American workmen be protected from the pauper labor of Italy, Germany, and France, which have high-tariff laws. Knowing the unfairness of the comparison, you select America, the country having the richest resources and lightest burdens of taxation, to compare with England, instead of comparing England with other countries similarly situated. You know that England to-day has the highest wages of any European country and has more progress and more prosperity. Of course, you prefer to compare England with America. Now, I want to take up, not having had an opportunity to discuss this measure, the question of the methods of taxation involved in this law. It is easy to show that wealth always prefers indirect taxation as by a tariff to direct taxes, because the tariff places the burden of taxation upon the shoulders of the poor and the reasonably well to do, and wealth escapes. Now, the most just tax on earth up to this tax was the income tax. I would rather to-day pay a tax of 10 per cent on my net income than 1 per cent on my assets. I would rather pay a tax of 50 per cent on the excess profits under this bill than to pay a tax of 1 per cent on my assets. But because this is the richest and wealthiest country in the world, whenever you try to reach great wealth by taxation it is objected to. This is not a sectional issue. In a measure it is a class issue. It seeks to place some proportion of the burdens of taxation on the wealth, the specially great wealth, of this country. you tax an income over and above the reasonable expenditures of the family, you have taxed competency and efficiency. you put a tax on the shoulders and the backs of the poor you are taxing poverty, as you do under a tariff, but when you go further, as this bill does, and propose to tax wealth at all you have a fight. This bill allows to the wealthy man all his current expenditures and then $5,000 flat, and then 8 per cent net profits on his whole investment, and then puts a tax upon the excess profits. When you strike the class affected at all by this law, you strike a class which always, by reason of some unjust or unfair law or practice, has made a profit in excess of a reasonable profit, and I want to tell you right now, you watch what I am saying. It is not a north or south or east or west question. Oh, you say, this tax comes from the North. It does not. You say it will shift down to the shoulders of the poorer That is true, as far as it can be made to do it; but the fact is, an income tax is the most difficult to shift to the shoulders of the poor, and that is the reason why great aggregations of wealth always oppose it, and the fact that it will be almost impossible to shift this excess profits tax to the shoulders of the poor is the reason why we find a solid array on that side of the House, and the gentleman from the South, from Tennessee, talking against it. The gentleman from Tennessee talks about taxing the manufacturing industries of the South, and I have even heard gentlemen here talk about this bill being a tax on widows and orphans who own stocks and shares in great corporations.

Well, even widows and orphans when their shares make a net profit, after paying all taxes, insurance, interest, and a flat $5,000, in excess of 8 per cent, are not going to complain. But we know that the money and the assets of the widow and the orphan are most generally invested in stocks and credits on which they do not get 4 per cent, and it is crocodile tears these gentlemen are shedding over the woes of the widow and orphan under the tax in this bill. Now, you talk about threats to shift this burden to the backs of the poor at last. I want to give gentlemen who represent the big interests a little warning. The time will come, if poverty is still burdened harder and harder by the ingenuity of wealth, when the masses will rise, and they will make income taxes not what they are but far more, and make this excess tax not an eighth, but more. I want to tell you that some plan will be devised to make wealth pay its just proportion of taxes, and this is the best plan yet suggested. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to revise and extend

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 204. That corporations exempt from tax under the provisions of section 11 of Title I of the act approved September 8, 1916, and partnerships carrying on or doing the same business shall be exempt from the provisions of this title, and the tax imposed by this title shall not attach to incomes of partnerships derived from agriculture or from personal services.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out at the bottom of page 5, line 25, beginning with the word "and," the remainder of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 25, after the word "title" strike out the remainder of the section.

Mr. KITCHIN. Can we not agree on this to limit the debate to 10 minutes, I to take 2 minutes and you gentlemen to take 8? Mr. MEEKER. That is satisfactory.

Mr. KITCHIN. Then I ask that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments to the paragraph shall end in 10 minutes. objection?

objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment will assist the patriotic gentlemen who seem to think they have a monopoly on it, those who sit on the other side of the aisle, in raising more funds. This is not to cut out income, but this is to add And inasmuch as most of the ranchmen are from Texas and Oklahoma and out through that country, and the sugar planters, through partnerships, have more than $5,000 income, we might see a patriotic uprising here on the part of the ruralists once in a while. It has been very interesting, all the way through, to see that the patriotism comes from the rural districts but the funds from the cities. So this little proviso or exemption you have slipped into this bill because you do not want to tax the peasantry. We all know how much of a peasant is a farmer whose income is over $5,000. We all know what a humble life the members of an agricutural partnership live, who can only make $5,000 clear, traveling around in Cadillac automobiles and things of that sort, while the storekeepers in the town, who have partnerships, that may not make as much money as the farmer makes, will, under this bill, be compelled to come in and pay their share. The only reason that the farmer is exempted is not because of your particular fear of any peasant being affected by this, for you know it is not true. But it is the same old bunk and piffle that we have heard here for the last two years. You have voted millions to aid the farmer and the agriculturist, but you have not the nerve to take a cent away from the rich farmer to make him help pay the bill. If you just strike this out we will see how patriotic you are, you from the short-grass country and down amongst the sugar-cane districts of the South and out in Texas.

Now, as to your personal service. Your good friend who in some way or other never heard of a leak, though he made a million by accident; we have a sworn statement of how much he made in one day, so we can get a part of it. Attorneys. physicians, dentists, and of all these men who during this socalled Democratic prosperity which we are enjoying, and which I prefer to call "European prosperity in America," the men who, if anybody, are making money by the millions and tens of millions, are the brokers of this country who are dealing in "war babies." All we need to do is to cut this out and they "war babies." All we need to do is to cut this out and they will pay their share. Leave it in and they will be exempt. This does not reduce your income; it increases it. It does not take a penny from any poor farmer.

I have gotten tired of that kind of talk here on the floor of the House. As to this exemption of $5,000, you can not give one single, sane reason why you should compel two men operating a store in a partnership that will make over $5,000 a year to pay, while two men operating a farm at the edge of the same town, or a sheep ranch, who may clear $100,000 a year will go [Applause on the Republican side.] It is the absoscot free. lute absurdity of the situation that appeals to me. Talk about justice! There is not a man on this side of the floor who dares to say that that bill all the way through pretends to be a just law in the way of collecting taxes. You do not defend it on that ground. Your only defense is that you must have the money. And were it not for that you could not get a corporal's guard on that side of the aisle to vote for the bill, and you the CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MEEKER. I ask for two minutes more.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman has used 5 minutes. The debate is limited to 10.

Mr. MEEKER. I ask for two minutes more, then.
The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MEEKER. Now, then, you have tried to leave the silly impression on this country that the men on the other side of the aisle, the Republicans, are opposing this bill because they do not want to pay their debts and their obligations. Do not forget the fact, gentlemen, that since 1896, when we fought out the question of paying 100 cents on the dollar, the country has understood who stands for paying their debts. [Applause on the Republican side.] Here is the point: We are not objecting to the appropriation for protection, but you men are insisting on putting the American manufacturer at an additional disadvantage by not only refusing to compel the foreign merchant to pay his just share of these taxes, but by laying an additional tax burden on the American manufacturer and producer and merchant above what we already have.

Never have I heard a man on that side of this floor since I have been here who has stood up for the American manufacturer as against the foreign manufacturer. [Applause on the Republican side]. We have never yet, and we never will. hold in my hand a letter which I wish to extend in the RECORD. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to extend my remarks by putting this in the RECORD to show how a manufacturing concern feels as to who will pay this tax. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record by printing the letter referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the letter referred to:

St. Louis. Mo., January 30, 1917.

Hon. Jacob Merker, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CONGRESSMAN: We noticed last night by the papers that there is a bill either now before Congress or will be introduced which provides for a tax on profits of corporations in excess of 8 per cent of the capital and an addition of $5,000 in addition to all other Federal

We hope you will oppose the passing of this bill. If enacted into law, it will cause legitimate business corporations a great deal of inconvenience and expense, at least for a year or two, until they can raise their prices enough to cover their additional expense. Ultimately this burden will be borne by the consumer and will increase the cost of living to that extent.

The effect of this law will be to increase the cost of living a great deal more than a protective tariff on imported goods, for the reason that the tariff on the imported goods, which is ultimately paid by the consumer, is effective and is paid only on the imported goods which the consumer uses, whereas this tax on excess profits of corporations will be a burden on every consumer, because the tax evidently is to apply on all kinds of corporations, those producing necessities as well as luxuries.

on all kinds of corporations, those producing necessities as well aluxuries.

We notice in one of the big Chicago daily papers the statement is made that it was the intention of the committee where this bill originated to fix the law so that it would apply mostly to the population north of the Mason and Dixon line. We don't know whether that statement is correct or not as to the intention of the framers of the bill, but the effect will be that the population of the entire country, no matter where living, will bear the burden ultimately as produced by this bill.

The inconvenience, however, resulting from the bill, if made a law, will be first felt by the management and stockholders of the larger corporations, to be passed on to the public as soon as possible.

Thanking you in advance for your consideration, we are.

Yours. very truly,

Loose-Wiles Biscuit Co.,

LOOSE-WILES BISCUIT Co., HANFORD MAIN, Sales Manager.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, of course I do not desire to reply to the real hostility which the gentleman from St. Louis [Mr. Meeker] holds against the country farmer. I have seen men from cities before, but not often in this House, who really "have it in" for those who live outside of the corporate limits of a big city. Of course, they want everybody living on the outside of the corporate limits of a big city to pay all the taxes and have no exemption. In fact, the gentleman is one of the few men that I have come in contact with who has a contempt for the man who lives out in the country, the farmer.

There are the two reasons that I gave the other day why we exempt agricultural copartnerships. The first is that we believe the governments of other countries refrain from taxing agriculture, and the second is that it is more difficult to administer such taxes in the farming business than anywhere else.

England in levying her excess profits tax exempts farmers. I understand Russia, France, and Germany in levying their excess profits tax exempt agriculture. England exempts the farmer that the gentleman from St. Louis has so much contempt for, this fellow who lives out in the country and is making a living for himself and his wife and family and furnishes the food supply for the people who live in cities like St. Louis and for all mankind. [Laughter.]

We exempt the copartnership income from personal service, because personal-service incomes of corporation officers are not taxable under this bill. For instance, we wanted to put the members of a copartnership or firm in the same status as the members of a copartnership or firm in the same status as the managers of large corporations. You say here that a man who receives $50 (2.2), if we had not exempted him, would be taxed. If a lawyer ross into a corporation like a big insurance company, or if he is a big stockholder, and he is paid $50,000 for his personal services, he would not have to pay a tax on his income from personal services under this bill, but both the partner and the corporation officer will have to pay their income tax upon their net income. That is the reason why we exempted the personal services. I hope the amendment will be voted down

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word if the debate on that section has not been closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate on that section has been closed, the Chair will say to the gentleman. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Sc. 205. That every corporation having a net income of $5,000 or more for the taxable year making a return under Title I of such act of September S, 1916, shall for the purposes of this title include in such return a detailed statement of the actual capital invested.

Every partnership having a net income of $5,000 or more for the taxable year shall render a correct return of the income of the partnership for the taxable year, setting forth specifically the actual capital invested and the gross income for such year and the deductions hereinafter allowed. Such returns shall be rendered at the same time and in the same manner and form as is prescribed for income-tax returns under Title I of such act of September S, 1916. In computing net income of the partnership for the purposes of this title there shall be allowed like deductions as are allowed to individuals in sections 5 (a) and 6 (a) of such act of September S, 1916.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would like to offer something more than a formal amendment to this section if I thought there would be any use in offering it. Its provisions are so unfair, so unjust, with reference to its exemptions that I am at a loss to understand how any gentleman in this House can afford to vote for it.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], the distinguished chairman of the committee to which I belong, stated to-day that the opposition to this bill from the gentlemen upon this side was based solely upon the ground that we are in favor of indirect taxation. He also stated that the only complaint that was made upon this bill with reference to extravagance was with reference to the river and harbor bill and appropriations for post-office buildings. The gentleman was entirely mis-taken so far as his statement applies to myself. The gentleman probably made the statement unwittingly, because fortunately or unfortunately he did not hear the remarks I made yesterday. I did not object to this bill solely on account of the general character of its taxation nor on account of the items he mentions. I objected to this bill because its provisions are so unfair and unjust, because it is so unfair between those which are exempt and those which are taxed, because it is so unfair between those classes that are taxed, that no man can justify the bill.

The gentleman from North Carolina in speaking a moment ago referred to firms of lawyers. I wish to call attention to a firm in the city where I live, one making $50,000 a year by professional services, and another, a commercial partnership with four partners, each making something like $10,000 or $15,000 a year. These gentleman who are members of a law firm, because their incomes are derived solely from professional services, will pay nothing under this bill, whereas those in the commercial organization, although their incomes are derived from personal services and perhaps largely from the service which the partners render, have to pay a high tax under this bill. Is there anyone who can justify a tax measure which is imposed in accordance with such a plan?

I say "plan," but there is really no plan in this bill, no theory, when it exempts entirely the income of individuals. The gentleman said the other day, when he opened this debate, that other countries did this. What other country? England or Germany or France? This is not an excess profit tax in any just sense of the term. It is not a tax on what a man might receive over and above the profits of a normal year. It is simply bit or miss catch as catch can here and there measure with a hit or miss, catch as catch can, here and there measure, without any just plan, or rhyme or reason, or right. Certain persons who happen to receive an income from their business of over $5,000 and 8 per cent on their capital, however small it may be, are taxed.

Here is a little partnership who use, say $20,000 in their business. They have only $10,000 of their own, and they borrow the rest of it. Did the gentleman ever figure out how much taxes they would pay if they happened to make $10,000, which, divided among the four partners, if there were four partners, would give them only $2,500 apiece. Why, they would pay somewhere between $200 and $300, nearer the latter sum. Right across the street from them is another man carrying on exactly this same business, but owning it individually. He would not pay a cent under this bill. Is there anyone who can justify the imposition of this tax upon any such principle as that? Why have they done it? Simply because they hoped it would reach so few in its operation that there would not be a great amount of complaint. The gentleman from North Carolina said the other day that there would be a great deal of denunciation of this tax. That part of his statement was true, and when he and other gentlemen go home, after having voted for this bill, and are shown these inequalities, they will hear from their constituents. The American people have been carelessly, thoughtlessly, and often willingly and patriotically, paying their taxes. Each patriotic citizen ought to be willing to pay his taxes, and doubtless he is, but he wants other men in the same circumstances to pay the same amount that he does, and the people will demand [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I really want to get a little information. Take the case where there is a corporation with, say, $1,000,000 capital invested and a partnership of the same amount, and each makes a profit of $100,000 before any salaries are paid. Of course, in the partnership you can not pay salaries, I take it; but the corporation can pay salaries and usually does. The corporation pays salaries enough to absorb all of the profits above the 8 per cent and the $5,000. Now, does this bill in such a case as that discriminate in favor of the corporation as against the partnership?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; I would not take it that way. I would say that the copartnership could pay reasonable salaries also to each one of the partners in a business like a mercantile or manufacturing business, just as a corporation pays its officers. Frequently they do. But take both cases that the gentleman puts; they are subject to the operation of the income-tax law.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no-

Mr. KITCHIN. Wait a minute.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken about that, because the income-tax law does not apply to partnerships at all. It applies to partners, not to partnerships.

Mr. KITCHIN. It applies to corporations, and we put corporations and copartnerships on the same terms of equality in Now, the members of a copartnership can pay reasonable salaries. If, in the case of the corporation, they can charge enough to absorb all except 8 per cent, why, they could do it now under the income-tax law and absorb all the income; but they are not permitted to do that. They can get around the income tax just as much as they can get around the excess profits tax.

Mr. MANN. They are permitted to pay reasonable salaries to corporation officers.

Mr. KITCHIN. But that is not the proposition the gentleman put. The gentleman said suppose they should go on and raise the salaries enough to absorb all the profits.

Mr. MANN. I did not say anything about raising salaries.

Mr. KITCHIN. Or giving them salaries.

Mr. MANN. I said paying ordinary, reasonable salaries. Mr. KITCHIN. No; the gentleman did not say that. Mr. MANN. I said, "pay salaries." I assumed that. I d I assumed that. I did not say anything about raising salaries.

Mr. KITCHIN. No; the gentleman said pay them enough to absorb all except 8 per cent.

That would be only $20,000, which would not be Mr. MANN. exorbitant in the case I put.

Mr. KITCHIN. Will the gentleman put the case, then?

Mr. MANN. I did put the case. In the case of the partners. they agree among themselves that each one will draw out so That is all right. That is not the payment of a salary. A paftner gets a profit for his services and investment, whatever it may be. He may get a credit on the books, but how can the partners as against this law pay salaries to themselves?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will answer the gentleman. In a business copartnership, of course they might hire some one to attend to the business and go away and give more attention to something else, and in such a case they could not pay salaries to themselves, but if, instead of hiring some one to do it, they should perform the services themselves, they would be allowed under the law a reasonable amount for salaries as a part of their operating expenses before beginning to compute net profits, exactly as in the case of a corporation.

Mr. MANN. I hope that the Treasury Department will not only read this statement of the gentleman from North Carolina, but that they will cut it out and paste it on the wall in front of them, and construe the law in that way. I am very confident no law has ever been construed in that way before.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am just as confident, as I am that I am here, that they will not construe it in any other way.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman is right.

Mr. KITCHIN. I thought about that. We thrashed that over, and I am pretty certain that the present Treasury Depart-1 ment would construe it that way, because it is right and just, and they ought to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I listened with a great deal of interest to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] and also to the gentleman from Wisconsin yesterday, when they ridiculed in the most scathing language the idea, that the foreign producer would ever, under any circumstances, pay any portion of the tariff tax. Now, I propose in the few minutes I have to discuss this question of a tariff simply as a revenue producer without any reference to the question of protection.

When the Underwood tariff bill was passed the Treasury of the United States was deprived of over $200,000,000 of revenue, which might have paid the deficit caused by the appropriations made by the Democratic majority. Now, if the gentleman from North Carolina and the gentleman from Wisconsin are correct the people of this country, by the passage of the Underwood tariff bill, were relieved of over $200,000,000 of taxes on consumption. I challenge any man on the Democratic side to state any commodity that was reduced in price to the American consumer as the result of the passage of the Underwood tariff law. [Applause on the Republican side.] Now, if the price was not reduced, who profited by the taking off of the tariff tax? There is only one answer—the foreign producer. Let me give you one example. Time will not permit me to give more. This is an illustration that applies right in New England. The Payne-This is an Aldrich law levied a duty of $4 a ton on hay coming from Canada. The Underwood bill reduced that tax to $2 a ton. Hay sold for just the same price. Who profited? There is only one answer—the Canadian producer of hay. I do not pretend to say what the causes are for the present economic conditions of the world, but I know, and every man who has studied the question knows, that the conditions being as they are and as they will be after the close of the European war, if you should try to raise this revenue, as we suggest, by increasing tariff duties, the foreign producer would pay a very large part of the $200,000,000 which you refuse to raise in that way. [Applause on the Republican side.] We on the Republican side of the House simply say that we would raise this money by a tariff tax on competitive articles and thus get the revenue; make the foreign producer pay a part of the expenses of our Government and at the same time put this country in a position to meet the terrific competition that is certain to come when the European war closes. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 207. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall make all necessary regulations for carrying out the provisions of this title, and may require any corporation or partnership subject to the provisions of this title to furnish him with such facts, data, and information as in his judgment are necessary to collect the tax provided for in this title.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out all of Title II.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all of Title II, beginning with line 22, page 2, down to and including line 15, on page 7.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio if we can not limit the debate. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. LONGWORTH. So far as I am concerned, I only want five minutes. I have already gone into the merits of the question.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that all debate close in 25 minutes on the title and amendments thereto, and that the gentleman from Ohio may control 15 minutes and I 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on the title and amendments thereto close in 25 minutes, 15 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Longworth] and 10 minutes by himself. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the effect of this amendment, if adopted, will be to strike from this bill what I regard as its most obnoxious provision, to wit, the tax imposed upon excess profits.

The gentleman from North Carolina this morning, in his very eloquent speech, laid down an entirely novel proposition. effect of his statement was that in any revenue bill brought in by one party, which happened to be in power, to raise revenue made necessary for any reason, whether by extravagance, as in this case, or revenue necessary to support the Government, that objection to that form of taxation was unpatriotic. He said that it was the part of patriotism for this side to support every item in this bill whether we agreed with it or not. Is it not apparent that the logical conclusion of that proposition would have led the gentleman from North Carolina to have voted for the Payne bill in this House, whereas his vote in favor of that bill was conspicuous by its absence, as I recall. We are opposed to all of this bill, but we are opposed particularly to that section in it which lays a direct tax on efficiency of production.

Let me call the attention of gentlemen to one class of corporations which will be particularly injuriously affected by this excess-profit tax. I refer to those corporations which desseminate throughout the country information for the use of the people. Newspapers above all other corporations will be called upon to pay this tax. Why? Because under the terms of this bill no corporation engaged in publishing a newspaper can take into consideration the value of its good will; in other words, that which makes a newspaper a success-enterprise, economy of management, and ability of management-is taxed in this bill. The plant of a newspaper is relatively of small signifi-Probably in the average newspaper of this country its actual plant is not 20 per cent of its value as a going institution. And yet, under this bill no newspaper can consider as a part of the capital upon which these excess taxes are imposed anything except cash value of the plant and of its assets. There is not a newspaper published in this country, I venture to say, which is a going concern, that does not make more than per cent on its capital as provided in this bill, and I do not think this is a wise or a proper time to put a heavy tax upon the newspapers of this country when you consider that they are called upon to pay twice as much this year for print paper as they paid last year.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I was about to ask the gentleman that question. Does the gentleman place any de-pendence upon the statements of the newspapers at this time that the cost of paper renders it impossible for them to make any money? If that is so, how does the gentleman believe that they are in danger of paying the excess-profit tax provided for in this bill?

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman pleases, every newspaper in this country depends for its success upon the ability and efficiency of its management. Now, at this particular time when they are under that disadvantage of having to pay twice as much for raw material, is it not a poor time to come in and tax them more? I do not believe in these taxes imposed upon partnerships or individuals It is a tax on efficiency and not a tax on the magnitude of operations.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I believe the gentleman from Texas said that he would not object to a 50 per cent tax in this bill.

said that he would not object to a 30 per cent dix in this bill.

It would not strike him at all, would it?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Not at all. Now, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KREIDER].

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Chairman, I shall not speak against the methods of taxation embodled in this bill, but I desire to the methods of taxation embodled in this bill, but I desire the methods of taxation embodled in this bill, but I desire the methods of taxation embodled in this bill, but I desire the methods of taxation embodled in this bill, but I desire the methods of taxation embodled in this bill, but I desire the methods of taxation embodled in this bill, but I desire the methods of taxation embodled in this bill. call the attention of our Democratic friends who are responsible for the legislation enacted in the Sixty-third and Sixty-fourth Congresses to a few facts that seem to be pertinent. I do not want to speak from a partisan standpoint, but I would like to call their attention with all sincerity to the condition of the country. I take it that the passage of this bill is intended to bring in a revenue to the Government not only for the year of 1917 but for the years to come.

I want to call your attention to the fact, which you know, that in this country at this time the prices of labor, of commodities, of food, of everything that we eat and use, everything that is bought and sold, have been doubled and redoubled. Our manufacturing industries have been run to their fullest capacity; in fact, they have doubled up on their capacity, and profits have been abnormal and enormous, and no doubt at the present time this bill will bring in a large revenue; but let me call your attention to the fact that the European countries that are now engaged in war have not dismanifed their mills, nor their factories, but, if the press reports can be believed. they are producing and manufacturing more goods in the belligerent countries such as England and France than they were When the millions of men now in the Army before the war. return from the trenches, together with the men who are now engaged in supplying those in the trenches with munitions of war and the sustenance which they need, join the army now engaged in useful production, where do you suppose these people will find a market for their goods? They will be upon my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann].

a low basis of cost, whereas in the United States we will be upon an extremely high level and basis of cost. Do you think for one moment that we can compete in neutral markets and hold our trade? Do you think for a moment that we can even command and retain our own markets for our own industries? Why, gentlemen, you know that every civilized country on earth to-day has a protective tariff, with the exception of England: and England, the defender and champion of free trade, is now preparing to build up her industries and the foundation of that industrial structure will be her own home market, and the chief corner stone of it will be a protective tariff. Is this country to open her market to the manufacturers of the world while all other countries protect their markets by tariff laws? Gentlemen, if we needed a protective tariff for no other purpose, we need it for the purpose of making reciprocal treaty relations with foreign countries that do have protective tariff laws, so as to give our industries and our labor such advantages as may be gained by these treaties. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. Kent].
Mr. KENT. Mr. Chairman, if I were talking for myself as an individual I certainly would be opposed to this bill. It is an attempt to secure money, necessary money, and necessarily from those that have it. It has been alleged that it is a tax on efficiency, and those who advocate that the bill should be beaten because it is a tax on efficiency at the same time stand for a protective tariff, which often means a bounty on inefficiency. [Applause on the Democratic side.] What we ought to have is I do not see how we are going to get it a tax on privilege. right away, and all we can do is to obtain it step by step. This tax is a hard tax upon any man with property to die under, but at the same time we must realize that the right of inheritance is one that is furnished only by the protection of society, and therefore we can have no more righteous tax than a tax to protect the society that protects the dead man in transferring his property to posterity.

All of us have been guilty of voting for bills that are called extravagant, we all have been scared by the war situation, and I do not think we have been wrong or cowardly in our scare. We have all known that this country is upon the verge of trouble, and I, who have advocated every possible means of keeping out of trouble, have felt in duty bound to stand for such measures that recognize the necessity for preparedness and such as will help us to be adequately ready for trouble if it is forced upon us. If there has been extravagance we are all of us to blame. Here and now I as a nonpartisan wish to state that I have seldom seen a bill representing fool extravagance emanate from the Democratic side of the House that did not get a measure of enthusiastic support from the Republican side, and oftentimes that support was confessedly dishonest and furnished for the specific object of putting the Democratic Party in a hole. TADplause on the Democratic side.] I make this statement deliberately and as a matter of my own knowledge. Here we are together, Democrats and Republicans, and I humbly and incidentally in the middle of the road, facing a tremendous deficit. How are we going to get funds? Are we going to get them by taxing those that can afford to pay by a direct tax that our people will feel and that will make them call for an accounting, or are we going upon the absurd assumption urged by some Republicans that the foreigner can be made to pay our taxes for us? I claim that the best way we can raise revenue at a time like this is to put the tax directly upon the people that can afford to pay and to make them realize thereby that they are responsible for the situation in which we find ourselves, in so far as they are responsible. In such case they will call for an accounting of methods of expenditure of the taxes levied. The protective tariff is an indirect method and, to my mind, a cowardly method of providing revenue, although I have much sympathy with the idea of fostering industries that ought to be encouraged, if by a start given by such protection they can eventually become strong and self-supporting; but under other conditions the protective tariff bears most heavily upon those least able to bear it.

This bill, with all its faults-and I could criticize it in many of its details-levies a direct tax upon existing wealth that is going to drive into our people the necessity of knowing the state of our public affairs, a knowledge of what is needed for pre-paredness, and will force those who have a surplus to pay the

I as a person in the class of those who have a surplus am glad to be able to make my contribution to the Nation's needs through this direct taxation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I should not have arisen at all except for the speech of the gentleman from California [Mr. Kent] and one statement that he made therein. Of course he and I do not agree on the tariff system. I am not going to discuss that. I understood the gentleman to say, and he said that he spoke from his own knowledge, that Republicans had fre-quently voted for appropriations in order to put the Democrats in a hole. The gentleman may have so voted himself, not as a Republican but as representing Independents. I say the statement is absolutely without foundation in fact, so far as the Republican side of the House is concerned. [Applause on the Republican side.] I think I can speak with some knowledge. I am here in the House and have given attention to appropriations in the House, close attention, for many years. There is always a disposition on the part of Members on each side to vote with the Member of their own side who offers an amendment. As I say, the gentleman from California can speak for himself, not for the Republicans; but I can speak for the Republican side of the House, and I speak with knowledge, and I know that we have never voted for appropriations unless we believed the granting of the appropriations was for the benefit of the country itself. [Applause on the Republican side.]
Mr. KENT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. KENT. Did the gentleman vote for the original Shackleford good-roads bill in the Sixty-second Congress?

Mr. MANN. I do not remember whether I did or not. I know the gentleman did not believe in it. Mr. KENT.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken. I made a speech on the subject.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from California is rarely here to testify.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from California is speaking wildly. I did not vote for the roads bill the last time. I said when the first roads bill was before the House that the cities in normal times could well afford to help the country. I be-lieved it then, and I believe it now. The gentleman from California, as highly as I regard him, does not carry my conscience within his

Mr. KENT. I would hate to have the job. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Well, it would improve the gentleman's conscience very considerably. The gentleman from California have ing found he made a misstatement, now gets surly about it, I regret to say

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, has the gentleman on the other side consumed all his time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has one minute remaining, Mr. LONGWORTH. I yield the gentleman that one minute. Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will be voted down because the provision is very vital to the bill. The gentelman from Ohio [Mr. Longworth] moves to strike out the excess-profit tax, which is very vital to the bill, and I hope the committee will vote down his proposition emphatically. call for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were-ayes 129, noes 146.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers (Mr. Mann and Mr. Allen) announced that there were—ayes 142, noes 191.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE III .- ESTATE TAX.

TITLE III.—ESTATE TAX.

SEC. 300. That section 201, Title II, of the act entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," approved September 8, 1916, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 201. That a tax (hereinafter in this title referred to as the tax), equal to the following percentages of the value of the net estate, to be determined as provided in section 203, is hereby imposed upon the transfer of the net estate of every decedent dying after the passage of this act, whether a resident or nonresident of the United States:

"One and one-half per cent of the amount of such net estate not in excess of $50,000;

"Three per cent of the amount by which such net estate exceeds $50,000 and does not exceed $150,000;

"Four and one-half per cent of the amount by which such net estate exceeds $150,000 and does not exceed $450,000;

"Six per cent of the amount by which such net estate exceeds $250,000 and does not exceed $450,000;

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, on page 8,

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 8, by striking out lines 4 and 5.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, it is proposed by this paragraph-Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman proceeds, can not we have some time limit within which we may make amendments and discuss this section? Mr. MANN. We would like to have 20 minutes on this side on the section.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I will ask that all debate of the section and all amendments thereto close in 25 minutes, 20 minutes to the other side and 5 minutes for this.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and amendments thereto close in 25 minutes. Is there objection? [After

The Chair hears none.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, it has been said very many times in this debate that the tax would not be upon the poor people, but upon those best able to pay. Under this provision of the bill every estate, if it does not amount to more than $100, is compelled to pay a tax of 1½ per cent on that estate. It is a proposition to tax the widow's mite and the orphan's pittance. The expense alone of enforcing this provision upon small estates would be more in very many cases than the amount realized. It is, in my judgment, the most unjust provision in this entire A widow left with nothing but her homestead worth $1,000 would be compelled to pay, under this provision, an inheritance tax of 1½ per cent, or $15 upon her little homestead before she had a clear title to it. I insist that if there is any justice in this kind of legislation that there should be a limit of exemption where estates would not be taxed. In very many cases, probably in the great majority of cases, the estates are very small, and it would be a hardship such as we have never before known in any taxing system if a widow left with a small estate of a few hundred dollars or a thousand dollars was compelled to pay this tax.

Mr. HELVERING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I will.

Mr. HELVERING. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that there is a $50,000 exemption in this bill?

Mr. FULLER. No; there is no exemption whatever under this provision. It says "1½ per cent of the amount of such net estate not in excess of $50,000." When it exceeds $50,000 up to $150,000, it is 3 per cent.

Mr. HELVERING. I will say to the gentleman before the net estate tax commences to apply there is a $50,000 exemption.

Mr. FULLER. There is no exemption provided by this bill if as a lawyer I am able to read. It is 1½ per cent of the amount of such net estate not in excess of $50,000. That is the first provision. That is what I propose to strike out, and then it would leave the exemption of $50,000 as claimed.

Mr. HELVERING. If the gentleman will allow, I will say that the same exemption applies to this law as applied to the tax law which we passed a year ago, and there is a $50,000 exemption before any tax applies.

Mr. FULLER. Then why this provision? It certainly should be stricken out, because it would have no place in the bill. Under this bill the provision reads that all estates not in excess of $50,000 shall pay a tax of 1½ per cent.

If you are correct in your opinion, then this amendment certainly should prevail. I think there should be an exemption of $50,000, as in the former law.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that. The old law read "1 per cent of the amount of such net estate," meaning the amount above $50,000. Now they have made this, instead of 1 per cent, 11 per cent, increasing it 50 per cent.

Mr. FULLER. Where is the exemption here?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is in the further provisions of the law that we enacted, in the last revenue law.

Mr. FULLER. It rewrites this section 201?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. To which this is an amendment, as the gentleman well understands. It amends the provisions of the former law so as to read in the manner that is now provided in this law.

Mr. FULLER. Then, there can be no objection to striking out this provision, and then it would be clear, because the next clause provides for a tax on an amount in excess of $50,000.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No. This provision here applies to the amount above $50,000, reaching up to $100,000, if you take all the law together. The trouble is we have got only a small proportion of the law before us in this bill. The rest of it is found in the bill that we enacted last year.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr GREEN of Iowa, Yes

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Can the gentleman tell me what section of the act of last year contains the exemptions? Was it section 201?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is in section 203. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary in-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I wish to offer an amendment to this section—a different amendment—and, as I understand, some time has been provided for me. At what point should it be offered? After this amendment is disposed of?

The CHAIRMAN. Heretofore amendments have been offered under similar agreement and considered as pending. The Chair will recognize the gentleman now for offering an amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will offer an amendment and then be heard on it later.

Mr. KITCHIN. Offer it and let it be pending.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Green of Iowa: Page 9, after line 2, insert a new paragraph, as follows:
"Sec. 203. Paragraph 2 of subdivision 8. An exemption of $50,000 and a further exemption of such a sum, if any, as shall be devised or bequeathed solely for public, benevolent, or charitable uses or pur-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire recognition? Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, in the reading of this amendment, which is hardly intelligible by itself, the committee will need to bear in mind that we are amending the law which we enacted last year by reference to the provisions of that bill. I offer now a further amendment to one of the sections in the

Among the exemptions in the old law was one for $50,000 before any tax could be imposed at all. My amendment adds to this a further provision to the effect that any sum bequeathed for charitable, benevolent, or public purposes shall also be exempted.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it was said by one speaker here that we had reached so far in our taxation in order to carry on the expenses of this Government that it was necessary to rob the cradle and the grave. However correct that may be, we certainly have reached a point, as the law now stands, so that we are taxing our hospitals, we are taxing our homes for the aged, we are taxing any sum that is offered for benevolent and public purposes whatever. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Kitchin], in his very able speech on yesterday, said that this tax was patterned after the tax which has been imposed by the Governments of Europe. I do not know of any Government that has gotten so far in its system of taxation that it has felt compelled to tax the sums that are to go to hospitals or to charitable purposes generally. If so, I have not been able to find it. But, if that is true, the extravagance of this administration has brought us to a point where we are lower even than Governments which are engaged in a life and death struggle to maintain their very existence, and grasping for every possible resource in the way of tax. What excuse can be given for this provision? Why should we tax these sums that go entirely for benevolent purposes, and then afterwards award some public help to those who would otherwise be benefited by them? This provision is like the other provisions of the bill. It is without excuse or justification. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman— The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I wish in the time I have to call attention to the amount of tax which the State of Oklahoma paid in 1916. Oklahoma is a new State, Under the ordinary internal-revenue tax her people paid $31,251.57 in taxation. But under the emergency-revenue act and the income tax on corporations and individuals, under act of October 3, 1913, she paid $1,336,000 in 1916. In all direct internal-revenue taxes Oklahoma in 1916 paid $1,361,289.06. In 1917, under the act of September 8, 1916, the direct taxes of Oklahoma to support the Federal Government practically will be doubled, making us a tax for 1917 of probably $3,000,000. And under this new act we are now about to pass we may add more than half a million more, requiring the people of Oklahoma under your system of taxation to pay nearly $4,000,000 of direct taxes. We, of course, do not stand with great States like New York and Illinois and Pennsylvania in the amount of taxes we pay, but the amount of taxes we pay make a remarkable showing compared with the amount paid by many States, and are an index to our great natural resources, our extensive business, and progressive character of our citizens. With less than 10 years of Statehood Oklahoma is contributing a highly creditable amount to support the Federal Government. To show this let There were 31 States in this Union me make some comparisons. in 1916 that paid less individual-income tax than was paid by the people of Oklahoma. In the Union as a sovereign State less than 10 years, yet in the personal-income tax paid the Federal Government 31 States trail behind Oklahoma. Twenty-four States paid less corporation-income tax than Oklahoma, and 21 States paid less of the so-called emergency revenue. Out of 22 States west of the Mississippi River only Texas, Missouri, Minnesota, and California paid more taxes under the individual-income tax last year than did Oklahoma. There are 10 States in this Union which, combined together, did not on the individualincome tax pay as much last year as did Oklahoma. These 10 States are Arizona, Arkansas, Idaho, Mississippi, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, South Dakota, Wyoming, and Utah. The total paid by these 10 States was $420,095.81.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Yes. Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I was much surprised to hear that Oklahoma paid more individual income tax than Iowa.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. That is true. Oklahoma paid more than Iowa, and more than the great State of Indiana, and more than Colorado. In 1916, Oklahoma, in individual income tax, paid $489,440.08, Iowa paid $277,098.45, and Indiana paid $410,320.06, and Colorado paid $342,478.80.

Think about that, my friends. Oklahoma, on the individual income tax, paid more than Indiana, more than Iowa, more than Colorado; three times as much as either West Virginia, Maine, or Nebraska; nearly three times as much as the State of Kentucky, four times as much as New Hampshire or Oregon, five times as much as Utah, six times as much as South Carolina, seven times as much as Mississippi, ten times as much as Idaho, seven times a twelve times as much as North Dakota, twenty-four times as much as South Dakota, and ninety-seven times more than was paid by Nevada. [Applause.]. The following Southern States, 12 in number, in 1916 paid less individual income tax than was paid by Oklahoma, namely, Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, South Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia, and West Virginia. Now, then, in all seriousness, if this direct tax was not levied upon the people of Oklahoma by the Federal Government the people there could utilize this tax upon this great wealth that we are building up in that great State to lift the burden off the taxpayers, who must support the State government and the county and city and other local governments. That is my chief objection to this system of taxation. I want to see this $3,000,000 used to relieve the burdens of our home taxpayers in support of the local governments.

I am glad, if I can not agree with my Democratic friends from Oklahoma as to the kind of taxation that we should levy, that we all agree that, for its age—Oklahoma has been only 10 years in the Union—the State of Oklahoma, in her wealth, in her resources, in her industries, and in the character of her people is not equaled by any other State in the Union. [Applause. 1

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment that I offered.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment of the gentleman is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am sorry, of course, that I can not agree with the gentlemen from Iowa [Mr. Green] and Oklahoma [Mr. Morgan]. I can not agree with them as to the method. I wish we could agree. I ask for a vote, Mr. Chairman. Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my amendment may be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Green of Iowa: On page 4, after line 2, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"SEC. 203. Paragraph 2 of subdivision (a). An exemption of $50,000, and the further exemption of such a sum, if any, as shall be devised or bequeathed solely for public, benevolent, or charitable uses or purposes."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

The question was taken, and the chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. A division, Mr. Chairman.
The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.
The committee divided; and there were—ayes 102, noes 127.

So the amendment was rejected. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE IV -- MISCELLANEOUS.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE IY.—MISCELLANEOUS.

SEC. 400. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to borrow on the credit of the United States from time to time such sums as in his judgment may be required to meet public expenditures on account of the Mexican situation, the construction of the armorplate plant, the construction of the Alaskan Railway, and the purchase of the Danish West Indies, or to reimburse the Treasury for such expenditures, and to prepare and issue therefor bonds of the United States not exceeding in the aggregate $100,000,000, in such form as he may prescribe, bearing interest payable quarterly at a rate not exceeding 3 per cent per annum; and such bonds shall be payable, principal and interest, in United States gold coin of the present standard of value, and both principal and interest shall be exempt from all taxes or duties of the United States as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority, and shall not be receivable by the Treasurer of the United States as security for the issue of circulating notes to national banks: Provided, That such bonds may be disposed of by the Secretary of the Treasury at not less than par, under such regulations as he may prescribe, glving all citizens of the United States an equal opportunity therefor, but no commissions shall be allowed or paid thereon; and a sum not exceeding one-tenth of 1 per cent of the amount of the bonds herein authorized is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to pay the expenses of preparing, advertising, and issuing the same: And provided further, That in addition to such issue of bonds the Secretary of the Treasury may prepare and issue for the purposes specified in this section any portion of the bonds of the United States now available for issue under authority of section 39 of the act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this is a bondissuing paragraph.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman from Pennsylvania begins, can we limit the time for debate on the amendment? Let us vote on it in five minutes. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I merely wish to speak for five minutes

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and amendments thereto close in 15 minutes

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] is recognized.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a great deal has been said about the policies of the two parties in the course We have now reached the bond-issuing paraof this debate. or this debate. We have now reached the bond-issuing paragraph of this bill. It is a sad story from the Democratic viewpoint. The next paragraph, relating to certificates of indebtedness, will be equally sad, because in each instance the dear old Democratic Party, that professes to believe in "paying as you go," is obliged to resort to Republican constructive measures to secure money to get itself out of debt. You find in this paragraph that the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to borrow money under the provisions of what may be briefly called the Spanish-American War act, which was unquestionably a Republican measure.

The President of the United States has had the power right along to issue certificates of indebtedness under that act, but he did not want to become a bond-issuing President.

In the paragraph under consideration authority is obtained was a Republican measure. It will be borne in mind that the Republicans passed the Panama Canal act, and that they did not issue all the bonds authorized under that act to construct the Panama Canal, but that they did take in money enough as they went along to pay as they went and to pay for the Panama Canal almost entirely out of the current revenues of the United States.

When the gentlemen on the other side want to contrast the constructive policies of the two parties they should remember that every bill that has been brought into this House from the Committee on Ways and Means since the Democrats have been in power has been a bill to tax the people to create revenue. They want to remember also that many of these taxes are being raised from the masses of the people, despite the fact that the Republican administration never had to tax the people directly. but provided always for the current expenses of the Government and for many permanent improvements, like the Panama Canal, out of revenues obtained for current expenses derived very largely from the much-berated Republican protective-tariff law.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman explain why this bond issue was not proposed last year instead of now?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The President had just as much authority last year to issue bonds as he has now; but the President was afraid to go to the country prior to the election with a bond issue staring him in the face. [Applause on the Republican side.] And the Democratic Party, knowing it would have to meet these deficiencies, knowing it would have to provide for greater deficiencies, waited until after the November election before it dared to bring this bill into the House

And is this all? My brothers upon the Republican side of the House, read the paragraphs that we are now approaching and observe that provision is being made for future expenditures, and discretion is being given to the Secretary of the Treasury. Then recur to page 2 and read the proviso beginning in line 18, where, after the issue of the Panama Canal bonds for the purpose of meeting the Mexican war expenditures, the Secretary of the Treasury is given authority to use the Mexican war funds as he may see fit "for other purposes." In other words, we are doing an extraordinary thing, a thing that would shame the legislature of an average State or the councilmanic body of an average municipality. We are giving to the Secretary of the Treasury the power to divert funds which are being voted now for the purpose of meeting expenditures upon the Mexican border, to use them "for other purposes," which other purposes can mean nothing else than new deficiencies that the Treasury will have to meet, despite the enormous taxes that we are now about to levy to meet the present emergency. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] is recognized for five

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section and to insert a new section in lieu thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Good: Strike out section 400, beginning in line 9, page 9, and ending in line 4, page 11, and substitute the following:

"SEC. 400. That there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all distilled spirits in bond at the time of the passage of this act, or that have been or that may be then or thereafter produced in the United States, on which the tax is not paid before that day, a tax of $1.25 on each proof gallon or wine gallon then below proof, and a proportionate tax at a like rate on all fractional parts of such proof or wine gallon. And section 3252, as amended by section 1 of the act of March 3, 1875, and as further amended by section 48 of the act of March 28, 1894, is hereby amended accordingly."

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. KITCHIN. Do not let us reserve it.

Mr. GOOD. I want to make a statement with regard to it. think I can give the gentleman some information that, perhaps, he does not possess, or, possibly, he would have included this in the bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. bill? We are anxi KITCHIN. Will not the gentleman offer it on another We are anxious to get to the immigration bill.

Mr. GOOD. I ask the gentleman to reserve the point of order for a moment

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that, of course, he could not make any better argument than I could as to why we should tax some other things than this particular for the issuing of bonds under the Panama Canal act. That thing. I thoroughly appreciate his position and he appreciates mine, and I really want to get this bill through, so that we can take up the immigration bill.

Mr. GOOD. I want only five minutes.

I know; but do not let us talk about it. Mr. KITCHIN. Let us take it up at some other time-to-morrow.

Mr. GOOD. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. I should like to be heard on the point of order for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman. On what does the gentleman from North Carolina base his point

Mr. KITCHIN. On clause 3 of Rule XXI.

That rule provides that an amendment to a Mr. MANN. revenue bill shall not be in order which is not germane to the bill or germane to the item to which it is offered as an amendment. I am well aware of the rulings, which have been very strict, and it is undoubtedly the fact that there have been several bills before the House when very distinguished gentlemen have been put in the chair for the purpose of ruling that you could not add anything to the bill by way of amendment, and that you could not take anything away from the bill by way of amendment, that altered the terms and effect of the bill. But what are we? A legislative body. Here we have a bill to produce revenue. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Kitchin] appeared to the patriotism of both sides of the House to raise revenue which he said was needed. Now, when we get into the committee to determine how we will raise revenue he Insists that nobody except himself shall have the right to have any judgment. If this is ruled out of order, we must raise revenue, not in the way the House wants to raise revenue, but in the way the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Kitchin] wants to raise revenue.

This is a bill to raise revenue. I contend that, it being a bill to raise revenue by the levy of excise taxes, it is in order to offer an amendment to raise revenue by any kind of an excise tax.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina desire to be heard?

Mr. KITCHIN. No, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The language of the rule in regard to revenue bills is different from the language of the rule as to bills generally, and is much stricter. The language of the rule is:

No amendment shall be in order to any bill affecting revenue which is not germane to the subject matter of the bill; nor shall any amendment to any item of such bill be in order which does not directly relate to the item to which the amendment is proposed.

The gentleman offers an amendment to strike out the section and to insert as a new section an amendment levying an additional tax upon distilled spirits. The Chair thinks that plainly, under the language of the rule that has just been read, the amendment is not germane and that it is subject to the point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee? The Chair will be glad to have the vote taken by tellers, and suggests the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN].

Mr. MANN. Let the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] act in

Mr. KITCHIN. And the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ALLEN]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ALLEN] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] will take their places as tellers.

The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 166,

Accordingly the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. GOOD. I move to strike out the last word. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for

Mr. Chairman, I can recall quite distinctly the argument made by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Kitchin] when the Payne bill was before this House. I recall the many arguments he has made since that time on bills to raise revenue. There has been one thing above all others that he has advocated until this bill is brought before this House, and that is to levy a tax upon the luxuries of life. That has been the chord upon which he has played, the one thing the gentleman has been urging. This bill, instead of following the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury and levying a tax on luxuries, levies a tax on thrift, a tax upon success.

In this bill the gentleman from North Carolina and his committee refuses, and the Democratic caucus refuses, to levy an additional tax of 15 cents a gallon on distilled spirits, yet the Secretary of the Treasury urges such a tam. Secretary McAdoo said that that tax alone would bring into the Treasury every Who would feel the burden? Why, my $50,000,000. friends, in Great Britain they are levying a tax on whisky all the way from $3.40 a gallon to $4.12 a gallon. France levies a tax on whisky of $1.56 a gallon, Russia levies a tax on whisky of $1.60 a gallon, and yet this Democratic side of the House refuses to levy a tax in this country of $1.25 a gallon. That would be a lower tax than that exacted in any other country in the world on booze.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman believe in raising revenue to run the Government by taxing the liquor traffic, or does he believe in prohibition, as his State does?

Mr. GOOD. I believe in prohibition, and I believe in that great pronouncement by the Supreme Court of the United States that "the power to tax is the power to destroy," and if you want to destroy the liquor traffic you can not do it in any quicker or more efficient way than by taxing it out of business.

Mr. RANDALL. Why do not you do it that way in Iowa?

Mr. GOOD. We did pretty well; we taxed part of the saloons out of existence by a high-license tax and thereby so molded public sentiment that the people demanded that the saloons should be removed entirely, and then we legislated the rest out of existence. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. RANDALL. You failed, and finally adopted prohibition.
Mr. GOOD. I have no sympathy with that kind of prohibition that when the test comes to support what would bring real prohibition refuses to do so. [Applause on the Republican side.] The power to tax is the power to destroy. If you would prohibit, why not destroy the traffic? I have made this motion to include only a tax of $1.25 on a gallon. That is a lower tax than is exacted in any country in the world. I did it because it was recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury. I would place a tax on whisky as high as that exacted by Great Britain, and that act alone would help to destroy the liquor traffic in this country. But you refuse to help destroy. Have you taxed luxuries? No. Have you taxed those things that would bring in a large revenue, as suggested by the Secretary of the Treasury, without inflicting a hardship on anyone? No. Instead you reach down into the pockets of the men whose industry helps them to live, but you leave the earnings of the millionaire to go untaxed; you allow the products of the distillery to go untaxed. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish I could believe that the gentleman from Iowa and the gentlemen on the Republican who applauded him are really sincere in their desire to lift the burdens of taxation to the extent of raising the whisky tax and thereby taking some of the burdens of taxation off the people. I can say that the gentleman is not sincere and the gentlemen who applauded him are not sincere. The party is not sincere, unless they have changed their convictions lately.

You had an opportunity to tax whisky more than $1.10 a gallon. You were in power 16 years, and you dared not raise the tax a cent. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Not only that, but I want to denounce it as a piece of legislative hypocrisy when the gentleman brings his amendment to this bill and wants action upon it. When this country was hanging in the balance, when 50,000 or more men were marching to the bugle call to battle, when the Navy went to the Philippines and to Santiago, when we needed millions of money to expend in the Spanish-American War, the Republican Party, your party, without a single dissent-ing vote, passed an emergency tax law, and you did not raise the revenue on whisky one single copper cent. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Another thing, when you wanted to relieve the people and reduce the tariff in 1909, when you passed the Payne-Aldrich Act, instead of increasing the tax on whisky you put it on lumber, which the poor man in the country used to build his hovel and the farmer to put up his buildings. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You increased the tax on articles of necessity, but you dared not touch the revenue on whisky. You dared not put your finger tip on the saloon keeper or the distiller of the country, and you let it remain at $1.10 per gallon. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman from Iowa voted for the Payne-Aldrich Act. He never suggested taking off the tax on lumber and placing it on whisky. Not only that, in 1898, 1899, and 1900 the tax on beer was $2 a barrel. The Republicans reduced it to $1 a barrel. And yet the gentleman from Iowa comes here and tells us that we ought to puf a tax on the necessities of the people and to put a higher tax on whisky. Does not the gentleman know that he has not been candid with the House, and does he not know that he and the people who applauded him were in power 16 years and during the Spanish-American War? That they reduced the tax on beer and put a tax on lumber when they had the opportunity to increase the tax on whisky shows that they are not sincere now. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CERTIFICATES OF INDEBTEDNESS.

SEC. 401. That section 32 of an act entitled "An act providing ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," approved June 13, 1898, as amended by section 40 of an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize dutles, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC 32. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to borrow, from time to time, at a rate of interest not exceeding 3 per cent per annum, such sum or sums as, in his judgment, may be necessary to meet public expenditures, and to issue therefor certificates of indebtedness in such form and in such denominations as he may prescribe; and each certificate so issued shall be payable, with the interest accrued thereon, at such time, not exceeding one year from the date of its issue, as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided, That the sum of such certificates outstanding shall at no time exceed $300,000,000, and the provisions of existing law respecting counterfeiting and other fraudulent practices are hereby extended to the bonds and certificates of indebtedness authorized by this act."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman. I move to

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I would like to have the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. As I understand it, this is an amendment to the so-called Payne-Aldrich law?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman explain wherein it differs from the existing law?

Mr. KITCHIN. Under the existing law the Secretary of the Treasury has power to issue $200,000,000. This substitutes $300,000,000 for the $200,000,000, so that instead of having the power to issue $200,000,000 he has the power to issue $300,-000,000 of certificates.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am obliged to the gentleman for that statement, and I would like the House to note at this point, that the much maligned Payne-Aldrich Act is now a life-saver to our friends on the other side. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. KITCHIN. And a sinker for the gentleman's side.

[Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We are recovering gradually, and as we make the facts known it will be easier for us to slide into power, in due course. I call the attention of the House to the fact that the Payne-Aldrich law, which no Democrat could ever stand for, gave authority to the Secretary of the Treasury to issue as high as $200,000,000 of certificates so that he might raise money if he happened to get into difficulties, which we assumed he would get into if the Democratic Party repealed the protective tariff features of the Payne-Aldrich law.

Here again we have a concrete illustration of the hopelessness and the helplessness of the Democratic Party when it constructive policies. The cry still is: "Whither comes to constructive policies. The cry still is: shall we go? Where shall we raise the money?" H Here is the Payne-Aldrich tariff law, which provided that the Secretary of the Treasury may issue $200,000,000 of certificates. The Democrats did not want to go to the Payne-Aldrich tariff law before election-oh, no, that would be too dangerous; that would incriminate the Democratic Party; but now that the election is over and the administration needs more than $200,000,000 we find the Democratic Party resorting to the provisions of the Payne-Aldrich tariff law, adding $100,000,000 more to its $200,000, 000 life buoy, but denouncing it still. There they go, gentlemen, with all their delinquencies marching triumphantly under the banner of the Payne-Aldrich tariff law-there is where they get the money. [Laughter and applause on the Republican

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with a favorable recommendation to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Sherley, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 20573) to pro- Dies vide increased revenue to defray the expenses of the increased appropriations for the Army and Navy and the extensions of fortifications, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion to recommit, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read. The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FORDNEY moves to recommit H. R. 20573 to the Committee on Ways and Means with instructions to amend the bill so as to raise an equitable portion of the required revenue from a protective tariff "sufficient to protect adequately American industry and American labor, and to be so adjusted as to prevent undue exactions by monopolies or trusts," paying particular attention to the conditions inevitable at the close of the present European war, with a view to insuring the industrial independence of the United States.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against that motion to recommit. It is contrary to Rule XXI, paragraph 3. We passed on that same point at the last session.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. FORDNEY. No.
The SPEAKER. The Chair ruled upon this proposition once before, and rules the same way now. The point of order is sus-

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay that appeal on the

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 213, nays 196, answered "present" 2, not voting 22, as follows:

The name of Mr. Benner was called, and he answered " Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded. Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make the following motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

I move to recommit the bill H. R. 20573 to the Committee on Ways and Means with instructions to that committee to report the bill back to the House immediately, with the following amendments:

Strike out all of "Title II—Excess-profits tax," being sections 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, and 207, reading as follows:

"TITLE 11-EXCESS-PROFITS TAX.

"Sec. 200. That when used in this title—

VETO OF IMMIGRATION BILL.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, before we commence to call the roll, by unanimous consent can we again get information in reference to the immigration bill (H. R. 10384) for the conven-

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnerr] please explain what is going to happen? [Laughter.]
Mr. Burnett. What is the query, Mr. Speaker?
Mr. MANN. Pending the roll call on the final passage of this bill, it would be very greatly to the convenience of all the Members of the House if we knew what was going to be done about the consideration of the immigration bill about the consideration of the immigration bill.

Mr. BURNETT. We will go through the vote to-night. I am willing to have a half hour's debate, 15 minutes to a side, if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath], representing the other side, is willing. Mr. MANN. Is it certain that there will be at least half an hour's debate after the conclusion of this roll call before we have another roll call?

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. FITZGERALD. Is that all the debate? Mr. BURNETT. That is all that we can agree on.

Mr. MANN. It may be more.

Mr. SABATH. I wish to state, Mr. Speaker, that I do not desire to detain the House. Although we agreed yesterday on an hour and a half, I am willing, if I can get the consent of others on our side, to cut the time down to 30 or 40 minutes. I am willing personally to bring that about.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Can we know definitely, Mr. Speaker, how much debate there will be?

Mr. MANN. We might reach an agreement now.

Mr. SABATH. I am willing to agree now to let it be 40 minutes, 20 minutes to a side. That cuts the time down in half. Is that satisfactory?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes, The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bur-NETT] asks unanimous consent that on the immigration bill the debate shall not exceed 40 minutes, half of that time to be controlled by himself and half to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath].

Mr. MANN. Let us figure out the time if we can. We will be through the present roll call at 10 minutes to 7. Can we have an agreement that the vote on the immigration bill shall be had

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; at 7.30.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman from Alabama to make that request.

Mr. BURNETT. That is a good suggestion. I make that request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the vote on the immigration veto shall be had at half past 7. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

REVENUE BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll, and those in favor of passing the revenue bill will answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

MINORITY VIEWS ON BANKING AND CURRENCY BILLS.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to file minority views on three bills that have just been reported out of the Banking and Currency Committee, H. R. 20538, H. R. 20539, and H. R. 20540.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request will be granted.

CLOTHING FOR MEMBERS OF NATIONAL GUARD.

Mr. HELGESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a concurrent resolution passed by the North Dakota Legislature on January 27, relative to the North Dakota militia boys who are to return from the Mexican border.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks about the militia. Is there objection?

There was no objection. The concurrent resolution referred to is as follows:

OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE OF NORTH DAKOTA.

I, Thomas Hall, secretary of state of the State of North Dakota, do hereby certify that the following is a true and complete copy of a certain resolution adopted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Fifteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota on Saturday, January 27, 1917.

Concurrent resolution. (Introduced by Mr. Mostad.)

Whereas the rules and regulations of the War Department of the United States will not permit the soldiers of the National Guard who are returning from the Mexican border to wear their uniforms and overcoats after being mustered out of active service, except when performing active duties as National Guardsman; and

Whereas the soldiers of the North Dakota regiment who have been stationed on the Mexican border are returning from a climate which is semitropical into a climate which is extremely cold; and

Whereas these men will not be in a condition to stand the rigors of this northern climate without being warmly clothed, and many of them will not have the means wherewith to purchase the necessary clothing: Therefore be it

Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the members of the fifteenth legislative assembly, petition the President of the United States, the Secretary of War, and Congress to pass the necessary laws or to issue the necessary orders that will give the soldiers their overcoats, or at least permit the use of said overcoats until climatic conditions have so changed that their wear will not be necessary. Be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of War, and to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress. That we urge our Representatives and Senators in Congress to use their efforts to bring about the results requested in these resolutions.

VETO OF IMMIGRATION BILL.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire now to call up the veto message of the President on the immigration bill (H. R. 10384), and I move that on reconsideration the House pass the same, the veto of the President to the contrary notwithstanding. We have an agreement that the vote shall be taken at 7.30 o'clock, which will allow 40 minutes' debate, 20 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] and 20 minutes by

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] asks to take from the Speaker's table the immigration bill and the President's veto message of the same, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] asks that after the 40 minutes of debate the remaining 5 minutes be consumed in reading the President's message. Is there objection?

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, would it not be a good plan to read the message first?

Mr. BURNETT. That was what I understood to be the gentleman's request.

Mr. SABATH. In view of the fact that there are so few Members here now, I think we owe it to the President as well as to the Members of the House that the message be read when the Members are here.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I should be sorry to object, but I think the message should be read first.

Mr. SABATH. I will say to the gentleman that notwithstanding our previous agreement that there should be an hour and a half for general debate, I gladly yielded to a request to shorten the time, notwithstanding there were a great many gentlemen desirous of securing recognition on the bill. I yielded for the convenience of the membership, and for that reason I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will not object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think that as this veto message has been on the table for two or three days by unanimous consent, it ought to be read, and if the gentleman from Illinois wants it read at the conclusion of the debate, the Chair sees no objection.

Mr. BURNETT. I think the more orderly procedure would be to read it at the beginning.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggested that under the practice of the House, and under the rules, the message having been on the Speaker's table for two or three days, it ought to be read at the beginning of the debate. The Chair lays it before the House

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the veto message of the President.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I very much regret to return this bill (H. R. 10384, "An act to regulate the immigration of allens to, and the residence of allens in, the United States") without my signature. In most of the provisions of the bill I should be very glad to concur, but I can not rid myself of the conviction that the literacy test constitutes a radical change in the policy of the Nation which is not justified in principle. It is not a test of character, of quality, or of personal fitness, but would operate in most cases merely as a penalty for lack of opportunity in the country from which the alien seeking admission came. The opportunity to gain an education is in many cases one of the chief opportunities sought by the immigrant in coming to the United States, and our ex-perience in the past has not been that the illiterate immigrant is as such an undesirable immigrant. Tests of quality and of purpose can not be objected to on principle, but tests of opportunity surely may be.

Moreover, even if this test might be equitably insisted on, one of the exceptions proposed to its application involves a provision which might lead to very delicate and hazardous diplomatic situations. The bill exempts from the operation of the literacy test "all aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States to avoid religious persecution in the country of their last permanent residence, whether such persecution be evidenced by overt acts or by laws or governmental regulations that discriminate against the alien or the race to which he belongs because of his religious faith." Such a provision, so applied and administered, would oblige the officer concerned in effect to pass judgment upon the laws and practices of a foreign Government and declare that they did or did not constitute religious persecution. This would, to say the least, be a most invidious function for any administrative officer of this Government to perform, and it is not only possible but probable that very serious questions of international justice and comity would arise between this Government and the Government or Governments thus officially condemned should it exercise be attempted. I dare say that these consequences were not in the minds of the proponents of this provision, but the provision separately and in itself renders it unwise for me to give my assent to this legislation in its present form.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE House, January 29, 1917.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves that on reconsideration of the immigration bill, the House pass the bill, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, the President in his veto message calls attention to a certain clause which was included in the immigration bill at the request of the Jewish people, a clause which enables persons of their faith, or of any harassed religious faith, to come into the country in spite of the fact that they can not read. Under the terms of this proposed law such persons are admissible to the United States provided that they can convince the immigration officials that they are fleeing either from oppressive religious laws or from religious perseeither from oppressive religious laws of from religious perse-cution at the hands of the people of some foreign country. The President declares that the clause in question imposes on our administrative officers the duty of passing "judgment upon the laws and practices of a foreign Government." He says that such a function is most "invidious" and that it may lead to very delicate and hazardous diplomatic situations.

With all due respect to the President, there is nothing in his argument. We have had in the immigration law for years and years a provision which requires our administrative officers to pass judgment upon the laws and practices of a foreign Government" whenever an alien immigrant seeking admission to this country claims to be the victim of political persecution. This new provision to which the President objects merely adds

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Not just now. This is an intricate subject.

Mr. BENNET. I will not interrupt the gentleman. Mr. GARDNER. The existing immigration law, in section 2, among other things, provides-

That nothing in this act shall exclude, if otherwise admissible, persons convicted of an offense purely political, not involving moral turpitude.

That is in the law at present. That provision has been on the statute book for many years, and the administrative officers have again and again been obliged to exercise this function which the President describes as invidious; that is to say, the function of passing "judgment upon the laws and practices of a foreign Government." The new clause, to which the Presiof a foreign Government. The new clause, to which the Frest-dent objects, merely grants to religious refugees a special ex-emption analogous to that enjoyed hitherto by political refugees. Moreover, we have with 23 different nations treaties which by their terms forbid the extradition from American soil of any sojourner from a foreign land who is pursued by his own Government solely because of a political offense. In observing the provisions of these treaties as well as in the execution of our immigration laws, it has long been the duty of our adminis-trative officers to exercise precisely this discrimination which alarms the President.

What difference does it make to a foreign nation whether our administrative officers indict it and its people for religious oppression rather than for political oppression? For years every time we have admitted Irish and Prussian refugees to this country we have indicted foreign nations for political oppression. It has not led us to the verge of war. Why should we be alarmed if possibly at some time in the future our action might be construed into an indictment against an act of religious oppression?

Many a time have our administrative officers been called upon "to pass judgment upon the laws and practices of foreign Governments." Let us consider the case of Mylius, the Englishman. This is known as United States ex rel. Mylius against Uhl. Mylius was an Englishman who had been con-victed of an exceptionally slanderous criminal libel, involving the succession to the throne of Great Britain. Mylius was convicted not of lese majeste, not of treason, but of criminal libel. Our immigration authorities passed "judgment upon the laws and practices of a foreign Government" and decided against Mylius. The court reversed that decision, deciding that the offense of Mylins was political.

I leave the Mylins case and come to one more recent. certain man named Sichinsky was, in 1908, convicted of the murder of the governor of Galicia, in Austria. Sichinsky was convicted of murder, not of treason or lese majeste. "Insidiconvicted of indrucer, not of treason of less inalests. Instar-ous murder" was the charge. In 1915 Sichinsky fled to this country. Our immigration authorities refused him admission because they held that the crime of murder involved moral turpitude. The question came to the Department of Labor. The Assistant Secretary of Labor, Louis F. Post, passed "judgment upon the laws and practices of a foreign Government." By Mr. Post's order, in December, 1915, Sichinsky was admitted to this country because, as the Assistant Secretary of Labor looked on the matter, the murder of Galicia's governor was purely a political offense.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. LINTHICUM]. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, the eyes of the Nation are centered on what we are about to do here to-day. Four times the immigration bill with its illiteracy test has been vetoed by our Presidents who have been elected not by one State but by the people of the entire country. The press of the United States as shown by its editorials is in favor of sustaining the veto of President Wilson. The leading Democratic newspaper, the New York World, in a short editorial on January 30, expressed itself as follows:

President Wilson's veto of the immigration bill was expected, his reasons for that action were prophetically understood, when the measure was passed in Congress. A broken and blood-stained Europe will have after the war few men to spare from tasks of restoration. In any case, no man is proved unfit for American citizenship by the fact that he is ambitious enough for his children to leave a land that neglected to give him an education.

Later, I shall read extracts from other leading newspapers which have taken the same view.

The Merchants Association of New York, the Republican County Committee of the County of New York, the New York Produce Exchange and a large number of other eminent bodies and educators of the land have expressed themselves in opposition to the immigration bill on account of the literacy test contained therein.

Ex-President Taft has not changed his views as his letter read by me on the floor of this House last March showed. The country can not find laborers to-day, whether it be for the fac-tories or whether it be servant girls for ordinary house work.

In New York City we are unable to find men to take jobs as street cleaners although it means employment for life, medical attendance and a pension for old age.

The great trouble to-day is that the rough work will not be done by the educated American. Every one seems to be seeking employment where manual labor is not required.

To enact a bill at the present time containing a literacy test is to shut the doors of the United States to those who would come here, if come they do, to perform the rough manual labor which the average American has declined to do during the past

Mr. Speaker, the present Speaker of the House is admired by all who know him. He is fearless and courageous in the expression of his views. He has served the country for a long time most faithfully and has been a public servant who has carried with him the respect of American citizenship, regardless of party affiliations. What he says is usually expressed by him after mature deliberation and after he has reached deep convictions of mind that he is right. It is proper, therefore, that I read at this point his written views, given to the Washington Post on April 9 last, showing that he does not believe that we will have a flood of immigration after the war. He says:

will have a flood of immigration after the war. He says:

Many of our people view with grave apprehension the prospect of a vastly increased immigration into this country when peace is established beyond the seas—which is another figment of imagination. The chances are that the immigration into this country for a decade, perhaps for a generation, will be negligible; for good and sufficient reasons. Because so many have been killed, crippled, or incapacitated by disease, by exposure in camp, on the march or in the field, the prospect is that every man or woman desiring employment at home will be able to find it at a higher wage than heretofore. Therefore and thereby the temptation to emigrate will be diminished. Many persons seem to think that the only reason why-immigrants come to America is because they desire to live in a Republic. No doubt that is the reason why many do come hither, but many others—a majority perhaps—come because of the greater rewards for labor, whether skilled or unskilled, whether of brain or of brawn. It is confidently submitted that both these motives are rational and honorable. These two classes embrace the bulk of the immigrants to American shores, not to mention the comparatively few who flee from religious or political persecutions, and others who, like the Knight of La Mancha, come in quest of ventures. It is safe to say that 95 per cent of all who emigrate from Europe leave the land of their birth with regret—a regret inherent in human nature itself and honorable to the human heart.

It is also safe to say that if the rewards of toil are even approximately equal in their own country and in another, most folks the wide world over prefer to stay in their native land, amid the scenes of childhood and in company with kindred and friends. It is not to Americans alone that the anthem, "Home Sweet Home," appeals, but to all the people of the earth.

When this stupendous conflict closes, laborers of every kind will be so scarce in the belligerent countries that wages are as certain to ris them as the sun is to shine, and just as wages increase, so emigration will decrease. It is bound to be so. It can not be otherwise.

Not more than two cases need be advanced to sustain the conclusion as to reduced immigration into this country.

The first mighty army of our immigrants came from Ireland because of the hard conditions prevailing at home, particularly as to religious freedom, education, rents, and ownership of land. Almost exactly in proportion as conditions have improved in Ireland, the Irish have ceased to emigrate—for no people are more ardent lovers of their native land.

Following the vast Irish immigration came that of the Germans, vaster still. Until some thirty or forty years ago our principal supply of immigrants came from Germany. When the present war began, the great stream of German immigrants had dwindled almost to the vanishing point. What was the reason for this shrinkage? It is clear that it was because the great industrial awakening of Germany—one of the most astounding phenomena of modern times—gave employment at home to hundreds of thousands at higher wages in new kinds of work. That was among the chief of the herculean labors Bismarck performed for his country. Germans found employment at home at more remunerative wages than were obtainable prior to the great industrial awakening, and the number of immigrants from the Fatherland grew constantly smaller, year by year, until it practically ceased altogether.

I repeat that that was one of the main benefactions which Bismarck wrought for Germany, for it made her one of the foremost manufacturing and exporting nations of the globe. And the truth is that no statesman or leader of men ever worked more persistently and industriously at any self-imposed task than the Kalser Wilhelm II has labored to increase the manufactures and exports of Germany.

Query: If improved conditions as to the rewards of labor in Ireland and Germany, whence so many of our most desirable immigrants came in the earlier day, diminished the emigration from tho

AND COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION,

Albany, January 22, 1916.

Dear Mr. Siegel: I held my answer to your letter thinking that I should be able to write you at greater length, but I have not as yet found it possible to do so.

I can only say this at the moment: That my attitude with regard to the literacy test would not be affected by the volume of the immigration, my point being that this (the literacy test) does not furnish a satisfactory test. It is true that it might diminish the volume, but I can not see that it would furnish a means for distinguishing between the desirable and the undesirable.

I hope I shall find time to set forth the matter more fully a little later.

Sincerely yours,

To the Hon. ISAAC SIEGEL, House of Representatives.

Mr. Speaker, it affords me great pleasure to read the following letter from one of America's best-known philanthropists and active citizens:

NEW YORK, January 30, 1917.

Hon. Isaac Siegel,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Siegel: I take the liberty of writing you regarding the immigration bill, which has just been vetoed by the President, and is again before Congress for action, as I thought you would like to have my views on this important measure.

The bill, because of the literacy test, would have the effect of excluding those whose sole offense is that they have, without fault of their own, been denied the benefit of an education. It is not a test of character and would deprive the United States of valuable economic forces. In my opinion, the cause of illiteracy in most cases is lack of opportunity, and I do not think such lack of opportunity should bar those who wish to enter this country. They may later on acquire an education, but even if they did not their illiteracy would not affect their descendants, for they would very likely secure an education, and judging from the past there is a good chance that they would become worthy and loyal citizens. The parents of some of our best citizens were illiterate when they came here, and I think it would be a great mistake if men and women of sourd mind and body, who are industrious and law-abiding, are deprived of the right to take up their homes in this country.

I hope you will do what you can to defeat this bill.

Yours, very truly,

Adoleh Lewisohn.

ADOLPH LEWISOHN.

Mr. Speaker, this land has grown in size, in wealth, in numbers, in commerce and manufacture during the entire time that immigrants have been coming here in large numbers. Statistics prove beyond fear of contradiction that where the immigrant has settled in large numbers the greatest progress has been made in education, manufacture, and commerce. Laws for the protection of children and women from long hours of labor and for the general improvement of their working conditions and surroundings have been enacted in those very States. Workmen's compensation acts have been put into force. The hours of labor have been lessened. Labor unions have made their greatest progress therein. In those same States more men have enest progress therein. In those same States more men have enlisted in the Army and Navy of the United States and answered the call of the President in the past year, entirely out of proportion to the population of their States, than from those States where the immigrant is practically unknown. The smallest percentage of illiteracy is found in those States where the proportion of the foreign born is the greatest.

New York City, with its great foreign-born population, points with pride to its numerous schoolhouses and libraries and to the fact that its industries and commerce have been built up by the immigrant and his descendants. It asks you to take a glance at its educational institutions, and there you will find that 90 per cent of those who are attending its colleges, high schools, and night schools during the entire year, including summer, are either immigrants or their children.

Not a single Representative on the floor of this House from New York City has ever cast his vote in favor of an immigration bill that contained the literacy test. Who knows the immigrant and his children better than these Representatives who were born amongst them, lived near them, attended school with them, and sat side by side with them at colleges and universities?

Who attends the opera, even though it be in the galleries, the best theatrical productions, the museums of art and natural history in the city of New York? Who encourages in every way education, and strives hardest to give his children the best that money can afford in the line of education? Who tries in every way to see that his children take advantage of the opportunities that this country affords? Who makes the most use of our public libraries? In every instance you will find that it is the immigrant who is willingly making those sacrifices

Mr. Speaker, I might give statistics showing that a large number of the members of the board of education of the city of New York, the Supreme Court of the State of New York, the civil service, both Federal and State, are all filled by immigrants or their children. They are rendering yeoman service in helping to make our Republic greater, grander, and nobler. They are doing their share to instill a spirit of real true Americanism which recognizes only one allegiance, and that allegiance is to our flag, country, and institutions.

Much has been said by some gentlemen, who favor the literacy test, that illiteracy produces crime. An investigation made by me shows that in the State of New York the number of illiterates in State prisons was not greater than the number of high-school and college graduates. The following statistics show the populations of various cities and the number of arrests made in each one of them:

City.	Popula- tion.	Arrests, 1916.
San Francisco, Cal.	416,912	51, 430
Birmingham, Ala	132,685	14, 408
Columbus, Ohio	181, 511	8, 933
	127,628	13, 220
Washington, D. C	331,069	39, 377
Cleveland, Ohio	560, 663	20, 524
Jacksonville, Fla	57, 699	9,459
Oklahoma City, Okla	64: 205	7,200
Cincinnati, Ohio	363, 591	26,066

Denver, Colo	213, 381	10,045
St. Louis, Mo	687,029	38, 439

An examination by anyone interested establishes the fact that crime is no greater in the cities where the foreign population is large than in those cities where the native-born population predominates. One example is the city of St. Louis. Its population is 687,029. Its number of arrests for 1916 was 38,439, with only 142 being unable to read or write. The city of Washington, the number of arrests was 39,377, with a population according to the census of 1910 of 331,069. The other statistics of the city of St. Louis are contained in a letter which I read:

Mr. Speaker, on the 25th of this month Cardingl Gibbons issued the following statement:

It is disappointing to many thoughtful citizens that the immigration bill has passed both Houses of Congress. By this measure illiterates will, in the future, be excluded from entrance into this country. It is to be hoped that Mr. Wilson will act with the same good judgment as he has done on a former like occasion and veto the bill. Slimilar bills have been vetoed by preceding Presidents, who have been cognizant of the harmful effect this test of literacy would have upon desirable immigration.

ILLITERACY NOT IGNORANCE.

Illiteracy should not be confounded with ignorance. There is an old axiom which reads that "Intellectual attainments are not the test of virtue." Many of the most dangerous members of the community are men of keen and trained intellect, but of depraved morals. The normal, sturdy illiterate has a receptive mind, capable of early development. Had the United States refused such illiterates from the beginning of our Government, our country would have lost the benefit of their virtue, thrift, industry, and enterprising spirit. And the descendants of such forbears are an honor to their fathers and a credit and an asset to our country, for they have been rapidly incorporated and identified with the native population by the assimilating process of education and the common use of the English tongue. In consequence of this, it would be hard to differentiate the children of foreign immigrants from those of native American parents.

I have so often expressed my personal views in regard to the

I have so often expressed my personal views in regard to the literacy test that I believe that the best interests of the immigrant and the country can be served by inserting here the four messages vetoing the respective immigration bills containing the literacy test. These messages are respectively as follows:

President Grover Cleveland's veto message:

MARCH 2, 1897.

To the House of Representatives:

To the House of Representatives:

I hereby return without approval House bill No. 7864, entitled "An act to amend the immigration laws of the United States."

By the first section of this bill it is proposed to amend section 1 of the act of March 3, 1891, relating to immigration by adding to the classes of aliens thereby excluded from admission to the United States the following:

"All persons physically capable and over 16 years of age who can not read and write the English language or some other language * * *."

A radical departure from our national policy relating to immigrants is here presented. Heretofore we have welcomed all who came to us from other lands except those whose moral or physical condition or history threatened danger to our national welfare and safety. Relying upon the zealous watchfulness of our people to prevent injury to our political and social fabric, we have encouraged those coming from foreign countries to cast their lot with us and join in the development of our vast domain, securing in return a share in the blessings of American citizenship.

eign countries to cast their lot with us and join in the development of our vast domain, securing in return a share in the blessings of American citizenship.

A century's stupendous growth, largely due to the assimilation and thrift of millions of sturdy and patriotic adopted citizens, attests the success of this generous and free-handed policy which, while guarding the people's interests, exacts from our immigrants only physical and moral soundness and a willingness and ability to work.

A contemplation of the grand results of this policy can not fail to rouse a sentiment in its defense, for however it might have been regarded as an original proposition and viewed as an experiment, its accomplishments are such that if it is to be uprooted at this late day its disadvantages should be plainly apparent and the substitute adopted should be just and adequate, free from uncertainties, and guarded against difficult or oppressive administration.

It is not claimed, I believe, that the time has come for the further restriction of immigration on the ground that an excess of population overcrowds our land.

It is said, however, that the quality of recent immigration is undestrable. The time is quite within recent memory when the same thing was said of lumigrants who, with their descendants, are now numbered among our best citizens.

A careful examination of this bill has convinced me that for the reasons given and others not specifically stated its provisions are unnecessarily harsh and oppressive, and that its defects in construction would cause vexation and its operation would result in harm to our citizens.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

The veto message of President William Howard Taft: To the Senate:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 3175.

I do this with great reluctance. The bill contains many valuable amendments to the present immigration law which will insure greater certainty in excluding undesirable immigrants.

The bill received strong support in both Houses and was recommended by an able commission after an extended investigation and carefully drawn conclusions.

But I can not make up my mind to sign a bill which in its chief provision violates a principle that ought, in my opinion, to be upheld in dealing with our immigration. I refer to the literacy test. For the reasons stated in Secretary Nagel's letter to me, I can not approve that test. The Secretary's letter accompanies this.

THE WHITE HOUSE, Washington, February 14, 1913.

The first veto message of President Woodrow Wilson:

To the House of Representatives:

To the House of Representatives:

It is with unaffected regret that I find myself constrained by clear conviction to return this bill (H. R. 6060, "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States") without my signature. Not only do I feel it to be a very serious matter to exercise the power of veto in any case, because it involves opposing the single judgment of the President to the judgment of a majority of both the Houses of the Congress, a step which no man who realizes his own liability to error can take without great hesitation, but also because this particular bill is in so many important respects admirable, well conceived, and desirable. Its enactment into law would undoubtedly enhance the efficiency and improve the methods of handling the important branch of the public service to which it relates. But candor and a sense of duty with regard to the responsibility so clearly imposed upon me by the Constitution in matters of legislation leave me no choice but to dissent.

In two particulars of vital consequence this bill embodies a radical departure from the traditional and long-established policy of this country, a policy in which our people have conceived the very character of their Government to be expressed, the very mission and spirit of the Nation in respect of its relations to the peoples of the world outside their borders. It seeks to all but close entirely the gates of asylum which have always been open to those who could find nowhere else the right and opportunity of constitutional agitation for what they conceived to be the natural and inalienable rights of men; and it excludes those to whom the opportunities of elementary education have been denied, without regard to their character, their purposes, or their natural capacity.

Restrictions like these, adopted earlier in our history as a Nation, would very materially have altered the course and cooled the humane ardors of our politics. The right of political asylum has brought to this country many a man of noble character and elevated purpose who was marked as an outlaw in his own less fortunate land, and who has yet become an ornament to our citizenship and to our public councils. The children and the compatitiots of these illustrious Americans must stand amazed to see the representatives of their Nation now resolved, in the fullness of our national strength and at the maturity of, our great institutions, to risk turning such men back from our shores without test of quality or purpose. It is difficult for me to believe that the full effect of this feature of the bill was realized when it was framed which it is here cast.

The literacy test and the tests and restrictions which accompany it constitute an even more radical change in the policy of the Nation. Hitherto we have generously kept our doors open to all who were not unfitted by reason of disease or incapacity for self-support or such personal records and antecedents as were likely to make them a menace to our peace and order or to the wholesome and essential re

THE WHITE HOUSE, 28 January, 1915.

The President's second veto message is as follows:

The President's second veto message is as follows:

I very much regret to return this bill without my signature.

In most of the provisions of the bill I should be very glad to concur, but I can not rid myself of the conviction that the literacy test constitutes a radical change in the policy of the nation which is not justified in principle. It is not a test of character, of quality, or of personal fitness, but would operate in most cases merely as a penalty for lack of opportunity in the country from which the alien seeking admission came. The opportunities sought by the immigrant in coming to the United States, and our experience in the past has not been that the illiterate immigrant is as such an undesirable immigrant. Tests of quality and of purpose can not be objected to on principle, but tests of opportunity surely may be.

Moreover, even if this test might be equitably insisted on, one of the exceptions proposed to its application involves a provision which might lead to very delicate and hazardous diplomatic situations.

The bill exempts from the operation of the literacy test "all aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States to avoid religious persecution in the country of their last permanent residence, whether such persecution be evidenced by overt acts or by laws or governmental regulations that discriminate against the alien or the race to which he belongs because of his religious faith."

against the alien or the race to which he belongs because of his religious faith."

Such a provision, so applied and administered, would oblige the officer concerned in effect to pass judgment upon the laws and practices of a foreign government, and declare that they did or did not constitute religious persecutions. This would, to say the least, be a most invidious function for any administrative officer of this Government to perform, and it is not only possible, but probable, that very serious questions of international justice and comity would arise between this Government and the government or governments thus officially condemned, should its exercise be adopted.

I dare say that these consequences were not in the mind of the proponents of this provision, but the provision separately and in itself renders it unwise for me to give my assent to this legislation in its present form.

Let me at this time quote a letter which I received from Commissioner of Immigration Frederic C. Howe, which reads as follows:

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, IMMIGRATION SERVICE, OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER OF IMMIGRATION,
Ellis Island, New York Harbor, N. Y., January 17, 1917.

Hen. Isaac Siegel,

Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

Mr Dean Mr. Siegel: I have not seen the newspaper abstract of my speech at Detroit a week ago last Sunday, but most newspaper abstracts are very incomplete. What I did say was that all opinions as to immigration after the war were merely conjectural, but that we were faced with the possibility of emigration out of this country after the war. I have a great deal of evidence to this effect from all over the country, which is corroborated by the statements of the steamship lines and railroad companies. The causes for this probable emigration are a desire to revisit the countries from which foreigners have been excluded for nearly three years, anxiety about their relatives, and a very general belief on the part of certain aliens that land is going to be cheap in Europe, especially central Europe, and that they can invest their savings there in a homestead on conditions far more satisfactory to them than in this country. In addition to that it is quite possible that wages will be high in Germany, England, France, and parts of central Europe, which will serve as a suction not only to take people out of this country but to keep foreigners at home.

I have no doubt but that the wide socialization of industry that has taken place will be continued for some years to come from necessity if from no other reason. And if high wages prevail abroad and the countries look after their people in an intelligent way, and if in addition to that it is more difficult to emigrate, it is quite likely that immigration will remain at a low ebb.

On the other hand, the 20,000,000 men who have been at the war front have undoubtedly been made restive and adventurous; there are widows and families back home, and many friends in this country would like to care for them; while Russia, Hungary, and Poland have suffered so acutely during the war and are so badly organized internally that it is quite probable that many persons will seek America from these countries. My own opinion is that we will have a very heavy immigration from central Europe, but that the immigration from western Europe will not be materially changed. Of course, industrial conditions in this country will influence immigration, as it always does, as will the actions taken by European countries to either restrict or encourage emigration.

All this is a mental gamble, I admit, and your opinion is just as the actions taken by European emigration.

All this is a mental gamble, I admit, and your opinion is just as valuable as mine. I am merely giving you the net results gained from talking with a good many persons from Europe, as well as with bankers, railroad and steamship men, and employers in this country.

Very sincerely, yours,

Frederic C. Howe.

Mr. Speaker, the following is the statement issued by the Merchants Association of the city of New York, condemning the immigration bill on account of its literacy test:

the immigration bill on account of its literacy test:

"The matter was brought to the attention of the board of directors at its last meeting, and the literacy test was carefully considered," said the announcement. "The association created a committee a dozen years ago to study the question of immigration. That committee came to the conclusion that the manual labor necessary for the constructive development of the United States, such as reclamation projects, railroad building, and water works construction, could be obtained only through immigration, and that a large proportion of such manual labor, so necessary to the development of the country, would be debarred by an educational or literacy test.

"The directors unanimously adopted the following:
"*Resolved, That the enactment of any immigration restriction measure based upon the application of a literacy test would be detrimental and injurious to the development of the country, and therefore should be opposed, and that the association congratulates the President of the United States upon the former veto of a similar measure and urge him likewise to veto the pending measure."

NEW YORK PRODUCE EXCHANGE, New York, January 27, 1917. H. R. 19384.

Hon, ISAAC SIEGEL.

H. R. 10384.

Dran Sir: In reference to House resolution 10384, "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States." the New York Produce Exchange has carefully examined the text of the bill as passed by the House of Representatives April 8, 1916, and the Senate December 14, and desires to enter a vigorous protest against the passage of this bill unless the literacy test as contained in the paragraph on page 9, beginning with line 15, to page 11, line 7, is eliminated, for the following reasons:

First. The aliens who will be most affected if this bill should become a law would be common laborers, farm laborers, miners, those engaged on railroad construction work, subways, teamsters, draymen, servants, etc. The reports of the Commissioner General of immigration for the five years before the war, as from 1909 to 1913, inclusive, show that there arrived in the United States aliens over 14 years of age who could not read or write, 1,074,163, or 24 per cent of the whole number admitted. These people would have been excluded if this bill had been a law during those years, not because of any moral or physical defect, but simply because in most cases they have lacked the opportunity to learn to read. Second. We are short of laborers now and our information leads us to believe that after the war is over there will be a great many aliens in this State who will return to Europe, and we are convinced that there will be a greater shortage of laborers for several years after the close of the war than we have now. We believe that the commercial competition of the United States with foreign nations will be so strenuous that no slightest unnecessary handicap should be imposed upon our industries. We believe this literacy test would be a serious handicap, and if it becomes a law, that it will injure the business of the State of New York and of the whole country.

Third. The naturalization laws of the United States do not require an alien to be able to read and write to become a c L. B. Howe, Secretary.

On March 31 last the New York Evening Sun printed the following editorial:

LITERACY TEST AGAIN.

It is growing to be a custom with Congress to send the President an immigration bill with a literacy clause to veto. The House played true to form lately in voting the literacy test into the Burnett immigration bill, that all might see how the faithful Represenative stands ready at all times and in all ways to serve the native workingman.

The test now put forward provides that aliens, to graduate from Ellis Island, must know how to read and write each his own language. It is hard to see how ability to read the Hungarian bards will avail a laborer in a rolling mill or how a good working knowledge of Russian script will help a New York housemaid. Very little is to be gained by the country in requiring such exotic accomplishments of intending settlers.

On December 17 the New York Sun editorially said:

On December 17 the New York Sun editorially said:

The literacy test for immigrants is a child of prejudice and selfishness. Its imposition at any time in the Nation's history would have retarded the progress of the country and deprived us of thousands of loyal and devoted citizens who contributed by their own efforts and through their offspring to the upbuilding and defense of the United States.

Three Presidents—Cleveland, Taft, and Wilson—have vetoed this disastrous, unstatesmanlike restriction. To Mr. Wilson another opportunity is to be given to reject it; and that opportunity comes at a time when depleted labor markets, industries crippled by lack of workers, and commercial conditions exposing our present and future need of able-bodied immigrants must impress on the intelligence of disinterested observers the folly of locking the door to any individual of good health, honest mind, and friendly disposition.

Mr Wilson has already given the final evidence of his understanding of this project. We hope no presumed mandate of legislative reiteration will cause him to abandon his defense of what has been and should remain a cardinal principle of American policy.

On Monday last the Washington Star contained this editorial:

THE LITERACY TEST.

The Literacy test.

Three Presidents have vetoed the proposition to make literacy a test for immigrants. Mr. Cleveland did so March 2, 1897, on the eve of leaving office, and Mr. Taft February 14, 1913, on the eve of his retirement. Yesterday's was Mr. Wilson's second veto. The first occurred almost to a day two years ago.

An effort will be made to pass the bill over the veto, and its friends, pointing to sentiment already declared in both House and Senate on the measure, expect to succeed.

Congress in singularly insistent on this test. It has been 20 years since the question was first presented to Mr. Cleveland; and he rejected the proposition on much the same grounds that subsequently influenced Mr. Taft, and have twice influenced Mr. Wilson. Two Democratic Presidents and one Republican President have taken the same view.

The argument against the test is simple and direct, and does not rest on theory. It is susceptible of proof that some of our best citizens found their opportunity to acquire an education after reaching this country. In part that opportunity had attracted them; and when they had gained it they improved it to the extent that they were enabled to improve all the other opportunities of the country, and thus take places among the country's best supporters. A literacy test would have excluded them, forced them to continue their hard lives in the countries of their nativity, and deprived America of recruits of genuine worth.

The immigration laws might and should be improved. There is sentiment in support of that proposition. The gates have been swinging inwardly too freely. We have received some very undesirable persons, and too speedily admitted them to citizenship. But as a rule they have not been illiterates. They did not come to us to help strengthen the country and increase its attraction as a land of promise. Their aims and ends were of another order, and they have pursued them to their advantage and to the country's discredit. A literacy test would not have barred them.

If Congress over

The Washington Post on January 31, 1917, expressed itself as follows:

AGAINST THE LITERACY TEST.

The persistence with which Congress puts through immigration measures containing a literacy test is only equaled by the unfalling regularity with which Presidents, irrespective of party, veto the bills because of the abnoxious feature of legislation contained therein.

This clearly points to a difference of attitude, if not of conviction, between the legislative body and the chief executive in their respective views on this proposition. The question naturally arises as to which is right.

views on this proposition. The question naturally arises as to which is right.

If the basis of consideration be that of the principles of our established government or of the instinctive feelings of the people, there can hardly be any doubt that both the principles and the spirit have been correctly interpreted by the Presidents who rejected the assumption that an inability to read determines the kind of citizenship that is not to be welcomed to our shores.

Neither is there any reason to believe that the human elements so long regarded as desirable are desirable no longer. The man who wants to come, even though illiterate, has given evidences of the promptings of movement toward a better goal as already resident within him. He is looking for a better country and freer opportunities. These gained, he has already brought a measure of appreciation that angurs well for his future.

Moreover, the illiterate immigrant, if of the right sort otherwise, his future.

Moreover, the illiterate immigrant, if of the right sort otherwise, customarily holds an education in the highest respect. It has been remarked that none are so desirous of educating their children as these new arrivals, most of them undergoing much personal privation without a murmur if only that which they were denied might be the possession of the generation that is to follow them.

Again, the natural tendency of education is to lead the educated out of certain lines of work that must be performed. These lines are accepted gratefully by the illiterate immigrant. He usually is brought up to hard work and accepts it uncomplainingly. Thus a steady stream of genuine "desirables" is obtained under the present immigration laws, in so far as the absence of a literacy test is involved.

The literacy test will never solve the problem of keeping out undesirable immigration. Most of Europe's worst material can read and write. If the law needs strengthening in order to protect the United States against the entrance of the criminal or defective, a literacy test will never accomplish the desired end.

Only a few days previous the Washington Post printed the following editorial:

CHEAP LABOR.

The danger that there will be a heavy influx of cheap labor importations after the war is far greater than the danger of an influx of laborers. Nearly all the economists in the United States agree that European nations will seek to recoup their losses at the close of the war by underselling in the American market. The economists are by no means convinced, however, that there will be an increase in immigration.

Yet Congress has taken steps to restrict immigration, while no steps are taken to restrict cheap-labor importations. It may turn out that there will be a series labor shortage in the United States at the close of the war. Certainly there is such a shortage now. Measures may be taken by the European nations to restrict emigration, but it is a foregone conclusion that they will take no such steps to restrict their experts.

foregone conclusion that they will take no such steps to restrict their exports.

The literacy test, which Congress recently approved, probably is the most foolish and un-American test that could be devised. Many immigrants who can neither read nor write make excellent American citizens. Many of them come here for the particular object of educating themselves and their children. Having no anarchistic teachings to unlearn, they are good material for citizenship.

Many of the immigrants who can read and write, on the other hand, make poor citizens. The theories they have already formed may be wholly in conflict with the spirit of American institutions. They may be unwilling to do any work that is required of them.

Plainly the literacy test is not an effort to improve immigration, but is an effort to restrict it. If the purpose is to reduce the supply of cheap labor because it is not desirable that American workingmen should compete with such labor, it would be far better to strike the evil at its source by establishing a protective tariff that will minimize the importation of products made by cheap labor abroad.

The New York Times sums up the whole question, on January 31, 1917, in an editorial which reads as follows:

The New York Times sums up the whole question, on January 31, 1917, in an editorial which reads as follows:

The immigration bill which, by the unsound and untenable literacy test, seeks to exclude foreign labor at the demand of organized labor. Mr. Cleveland and Mr. Taft vetoed similar measures setting up a similar test. The present bill includes many desirable restrictions and provisions. Its framers have sought ingeniously, but in vain, to atone by these for its essential and fatal theory and principle. The unconquerable objections to a literacy test have been stated again and again in the last generation. Mr. Without summarizes them, and again in the last generation. Mr. Without summarizes them for a uncorrected of quality, or of personal fitness, but would operate in most cases merely as a penalty for lack of opportunity in the country from which the alien seeking admission came.

"The opportunity to gain an education is in many cases one of the chief opportunities sought by the immigrant in coming to the United States, and our experience in the past has not been that the illiterate immigrant is, as such, an undesirable immigrant. Mr. Speaker, I have in my congressional district thousands of men, women, and children who came from Italy. I know from my own knowledge that the Italian immigrant is a hard and conscientious worker endeavoring in every way to give his children an education. Reference has been previously made by me to the fact that 12 per cent of those attending Columbia University are either Italian immigrants or their children. because of the fact that frequent reference has been made here that the Italian immigrant is undesirable that I take great pleasure in reading parts of the address delivered by Mr. Philip Troup at New Haven, Conn. Amongst other things, he said: that the Italian immigrant is undesirable that I take great pleasure in reading parts of the address delivered by Mr. Philip Troup at New Haven, Conn. Amongst other things, he said:

The sons of every nation are so proud of their contribution to American progress that we sometimes forget that the late comer may be taking up this work where our fathers left it off. Italian immigration to this country is such a comparatively recent and rapid event that it has not received the recognition and attention it deserves. Previous to his coming American knowledge of the Italian was commonly confined to the single fact that the discoverer of this country, Christopher Columbus, was born an Italian. Even our scholars were more concerned about the dead Roman Empire than about living modern Italy. Prior to 1890 we had little thought of a possible generous Italian contribution to our national growth. I use these words, "generous contribution to our national growth," advisedly, because when it is considered that 85 per cent of Italians who have come to America were between the ages of 18 and 45 and that every one of these able-bodied workers must have cost his native land not less than $1,100 apiece to rear to maturity, it can be readily computed that from the economic standpoint alone. It is sometimes complained among trade unionists that the unskilled immigrant curtalls in some way the chances of American-born skilled labor. On the contrary, it is immigration that assures skilled labor that supply of help to do the rough work which must be a preliminary to all industrial enterprise. There is not, in fact, a single case in which immigration has not tended to increase rather than diminish the demand for skilled workers. Stop immigration into this country to-day, even decrease its flow, and thousands of skilled workers will by force of necessity find themselves listed in the ranks of the drawers of water and the hewers of wood. If the American standard of labor and living has been hard many the stop of the summary of the immigra

There are to-day 242,000,000 acres of fertile unimproved farm lands in the South alone clamoring to nature for cultivation. Here is an area 75 times the size of Connecticut. Nearly half of this land lies east of the Mississippi River, and no section of God's green earth offers such a field for diversified and intensive farming. Moreover, of all the immigration to this country, the intelligent southerner concedes that that from Italy is the best adapted for the agricultural and industrial upbuilding of the South.

to this country, the intelligent southerner concedes that that from Italy is the best adapted for the agricultural and industrial upbuilding of the South.

Yet we sometimes hear alarmists fearsomely fulminate about the danger of America being overrun by immigration. In this connection it might be well to point out that just prior to the European war little Beigium herself was supporting a population in proportion to its area 25 times as great to the square mile as our present population in the United States to-day is about one-fourteenth per square mile of that in Italy; yet the Italian Government has for many years been complaining about and trying to check the drain of its working population to this country. As a matter of fact, compared to its population, less immigration is coming to this country to-day and has come during the past 10 years than came between 1890 and 1900 or even between 1890 and 1890. The United States really has no cause to fear that she will get too much immigration. On the contrary, because of the European conflict, there is a very real danger that for many years to come we will not get enough of it.

It is conceded, however, by some people who favor a more drastic restriction of immigration that while we have plenty of room here, we still have not the proper means to handle, distribute, and assimulate the immigration that is coming to us. The remedy for this condition, however, is not to be found in checking a proper and productive flow of labor into this country which is so badly needed; but rather in its better distribution after it reaches our shores.

The chief trouble, therefore, with our foreign immigration in general and our Italian immigration in particular is to be found rather with how we handle it, not with our getting too much of it. Economically, what America and every nation needs is not less production and wealth, but a fairer distribution of the wealth it creates. Likewise, what we need is not less immigrant labor; but rather a better distribution of those immigrants ha exclude it, and a far more desirable course than to permit it to congest in our cities to its own and our own detriment. We have concentrated our attention altogether too much in recent years in filtering immigration and not enough upon diffusing it.

The latest proposal for the filtration of immigration * * * is to apply the so-called literacy or educational test. Under this un-American plan the immigrant, no matter how skilled, or honest, or willing he may be, is to be barred out unless he can read so many sentences from a Federal Constitution designed by its framers so that the oppressed and lowly of all nations might enjoy unhampered, in this land at least, life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. And all this is actually proposed in the very face of the fact that hundreds of thousands of illiterate immigrants have been the very bone and sinew of our national growth—blazing the trail of our ever onward march westward, opening our mines, reclaiming our waste lands, building our cities. I have known too many illiterate people with a love of work and service in their souls and too many educated people without it; too many uneducated saints and too many educated sinners to take very much stock in a literacy test as a measure of character or indication of fitness for American citizenship. If Almighty God in His infinite wisdom had ever intended the soil of America to be reserved merely for those fortunate enough to have enjoyed educational advantages in their own lands, then it is really too bad that Christopher Columbus was ever allowed to discover this new world with an illiterate crew.

Then there is that class of snob in whom pride of race has such an

Then there is that class of snob in whom pride of race has such an ancient and fishy smell that it is their constant fear that the purity of their aristocratic blood will be defiled by the allen invasion from southern Europe. Here we have an old concert in a new dress. Daniel save funeral expenses its corpse has been sneaking about mother earth ever since, forgetful that after all the great nations and races have been those of mingled bloods and that good blood, like good tobacco, depends upon the mixture.

The American Nation is in fact great because we also are a mixed race, a veritable congress of nations. Let a people breed in and in and it will England Yankee stock can thank God to-day that a new infusion of immigrant blood is saving it from itself. The salvation of America comes to us not in the cabin de luxe, but in the steerage of our occan liners. The cradle of America's future rests as truly in the hold of the Mayfoscer when she put into Plymouth Harbor in 1620.

And why in this process of transhiston of the blood of all the nations of the control of the line of all the nations of the control of the line of all the nations of the control of the line of all the nations of the line of line of the lin evidence that the Italian is the stuff out of which the future American can be made.

No! Sons of Italy, real Americans have no fears about Italian immigration. The son of Italy in America is taking care of himself very nicely and will, we hope, continue to do so in increasing numbers. There is not a teacher in our public schools who will not gladly attest to the progress of the children of Italian extraction and the splendid and farreaching effect of their training and education in the Italian homes.

Americans with the true spirit of this land in their souls have too much faith in our public schools to fear the effects of immigration. Every time, in fact, that I note the children of foreign birth and extraction come marching down our public-school steps carrying just as lustily "The Star-Spangled Banner" as any of the native-born children, I know the grand old flag and the grand old Nation of our fathers is safe.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that the House to-day will not forget the traditions which have helped to make this Republic so powerful

I hope that it will not go on record to-day in favor of shutting the gates of the United States to those who may come here after the war, mentally, morally, and physically fit to become citizens of the United States, but whose only crime has been that their native country has not given them an opportunity to receive an education. Let us be guided in the future by the lessons of the past. Let us welcome to our shores those who are able to enter under our present immigration laws and who desire to come here to become citizens of our great Republic, prepared to earn their living by the sweat of their brows, adopt American customs, and, if the time ever comes, be prepared to give to the Nation life, limb, and property in defense of our common flag and country.

I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Can-

NON]. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I have some hesitation in taking the time, as I believe only 20 minutes on a side is allowed. I have talked about the policy of this kind of legislation upon several occasions heretofore in this House, and I believe have voted to sustain the President's veto in all the different messages and shall so vote again to-day. Think of it! Here we are, and how many of us can trace back beyond one generation? Some of us can trace back two generations, some three, some four, and some only one. I am not afraid of any immigration that will come under existing law from any Caucasian country to the United States, as that law stands to-day. We have a good many immigrants in Illinois and in the Middle West, as you have in the East, that came here to better their condition. They talk about the Dagoes. Mr. Speaker, the Dagoes average better labor and better saving, according to their numbers, than an equivalent number of people who have been here for two or three generations. I am not afraid of them. Oh, the man that comes to plunder and the blackhander are refined gentlemen. They can speak, as a rule, several languages. There are several of us in the House who, if the literacy test had been applied when our forebears came here, would not be here in this country to-day. Why should we grow proud? Go down here to Lafay-ette Square and look at the monuments erected there, to Lafayette, to Rochambeau, to Kosciusko, to Steuben, and then one in front of the National Theater to Pulaski, who helped us gain our independence. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to abuse any portion of our citizens, but I can not understand why it is that that portion of our citizenship which comes from the South, with a large colored population, desire to exclude this immigration. The farmers' boys, the tradesmen's boys, the business men's boys in the country are not doing common labor. Nay, nay, They do not go into the mines; they do not go upon the public works; they do not tamp the ties. Much of that work, and the raising of cotton and the work upon the railways down South is done by the African, but let me tell you that with the cessation of immigration during the present war from the other side of the ocean, we are feeling very sadly the loss of people for com-

There was much talk—and it was pure campaign talk—about the negroes coming north to vote the Republican ticket, and all that kind of stuff. Those negroes were coming north to labor, because they got a better wage than they got down South. [Applause.] And I am almost afraid to say how many are coming now, because I may not be accurate, but certainly by the tens of thousands they are coming north. You gentlemen of the South will feel it, and, without personally criticizing, I want to say that I would to God that you could have had the German and the Irish and the Belgian and the Italian in the Southland, for if you had you would have made better progress than you have, though you have made great progress as it is. I can not understand why it is that we are so anxious to close the doors, and while I am not a prophet nor the son of a prophet, in the near future if you pass this law it will be repealed, as it ought to be repealed. Oh, you may say that organized labor or those who lead organized labor do not want this immigration to come. I fail to understand why it is that men who have come here and have become naturalized are so ready to shut the door in the face of their relatives and friends. It is not for me to help them, because I have been here a little longer than some of them have.

I can not say much about the matter, Mr. Speaker. I stand here to support the action of the President of the United States in this veto message. He is my President now. You elected him and he is your President, and while he is mine I have never failed by word or vote to sustain him when I believed his official action was right. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, we will consume our time in one speech.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, that being the case, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN].
Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, neither can I understand why my good friends from the South are in favor of this bill, and I regret that the eloquent champion of the President of the United States, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], whom I see just entering the Hall, has not taken the floor at this time, when the President of this great Republic is on trial to defend Woodrow Wilson. Do you recall his thrilling words the last time the President of the United States was on trial? Why, this building rocked with his eloquence, and lest you forget, let me repeat it.

Standing on this aisle and appealing to his southern comrades, the gentleman from Alabama said, "Where does the South stand, God bless her, in this hour of divided loyalty? Where stands Tennessee, the home of Gen. Jackson, who conquered the flower of the British Army at New Orleans; what will be the answer of the Old North State, with King's Mountain standing there as an everlasting monument to her patriotism and courage." What will be her answer to-night when for the first time in the administration of Woodrow Wilson, a successful attempt, I am afraid, will be made to override his veto. And then my good friend went on to say, "What says the Old Dominion, the State of Washington and Madison, who laid the foundations of the Republic? Where stands Kentucky, the home of Beck and Clay, and the birthplace of Lincoln and Davis, the two leaders of the conflict that resulted in cementing the sections in the bonds of an everlasting Union? Where in this critical hour stands the splendid old Commonwealth of South Carolina, the home of Calhoun and Hayne? Where will Mississippi be found, the home of Prentiss, George, Lamar, and JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS? What says Alabama, the home of John Sharp Williams? What says Alabama, the home of Admiral Semmes, William Yancey, and John T. Morgan"—and the home of the distinguished champion of Woodrow Wilson on every other occasion. [Laughter.] "On her soil, Mr. on every other occasion. [Laughter.] "On her soil, Mr. Speaker, stood the first capital of the Confederacy, and here she stands to-day in the glorious sisterhood, loyally supporting the President of the United States. Louisiana, Florida, and all the other States in the South join hands with the patriotic Representatives in other sections, standing solidly behind the great President of the United States." Text taken not from the Gospel, but from the inspired words of my good friend from Alabama. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, where stands the President of the United States to-night?

The literacy test is not a test of character, of quality, or personal fitness, but would operate in most cases merely as a penalty for lack of opportunity in the country from which the alien seeking admission came. Our experience in the past has not been that the illiterate is as such, an undesirable immigrant.

That is where the great President of the United States stands, and I would like to see the gentleman from Alabama stand with him. [Applause.]

He seems to forget that only the other day his ancestors and those of his colleagues were aliens. They came from England and France, from Ireland and Scotland, from Germany and Russia, from Italy and Poland, and though that great stream of fresh and revivifying blood has ceased to flow into the South, it still comes to us in the North and helps to renew the energies and the courage of our people. Yes, the immigrant has come by the millions into the North. Wherever he has gone schools have sprung up, industries have flourished, trade has increased, prosperity has bloomed, and patriotism, peace, law, order, intelligence, and happiness follow in his footsteps.

This constant addition of new men and new blood to the Republic is as necessary for the health and refreshment, the expansion and continuance of civilization and all it means today as always. Immigration, the advent of new men, new blood, new brains and brawn in our land, is not a question of philanthropy for America; it is a matter of life or death, for the nation that seeks to arrest or stifle the natural laws of life and movement must eventually pay the penalty of lawlessness in stagnation and arrested growth. In my judgment immigration is power and wealth for the land which draws it, and only national perversity and legislative stupidity will deprive us of its blessings.

May I at this time call the attention of the House to a very few of the many messages that have come to me on this question? I have had hundreds of similar letters and telegrams: NEW YORK, January 30, 1917.

Hon. J. A. Gallivan,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. Gallivan: I take the liberty of writing you regarding the immigration bill, which has just been vetoed by the President and is again before Congress for action, as I thought you would like to have my views on this important measure.

The bill, because of the literacy test, would have the effect of excluding those whose sole offense is that they have, without fault of their own, been denied the benefit of an education. It is not a test of character and would deprive the United States of valuable economic forces. In my opinion the cause of illiteracy in most cases is lack of opportunity, and I do not think such lack of opportunity should bar those who wish to enter this country. They may later on acquire an education, but even if they did not their illiteracy would not affect their descendants, for they would very likely secure an education, and judging from the past there is a good chance that they would become worthy and loyal citizens. The parents of some of our best citizens were illiterate when they came here, and I think it would be a great mistake if men and women of sound mind and body, who are industrious and law-abiding, are deprived of the right to take up their homes in this country.

I hope you will do what you can to defeat this bill.

Yours, very truly,

ADOLPH LEWISOHN.

By DAVID A. LOURIE. Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Heflin]. [Applause.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, the eloquent gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gallivan] has read my speech much better than I delivered it here a year ago. At that time I was pleading with gentlemen here to stand by the President in his controversy with a foreign country and to-day I am pleading with the Members of this House to protect the people of the United States from the deadly evil of undesirable immigrants now coming in from foreign countries.

Mr. Speaker, I regret to have to differ with the President on this all-important question, but gentlemen will remember that I voted to pass this same bill over the veto of President Taft and nearly four years ago I voted to pass it over President Wilson's veto, so when I vote to-night to pass this bill over the President's veto. Mr. Speaker, I am consistent with the record that I made on this question before Mr. Wilson became President.

One gentleman has referred to the fact that there are not very many foreigners in my district and that that is the reason that I declare so boldly for restricted immigration. I do not believe that any number of foreigners in my district would keep me from doing what I thought was for the best interest of my country. But, Mr. Speaker, if the presence of any considerable number of foreigners in a congressional district in the United States does intimidate the Representative so that he is afraid to speak his honest convictions on this question, I submit to this House and to the country that it is high time that we declare to all concerned that this country has been accounted that this country has been accounted that the country has been accounted to the country that the country has been accounted to the country that the country has been accounted to the country that the country has been accounted to the country that the country has been accounted to the country that the co cerned that this country shall not become the dumping ground for the criminal hordes and refuse of other countries. [Applause.] Let us appeal to the good citizens who have come into our country from other lands to join with us in protecting and preserving American ideals and institutions,

It is fortunate that there are enough districts here like mine still free to speak for America-districts where the people are in favor of safeguarding our institutions and of protecting our country against the unfit and undesirable citizens of other countries.

Some of the Members here seem to be afraid that they will offend the foreign element in their districts if they vote to restrict immigration. I wonder if these gentlemen have ever thought about what might happen to them if the native element should resent their failure to vote for restricted immigration.

But unfortunately there are some situations in this country where some kind of influences seem to operate on some of the Members of this body so as to cause them to vote always against any restriction of immigration. In some places, if enough foreigners locate to erect a banana stand, sell hot tamales, or turn the crank of a street hand organ, straightway the Member from that district becomes a staunch advocate of unrestricted immigration.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. HEFLIN. I have but little time.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Is there any stand of that kind up at the White House?

Mr. HEFLIN. Oh, no. On a former occasion, Mr. Speaker, I called attention to the fact that a few years ago the new King of Denmark pardoned 700 criminals, and the people of Denmark, unwilling that they should be turned loose upon their country, purchased tickets for these Denmark criminals and sent them over to the United States. Just a little while ago, Mr. Speaker, the present chairman of the Committee on Immigration, Mr. Burnett, of Alabama, was in Sicily learning what he could about this immigration question; and he asked the people there, "What has become of the bandits that used to give you so much trouble?" and they answered, "They have all gone to America."

Gentlemen of this House, we owe a duty to that flag hanging there above the Speaker's chair. Thomas Jefferson said more than 100 years ago:

While we are providing for the fortification of our country against a foreign foe, I am in favor of fortifying it against the influx of undesirable immigration.

[Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SABATH. I yield one minute to the gentleman from

New York [Mr. LONDON].

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I just want to register my final protest against this monstrosity, the result of ignorance, of prejudice, of sectionalism, of that narrow selfishness which robs one of his sympathy for his fellow man.

The nationalities, some of whose children will be excluded from the shores of America through this iniquitous measure, have contributed more than their share to the civilization of the world. They are all of the same human stock. Give them the same opportunity which has been extended to the immigrant of the past, whether literate or illiterate, and they will all rise to the dignity of American citizenship and help you build and maintain a free and great Republic forever and evermore. [Applause.]
Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote to sustain the presidential veto, not as a supporter of the President but as a man believing in American institutions and the conditions under which this country has prospered. We have assimilated into our citizenship those who have come to our shores willing to assume its responsibilities and its benefits. It is worthy of recognition that two previous Presidents, in addition to President Wilson—one Democrat and one Republican—have both vetoed this same general bill. No matter what other points may be covered in the bill the literacy test is the one distinctive feature. In view of the history of the country, of the noted men and women who have contributed to its success, who themselves or their parents would have been excluded from coming here had a literacy test been law ought not to be edopted now. Our history is filled with notable examples of the successes which have followed immigration here of illiterates. The State of Massachusetts can offer its share of examples. Just one illustration. A four power is share of examples. Just one illustration: A few years ago this subject was up in Republican State convention in Massachusetts. delegate arose, one of the leading business men of Worcester and at that time its mayor, who said, in effect, "If the literacy test was law I never could have come to this country." This is only one of many possible illustrations. The literacy test is unAmerican, undemocratic, unpatriotic. I will gladly support and gladly vote for a moral or physical test of a rigid kind. We want to exclude from our citizenship those not morally or physically fit, but not those who have lacked opportunity to secure the rudiments of education. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama would like to make this House and the people of the country believe that he is a greater American than Jefferson, Cleve-land, or our great President, Mr. Wilson. If he were familiar with the people residing in the North, he would not dare to make the statements that he has made to-night.

Mr. HEFLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. No; I have not the time. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, I yield to no one in my patriotism and my love for our country, and the same applies to 99 per cent of those immigrants for whom we are pleading. Oh, Mr. Speaker, three times hefore

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SABATH. Oh, you know that I have not the time. I am willing to discuss the question with the gentleman, but not now. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois declines to vield.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, three times before the immigration bill containing the literacy test has been vetoed; three Presidents of this great and glorious country have thus properly expressed their disapproval of this un-American measure. The first time was in 1897, when President Cleveland refused to give his sanction to a bill containing this obnoxious provision. shall read, for the benefit of the membership of the House, President Cleveland's message returning the bill without his signature:

To the House of Representatives:

I hereby return without approval House bill No. 7864, entitled "An act to amend the immigration laws of the United States."

By the first section of this bill it is proposed to amend section 1 of the act of March 3, 1891, relating to immigration by adding to the classes of aliens thereby excluded from admision to the United States the act of March 3, 1891, relating to immigration by adding to the classes of aliens thereby excluded from admision to the United States the following:

"All persons physically capable and over 16 years of age who can not read and write the English language or some other language * * *."

A radical departure from our national policy relating to immigrants is here presented. Heretofore we have welcomed all who came to us from other lands except those whose moral or physical condition or history threatened danger to our national welfare and safety. Relying upon the zealous watchfulness of our people to prevent injury to our political and social fabric, we have encouraged those coming from foreign countries to cast their lot with us and join in the development of our vast domain, securing in return a share in the blessings of American citizenship.

our vast domain, securing in return a share in the blessings of American citizenship.

A century's stupendous growth, largely due to the assimilation and thrift of millions of sturdy and patriotic adopted citizens, attests the success of this generous and free-handed policy which, while guarding the people's interests, exacts from our immigrants only physical and moral soundness and a willingness and ability to work.

A contemplation of the grand results of this policy can not fail to rouse a sentiment in its defense, for however it might have been regarded as an original proposition and viewed as an experiment, its accomplishments are such that if it is to be uprooted at this late day its disadvantages should be plainly apparent and the substitute adopted should be just and adequate, free from uncertainties, and guarded against difficult or oppressive administration.

It is not claimed, I believe, that the time has come for the further restriction of immigration on the ground that an excess of population overcrowds our land.

It is said, however, that the quality of recent immigration is undesirable. The time is quite within recent memory when the same thing was said of immigrants who, with their descendants, are now numbered among our best citizens.

A careful examination of this bill has convinced me that for the reasons given and others not specifically stated its provisions are unnecessarily harsh and oppressive, and that its defects in construction would cause vexation and its operation would result in harm to our citizens.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

Mr. Speaker, the second time that a President of the United States refused to indorse this shameless test was when President Taft, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of Labor, Charles Nagel, returned the bill to the Senate with the statement that I will insert:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 3175.

I do this with great rejuctance. The bill contains many valuable amendments to the present immigration law which will insure greater certainty in excluding undestrable immigrants.

The bill received strong support in both Houses and was recommended by an able commission after an extended investigation and carefully drawn conclusions.

But I can not make up my mind to sign a bill which in its chief provision violates a principle that ought, in my opinion, to be upheld in dealing with our immigration. I refer to the literacy test. For the reasons stated in Secretary Nagle's letter to me, I can not approve that test. The Secretary's letter accompanies this.

WM. H. Tapt,

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, Washington, February 14, 1913.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR,

Washington, February 12, 1913.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: On the 4th instant Mr. Hilles, by your direction, sent me Senate bill 3175, "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States," with the request that I inform you at my earliest convenience if I know of any objection to its approval. I now return the bill with my comments.

In view of the number of the support of the number of the number tion of allens to and the residence of allens in the United States, with the request that I inform you at my earliest convenience if I know of any objection to its approval. I now return the bill with my comments.

In view of the number of hearings and the general discussion that have been had no more than a brief reference to many of the points will be necessary. The following are some of the objections that have been raised:

First. No exception has been made in behalf of Hawaii. You have been assured that it is proposed to meet this objection by joint resolution. Even if this plan should not be carried out, I do not regard the objection as sufficiently serious to affect the merits of the bill.

Second. The provision that persons shall be excluded who can not become elligible under existing law to become citizens of the United States by naturalization is obscure, because it leaves unsettled the question as to who are to be regarded as white persons. But this is merely a perpetuation of the uncertainty which is now to be found in the naturalization law.

Third. The provision that the Secretary may determine in advance upon application whether it is necessary to import skilled labor in any particular instance, that this decision shall be held in abeyance for 30 days, and that in the meantime anyone objecting may appeal to the district courts to try de novo such question of necessity is unsatisfactory. The provision for the appeal to the courts is probably unconstitutional, but even if the entire provision proves ineffective the law will be left substantially where it is, and so this does not constitute a grave objection to the bill.

Fourth. The provision that the Secretary may detail immigrants or immigrant passengers is objected to by foreign countries, but inasmuch as this is left to the discretion of the Secretary, and it is understood, for illustration, that Italy insists upon such practice with respect to all steamship companies taking immigrants from her shores, it does not seem to me that this is a cont

With respect to the literacy test, I feel compelled to state a different conclusion. In my opinion this is a provision of controlling importance, not only because of the immediate effect which it may have upon immigration and the embarrassment and cost it may impose upon the service, but because it involves a principle of far-reaching consequence with respect to which your attitude will be regarded with profound interest.

service, but occause it involves a principle of far-reaching consequence with respect to which your attitude will be regarded with profound interest.

The provision as it now appears will require careful reading. In some measure the group system is adopted—that is, one qualified immigrant may bring in certain members of his family—but the effect seems to be that a qualified alien may bring in members of his family who may themseives be disqualified, whereas a disqualified member would exclude all dependent members of his family, no matter how well qualified they might otherwise be. In other words, a father who can read a dialect might bring in an entire family of absolutely fillerate people, barring his sons over 16 years of age, whereas a father who can read a dialect would bring about the exclusion of his entire family, although every one of them can read and write.

Furthermore, the distinction in favor of the female members of the family as against the male members does not seem to me to rest upon sound reason. Sentimentally, of course, it appeals, but industrially considered it does not appear to me that the distinction is sound. Furthermore, there is no provision for the admission of aliens who have been domiciled here and who have simply gone abroad for a visit. The test would absolutely exclude them upon return.

In the administration of this law very considerable embarrassment will be experienced. This, at least, is the judgment of members of the immigration force, upon whose recommendations I rely. Delay will necessarily ensue at all ports, but on the borders of Canada and Mexico that delay will almost necessarily result in great friction and constant complaint. Furthermore, the force will have to be very considerably increased, and the appropriation will probably be in excess of present sums expended by as much as a million dollars. The force of interpreters will have to be largely increased, and, practically speaking, the bureau will have to be largely increased, and, practically speaking, the burea will it be possible for the officials in charge to exercise anything like supervision.

Apart from these considerations, I am of the opinion that this provision can not be defended upon its merits. It was originally urged as a selective test. For some time recommendations in its support upon that ground have been brought to our attention. The matter has been considered from that point of view, and I became completely satisfied that upon that ground the test could not be sustained. The older argument is now abandoned, and in the later conferences, at least, the ground is taken that the provision is to be defended as a practical measure to exclude a large proportion of undesirable immigrants from certain countries. The measure proposes to reach its result by indirection, and is defended purely upon the ground of practical policy, the final purpose being to reduce the quantity of cheap labor in this country. I can not accept this argument. No doubt the law would exclude a considerable percentage of immigration from southern Italy, among the Poles, the Mexicans, and the Greeks. This exclusion would embrace probably in large part undersirables, but also a great many desirable people, and the embarrassment, expense, and distress to those who seek to enter would be out of all proportion to any good that can possibly be promised for this measure.

My observation leads me to the conclusion that, so far as the merits this measure.

My observation leads me to the conclusion that, so far as the merits of the individual immigrant are concerned, the test is altogether overestimated. The people who come from the countries named are frequently liliterate because opportunities have been denied them. The oppression with which these people have to contend in modern times is not religious, but it consists of a denial of the opportunity to acquire reading and writing. Frequently the attempt to learn to read and write the language of the particular people is discouraged by the government, and these immigrants in coming to our shores are really striving to free themselves from the conditions under which they have been compelled to live.

So far as the industrial conditions are concerned, I think the question has been superficially considered. We need labor in this country, and the natives are unwilling to do the work which the aliens come over to do. It is perfectly true that in a few cities and localities there are congested conditions. It is equally true that in very much larger areas we are practically without help. In my judgment, no sufficiently earnest and intelligent effort has been made to bring our wants and our supply together, and so far the same forces that give the chief support to this provision of the new bill have stubbornly resisted any effort looking to an intelligent distribution of new immigration to meet the needs of our vast country. In my judgment, no such drastic measure based upon a ground which is untrue and urged for a reason which we are unwilling to assert should be adopted until we have at least exhausted the possibilities of a rational distribution of these new forces.

Furthermore, there is a misapprehension as to the character of the people who come over here to remain. It is true that in certain localities newly arrived aliens live under deplorable conditions. Just as much may be said of certain localities that have been inhabited for a hundred years by natives of this country. These are not the general conditions, but they are the exceptions. It is true that a very considerable portion of immigrants do not come to remain, but return after they have acquired some means certainly must be admitted to have left with southern.

Again, an examination of the aliens who come to stay is of great significance. During the last fiscal year 838,172 aliens came to our shores, although the net immigration of the year was only a trifle above 400,000. But while we received of skilled labor 127,016, and only 35,898 returned, we received servants 116,529, and only 13,449 returned; we received farm laborers 184,154, and only 3,978 returned; it appears that laborers came in the number of 135,726, while 209,279 returned. These figures ought to demonstrate that we get substantially what we most need and what we can not ourselves supply, and that we get rid of what we least need and what seems to furnish, in the minds of many, the chief justification for the bill now under discussion.

tially what we most need and what we can not ourselves supply, and that we get rid of what we least need and what seems to furnish, in the minds of many, the chief justification for the bill now under discussion.

The census returns show conclusively that the importance of illiteracy among aliens is overestimated, and that these people are prompt after their arrival to avail of the opportunities which this country affords. While, according to the reports of the Bureau of Immigration, about 25 per cent of the incoming aliens are illiterate, the census shows that among the foreign-born people of such States as New York and Massachusetts, where most of the congestion complained of has taken place, the proportion of illiteracy represents only about 13 per cent.

I am persuaded that this provision of the bill is in principle of very great consequence, and that it is based upon a fallacy in undertaking to apply a test which is not calculated to reach the truth and to find relief from a danger which really does not exist. This provision of the bill is new, and it is radical. It goes to the heart of the measure. It does not permit of compromise, and, much as I regret it, because the other provisions of the measure are in most respects excellent and in no respect really objectionable, I am forced to advise that you do not approve this bill.

Very sincerely, yours,

Charles Nagel,

Very sincerely, yours,

CHARLES NAGEL, Secretary.

The PRESIDENT.

Mr. Speaker, the third time that this bill containing this unjustifiable test was returned to Congress, it was our President, Woodrow Wilson, who, on the 28th day of January, 1915, condemned the literacy test in the following words:

TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES :

To the House of Representatives:

It is with unaffected regret that I find myself constrained by clear conviction to return this bill (H. R. 6060, "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States") without my signature. Not only do I feel it to be a very serious matter to exercise the power of veto in any case, because it involves opposing the single judgment of the President to the judgment of a majority of both the Houses of the Congress, a step which no man who realizes his own liability to error can take without great hesitation, but also because this particular bill is in so many important respects admirable, well conceived, and desirable. Its enactment into law would undoubtedly enhance the efficiency and improve the methods of handling the important branch of the public service to which it relates. But candor and a sense of duty with regard to the responsibility so clearly imposed upon me by the Constitution in matters of legislation leave me no choice but to dissent.

In two particulars of vital consequence this bill embodies a radical departure from the traditional and long-established policy of this country, a policy in which our people have conceived the very character of their Government to be expressed, the very mission and spirit of the Nation in respect of its relations to the peoples of the world outside their borders. It seeks to all but close entirely the gates of asylum which have always been open to those who could find nowhere else the right and opportunity of constitutional agitation for what they conceived to be the natural and inalienable rights of men; and it excludes those to whom the opportunities of elementary education have been denied, without regard to their character, their purposes, or their natural cancelity.

ceived to be the natural and inalienable rights of men; and it excludes those to whom the opportunities of elementary education have been denied, without regard to their character, their purposes, or their natural capacity.

Restrictions like these, adopted earlier in our history as a Nation, would very materially have altered the course and cooled the humane ardors of our politics. The right of political asylum has brought to this country many a man of noble character and elevated purpose who was marked as an outlaw in his own less fortunate land, and who has yet become an ornament to our citizenship and to our public councils. The children and the compatriots of these illustrious Americans must stand amazed to see the representatives of their Nation now resolved, in the fullness of our national strength and at the maturity of our great institutions, to risk turning such men back from our shores without test of quality or purpose. It is difficult for me to believe that the full effect of this feature of the bill was realized when it was framed and adopted, and it is impossible for me to assent to it in the form in which it is here cast.

The literacy test and the tests and restrictions which accompany it constitute an even more radical change in the policy of the Nation. Hitherto we have generously kept our doors open to all who were not unfitted by reason of disease or incapacity for self-support or such personal records and antecedents as were likely to make them a menace to our peace and order or to the wholesome and essential relationships of life. In this bill it is proposed to turn away from tests of character or of personal fitness, but tests of opportunity. Those who come seeking opportunity are not to be admitted unless they have already had one of the chief of the opportunities they seek, the opportunity of education. The object of such provisions is restriction, not selection.

If the people of this country have made up their minds to limit the number of immigrants by arbitrary tests and so reverse nounce their wish. The matter is too runsultant to therewise.

I have no pride of opinion in this question. I am not foolish enough to profess to know the wishes and ideals of America better than the body of her chosen representatives know them. I only want instruction direct from those whose fortunes, with ours and all men's, are involved.

Woodrow Wilson.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 28 January, 1915.

Each time, Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives re-fused to override the President's veto, and I hope and trust that before you gentlemen depart from the traditions of long-established policy you will carefully consider your act. In my humble opinion at no time has it been so important and so much in the interests of this country that we should sustain the President in his veto as it is to-day.
On January 29, 1917, President Wilson for the second time returned the immigration bill, containing the literacy test, to the House of Representatives without his approval, and I shall read, for the information of the gentlemen of the House, his message accompanying the bill:

To the House of Representatives:

message accompanying the bill:

To the House of Representatives:

I very much regret to return this bill (H. R. 10384, "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States") without my signature. In most of the provisions of the bill I should be very glad to concur, but I can not rid myself of the conviction that the literacy test constitutes a radical change in the policy of the Nation which is not justified in principle. It is not a test of character, of quality, or of personal fitness, but would operate In most cases merely as a penalty for lack of opportunity in the country from which the allen seeking admission came. The opportunity to gain an education is in many cases one of the chief opportunities sought by the immigrant in coming to the United States, and our experience in the past has not been that the illiterate immigrant is as such an undesirable immigrant. Tests of quality and of purpose can not be objected to on principle, but tests of opportunity surely may be.

Moreover, even if this test might be equitably insisted on, one of the exceptions proposed to its application involves a provision which might lead to very delicate and hazardous diplomatic situations. The bill exempts from the operation of the literacy test "all aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States to avoid religious persecution he evidenced by overt acts or by laws or governmental regulations that discriminate against the alien or the race to which he belongs because of his religious faith." Such a provision, so applied and administered, would oblige the officer concerned in effect to pass judgment upon the laws and practices of a foreign Government and declare that they did or did not constitute religious persecution. This would, to say the least, be a most invidious function for any administrative officer of this Government to perform, and it is not only possible but p

The WHITE HOUSE, January 29, 1917.

Mr. Speaker, I can not believe that a country, which from its inception, has stood for liberty and freedom, and which has been recognized as a haven of refuge for the persecuted and oppressed of all the suffering people of the world, will now shut the gates upon them and refuse them the benefits of this great and glorious land.

I can not, Mr. Speaker, and gentlemen, help but believe that a large number of Members, who, I am informed, are about to cast their votes in favor of passing the bill over the President's veto, will do so under a misapprehension. I feel that if they were familiar with the present immigration law, and the rules and regulations of the Department of Labor, and knew how strictly the law was being enforced, they would not cast their votes erroneously, as it appears they are about to do.

For this reason I shall again call the attention of the House to some of the provisions of the present law and try to offset the effect of the misrepresentations that have been made from time to time by certain restrictionists in their mad desire to gain the votes of Members who have not had the time or the opportunity to familiarize themselves with the true facts. The following are some of those who are excluded under section 3 of the present law: Idiots, imbeclies, feeble-minded, epileptics, insane persons, those who have been insane within five years, those who have had two or more attacks of insanity, paupers, beggars, persons afflicted with tuberculosis or with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease, those who have been convicted or admit having committed a felony or other crime or misde-meanor involving moral turpitude, polygamists, anarchists, persons who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force of established government, immoral men and women or those who come here for immoral purposes, contract laborers, persons whose tickets have been paid for with money of another or those whose passage has been paid for with money of another or those whose passage has been paid by any association, society, municipality, or foreign government, children under 16 years of age not accompanied by one or both of their parents, and, last but not least, all persons likely to become a public charge, and all persons who are found to be mentally or physically defective, such mental or physical defect being of a nature affecting their publication. ability to earn a living.

The last two provisions give the immigration authorities such a wide range of power as will enable them to bar most any man or woman who is not in every way perfect physically as well as mentally

In addition to this provision the rules and regulations promulgated by the Department of Labor from year to year are such that to-day it is within the power of the department to permit only those to enter whom the department desires to accept. I feel satisfied that even the most rabid restrictionist can not charge the department with not enforcing each and every provision of the act, as well as the rules and regulations tending toward restriction.

For the past two years immigration has been nearly at a standstill. Immigration from the southern section of Europe has been practically nil. Notwithstanding this fact the department has barred or deported a larger percentage of immigrants than ever before in the history of the Nation.

In 1915 out of 326,700 arriving immigrants 24,111 were debarred

In 1916 out of 298,000 arriving immigrants 18,867 were debarred.

This is not taking into consideration the 2,564 persons deported in 1915, nor the 2,781 persons deported in 1916.

The above proves that we not only have a very stringent law but that it is vigorously enforced.

I realize that there are some Members who do not desire to be enlightened or to become familiar with the actual facts—who are blinded by prejudice to such an extent that they can not see nor hear. To them I am not appealing, nor do I care to try to convince them that a great mistake would be committed if this bill should pass in its present form. These are the gentlemen who do not care to know that in the year 1915 the difference between immigration and emigration was only 50,070, and in the year 1916 only 25,941

Nor will I try to show them that the majority of those who came in 1915 and 1916 were of English, French, German, Scotch, Scandinavian, and Spanish blood. They are not anxious to know that the majority of those debarred as well as those deported belong to the so-called favored nationalities.

In fact, nothing that I or anyone else can say would wipe out the prejudice, which has been instilled in them, against the immigrant—the immigrant who has helped to develop our country, who at all times has demonstrated his worth, his faithfulness, and loyalty to our country and its flag; immigrants who have helped to make this the greatest agricultural as well as industrial Nation of the world, immigrants who have helped to open the markets of the world to our products and have helped to make the country greater and more prosperous than any other.

In view of the fact that the restrictionists were not able to maintain the position which they originally assumed, they hit upon a scheme which they thought would be popular and appeal to the people. They started to advocate the so-called literacy test, preaching and heralding the slogan that we do not want the ignorant, illiterate foreigner.

If they would be honest and sincere, they would have to admit that illiteracy is not ignorance, and that the literacy test will not keep out the so-called dangerous and troublesome immigrant, as I have frequently pointed out on the floor of the House.

Mr. Speaker, a few years ago Mr. L. S. Amanson wrote a short poem which expresses the case of the immigrant with eloquence and exactness. I shall read that poem with a few slight variations:

A MESSAGE TO CONGRESS FROM THE MEN AT THE GATE.

We've dug your million ditches;
We've built your endless roads;
We've fetched your wood and water,
And bent beneath the loads.
We've done the lowly labor
Despised by your own breed;
And now you won't admit us
Because we can not read.

Oh, statesmen, high in Congress,
From North, South, East, and West,
You render valued service,
As pen and tongue you test.
The sons are like the fathers,
Hard work is not their creed;
They won't swing picks and shovels,
But then—they all can gead.

We've given honest labor
And liked our humble lot;
Our children learn the letters
Their fathers haven't got.
We've fled from persecution
And served you in your need;
But now you would debar us
Because we can not read.

Most crooks are educated
And to the manner born;
Their white hands show no callous;
They look on us with scorn.
Mere learning is not virtue,
The word is not the deed;
Disdain, then, not your toilers
Because they can not read.

Good friends, if we are brothers,
Why do you raise this test?
Will talk, then, till your acres
And feed your people best?
Rich children, trained as idlers,
Some workers you must need;
Don't bar our only refuge
Because we can not read.

Your farms are half deserted— Up goes the price of bread! Your boasted education Turns men to dudes instead. We bring our picks and shovels To meet your greatest need; Don't shut the gates upon us Because we can not read.

Mr. Speaker, I will now read an editorial from the Washington Post of January 25, 1917, in which the following comment is made on the literary test:

The literacy test, which Congress recently approved, probably is the most foolish and un-American test that could be devised. Many immigrants who can neither read nor write make excellent American citizens. Many of them come here for the particular object of educating themselves and their children. Having no anarchistic teachings to unlearn, they are good material for citizenship.

Many of the immigrants who can read and write, on the other hand, make poor citizens. The theories they have already formed may be wholly in conflict with the spirit of American institutions. They may be unwilling to do any work that is required of them.

In a statement issued by Cardinal Gibbons on January 25, four days before the President vetoed the bill which we are now considering, the following opinion was expressed:

It is disappointing to many thoughtful citizens that the immigration bill has passed both Houses of Congress. By this measure illiterates will in the future be excluded from entrance into this country. It is to be hoped that Mr. Wilson will act with the same good judgment as he has done on a former like occasion and veto the bill. Similar bills have been vetoed by preceding Presidents, who have been conizant of the harmful effects this test of literacy would have upon desirable immigration.

the harmful effects this test of literacy would have speak gration.

Illiteracy should not be confounded with ignorance. There is an old axiom which reads that "intellectual attainments are not the test of virtue." Many of the most dangerous members of the community are men of keen and trained intellect but of deprayed morals. The normal sturdy illiterate has a receptive mind, capable of early development. Had the United States refused such illiterates from the beginning of our Government, our country would have lost the benefit of their virtue.

thrift, industry, and enterprising spirit. And the descendants of such forbears are an honor to their fathers and a credit and an asset to our country, for they have been rapidly incorporated and identified with the native population by the assimilating process of education and the common use of the English tongue. In consequence of this it would be hard to differentiate the children of foreign immigrants from those of native American parents.

Mr. Speaker, it has been said that at the close of the present European conflict there will be a great influx of immigrants into the United States. On the contrary, thousands upon thousands of American citizens and aliens, as soon as the war is over, will depart for the fatherland and for the Old World to take the places of their older brothers and fathers who have been killed in this terrible war.

Some try to make us believe that immigration, after the war is over, will increase, but these statements can not be substantiated.

Europe will need every healthy citizen to help to rebuild its industries, and those who are not of sound mind and body can not enter the United States under the present immigration law.

Those who could come here under the present law the foreign Governments will not permit to come, as they will be needed at home.

Mr. Speaker, I will not detain the House any longer, but I a strange land.

For this reason it is only the individual who is brave enough and determined enough to better his condition in life who has the moral courage to take such a step. It is this character of man that first settled upon our shores, and it is this character of man, coming to our shores in constantly increasing num-do want to say that it is not easy to break home ties; it is not easy to leave one's native land, no matter what the conditions are under which the people of a particular country may be living. It is not easy to abandon home and friends and depart for bers, who has made possible the tremendous growth of our country. [Applause.] The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, the old, old argument that has been made by gentlemen opposed to this bill every time a veto has been considered is, "You must stand by the President," whether that veto stands for the people or not.

I am not going to criticize the President. I believe that he is a great President and a great man. But the appeal that gentlemen have made ought not to swerve men who on their oaths are responsible to the people that sent them here. The President himself, in his veto message two years ago, referring to the illiteracy test, said:

Has any political party ever avowed a policy of restriction in this fundamental manner, gone to the country on it, and been commissioned to control its legislation?

Mr. Speaker, that message as well as this message shows that the President has not had the opportunity to give the subject the careful and thorough investigation that the Representatives of the people, who are responsible to the people, have done. Before that time both the Republican Party and the Democratic Party had made platform declarations on the subject. The Republican Party in its platform of 1896 had declared specifically for the test and went to the people and was commissioned by them to control legislation. The Democratic Party as far back as 1896 declared in its national platform in favor of the exclusion of all pauper labor.

The President refers in his message of last Monday to the lack of educational opportunity of illiterate aliens.

Mr. Speaker, in these days lack of opportunity among the most illiterate people who come here does not exist. They come principally from southern Italy; and of the north Italians not more than 5 per cent are illiterate, and yet they, the north and south Italians, live under the same king, the same parliament, the same compulsory education laws; and while the north Italian does embrace the opportunity he has had, the south Italian does not. We get literates from south Italy, which shows that men can make their own opportunity if they want to, in so far as an elementary education is concerned.

Mr. Speaker, the President also gives another reason for the veto. He gives as his second reason, which reason I see my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath], has not discussed, that the exemption from the test of persons fleeing solely to escape religious persecution imposes an invidious function on our immigration officials. He says he disapproves the provision that was put in at the instance of the gentle-man from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] himself, and now the gentle-man's support of the veto of the President puts him in the attitude of voting to disown his own child. In the goodness of their hearts the members of our committee and of this Congress have said that those who are fleeing from religious persecution should be admitted, whether that persecution was manifested by law, by overt acts, or by governmental regulations.

The President gives as his reason that that provision allows an administrative officer to pass upon the laws and regulations of other countries. As has been said in this debate by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], we have had a law for many years which provides that persons who have been convicted of, or who admit the commission of, a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude are to be excluded, and in the same section it says:

Nothing in this act shall exclude, if otherwise admissible, persons convicted of an offense purely political, not involving moral turpitude.

That provision involves the same kind of function as the one the President gives as his second reason for vetoing the bill. Yet, no such trouble as the President fears has ever arisen from such function.

We should not lose sight of the fact that the bill contains much other needed legislation which the President says he favors, and in this connection I wish to read the following article from the editorial page of the New York Times of last Monday. It was written by Prof. Robert De C. Ward, of Harvard University. Prof. Ward says:

in this connection I wish to read the following article from the editorial page of the New York Times of last Monday. It was written by Prof. Robert De C. Ward, of Harvard University. Prof. Ward says:

In your editorial article in the Times for January 20 entitled "The labor exclusion bill," you say: "The new bill is against the entry of desirables. It is not in the interest of public morality or public health." May I take the liberty of differing with you most emphatically in this view? I hold no brief at this time for the reading test. It seems to me, however, that most of those who attack this provision have not read the immigration bill at all and to not realize that this bill covers about discussed reading test. With the many exceptions which are made in its application, this provision seems to me a rather unimportant part of the bill as a whole. It certainly is not worth all the fuss that is being made over it. It is in regard to the rest of the bill—the 58 or 39 pages of the world of the workings. Its provisions, as the Commissioner General or speak. The new bill, in my judgment, a distinctly fact assistance to speak. The new bill, in my judgment, a distinctly fact assistance of its workings. tension of the deportation period has been urged, year in and year out, by heads of institutions who have had to do with dependent, defective, and delinquent aliens, by organized charitable societies, and, perhaps most strongly, by the former Commissioner of Immigration at the port of New York, the Hon. William Williams, whose thorough, sane, and illuminating study of the whole immigration problem has contributed greatly to our understanding of the subject. It is the conviction of all the unprejudiced experts who have studied this problem that a five-year deportation period would relieve our penal and charitable institutions of an enormous financial burden, reaching into the millions of dollars, and would rid our communities of large numbers of defectives who otherwise would remain here, many of them a burden upon State or city, and many of them starting long lines of defective and delinquent children.

The new bill strengthens the provisions of existing law regarding the "white-slave" traffic; makes the inspection of steerage quarters more thorough; compels steamship companies, when deporting aliens, to give such aliens as good quarters as those for which they paid on the voyage to this country; makes possible the expulsion from the country of alien anarchists and criminals, even when they have become such after entry; and in many other ways provides for the welfare of the alien as well as for the welfare of the United States.

Gentlemen have talked here about the South wanting this legislation, as if the South alone wanted it. Mr. Speaker, the pressure for this bill comes more strongly from the workingmen of the North, where they feel the effect of pauper competition. Three millions of the American Federation of Labor, 1,000,000 farmers in the National Grange-I have their resolution here a million or two of farmers in the Farmers' Congress, thousands of members of patriotic organizations, and others. begging Members to-day to stand by their people, to stand by their convictions. There is no sectionalism in this bill. The President is just one branch of this Government. Three hundred and seven, against eighty-seven, Members of this House said last March that the people of the country wanted this legislation. Are we now, by appeals to stand by the President—and that is all they have—to be diverted from what our people want and what is right in order that 307 may bow to the will of one man?

Mr. Speaker, I want, as briefly as possible, to give an analysis of the most important new legislation in this bill, as I am sure that it will soon become a law. The head tax is increased from $4 to $8 for admission of aliens. However, we exempt from this tax children under 16 years of age who accompany their father or

The present law exacts this tax of all aliens, including even babes in the arms of the mother. The exception referred to in favor of children under 16 years of age will prevent this tax bringing in quite double the revenue now derived from that source, but the fact that in the new law it is exacted of alien seamen and some others now exempted will bring it up to almost double what we now receive.

In section 3 we add to the excluded classes many who are either mentally or physically afflicted not now excluded; also persons who advocate or teach the unlawful destruction of prop-This will keep out the militant suffragettes of England and other persons advocating like principles. While I am not an advocate of woman's suffrage, yet be it said to the credit of nearly all the good women of America who favor equal suffrage that they are trying to get that legislation by sane and peaceful Even those who are trying to exploit themselves by picketing the White House grounds get no sympathy from the great majority of the women who are from principle advocating woman's suffrage, and the three members of the Immigration Committee from equal-suffrage States were among the strongest advocates of this provision of the bill.

The law excluding contract laborers and those in any way assisted, induced, or solicited to come to this country, and against those who induce, assist, or solicit them to come has been greatly strengthened.

Asiatics excluded by the geographical boundary in section 3 of the bill embrace Hindus and several hundred millions of other people on the continent of Asia and islands adjacent thereto. These people are beginning to come to the Pacific coast in large numbers, and but for this exclusion law would soon become a serious menace to our country.

The Chinese-exclusion law is not interfered with except to be greatly strengthened, and we now have a gentleman's agreement with Japan by which passports are refused the coolies of that Empire, who are thus kept out. A provision is placed in this law by which no alien can be admitted who is now in any way excluded from or prevented from entering the United States. Should Japan at any time violate or abrogate this agreement, eo instanti this provision would keep them out.

The storm center of this bill is and has ever been the illiteracy test. This excludes all aliens over 16 years of age who are unable to read at least 30 ordinary words of English or some other language or dialect, including Hebrew or Yiddish. However, any admissible alien, or any alien heretofore admitted is permitted to send for or bring in his father or grandfather over 65 years of age, his wife, mother, grandmother, or his unmarried or widowed daughter without regard to the illiteracy test, if they are otherwise admissible.

These exceptions are made so as not to keep out dependent relatives on account of their being unable to read.

In order that our country may continue, as it has always been, the haven for those oppressed on account of religious belief, we except from the reading test all aliens seeking admission to avoid religious persecution, whether such persecution is evidenced by overt acts or by laws or governmental regulations that discriminate against the alien or the race to which he belongs because of his religious faith. This exception will effect not only many Russian Jews, but many Protestants and Catholics from Armenia and other countries. The literacy-test provision has for many years been the subject of earnest and sometimes bitter controversy.

In 1897 a somewhat similar provision was vetoed by President Cleveland. The House promptly passed it over his veto by a large margin, but, as it only reached the Senate for action on the veto on the 4th of March in the closing hours of that Congress and of Mr. Cleveland's administration, it was not acted on by that body. There was some excuse for the veto of President Cleveland, for at that time the tremendous alien immigration from southern Europe to this country had not set in. During the year 1897 the total foreign immigration to this country was only 230,832, while for the year ending June 30, 1914, it was 1,218,480.

The south Italians alone coming in during the last fiscal year before the war in Europe were 251,612, or 20,000 more than came in from all countries during the year of President Cleveland's So it will be seen that no such necessity for the law existed then as now.

Of course, with the war raging in Europe, the number of arrivals has greatly decreased, but when the war is over hundreds of thousands of the denizens of the slums of European and of Asiatic cities will rush to our shores unless they are kept out by

In 1913 President Taft vetoed the bill and the Senate passed it. over his veto by a vote of 4 to 1, but it failed of passage over his veto in the House by only a few votes

In 1915 President Wilson vetoed the bill and it failed of passage over the veto by only eight votes.

Last March the bill passed this House by a vote of 307 to 87, and a few weeks ago it passed the Senate by 64 to 7.

Unless many Representatives and Senators go back on this recent vote, it will now be passed over the President's veto in both Houses by a large majority.

Twelve years ago, at my own request, I was assigned to the Committee on Immigration and began the study of this important question. During that session the Senate passed a bill containing the illiteracy test, but that provision was stricken out by the House, and in conference an agreement was reached providing for a commission to investigate the subject of immigration both in the United States and foreign countries and to report its conclusions to Congress.

I was appointed as a member of that commission, and with five others visited Europe, where we made extensive investiga-tions. Several of us went to Sicily, and to me the conditions there seemed worse than I had ever dreamed of.

We visited many other countries in Europe and made extensive investigations both in that country and our own.

When we began our investigations only three or four of us believed that the reading test was the best plan for restricting immigration, but after three years of earnest, careful investigation all the nine joined in the following statements and recommendations:

The investigations of the commission show an oversupply of unskilled labor in basic industries to an extent which indicates an oversupply of unskilled labor in the industries of the country as a whole, and therefore demand legislation which will at the present time restrict the further admission of such unskilled labor. * * *

As far as possible the aliens excluded should be those who, by reason of their personal qualities, would least readily be assimilated or would make the least desirable citizens.

The commission as a whole recommends restriction as demanded by economic, moral, and social considerations, furnishes in its report reasons for such restrictions, and points out methods by which Congress can attain the desired result if its judgment coincides with that of the commission.

Eight out of the nine, after citing various methods of restriction, concurred in the following:

A majority of the commission favor the reading and writing test as the most feasible single method of restricting undesirable immigration.

It is certainly interesting, and we believe important, to know some of the reasons which led the commission up to these conclusions, and we will make a few extracts from the "Brief statement of conclusions and recommendations of the commission." On page 25 of this statement they say:

The proportion of the more serious crimes of homicide, blackmail, and robbery, as well as the least serious offenses, is greater among the foreign born. The disproportion in this regard is due principally to the prevalence of homicides and other crimes of personal violence among Italians and to the violation of city ordinances previously mentioned.

On pages 29 and 30 they say:

On pages 29 and 30 they say:

It is certain that southern and eastern European immigrants have almost completely monopolized unskilled labor activities in many of the more important industries. This phase of the industrial situation was made the most important and exhaustive feature of the commission's investigation, and the results show that while the competition of these immigrants has had little, if any, effect on the highly skilled trades, nevertheless, through lack of industrial progress and by reason of large and constant reenforcement from abroad, it has kept conditions in the semiskilled and unskilled occupations from advancing.

Several elements peculiar to the new immigrants contributed to this result. They came from countries where low economic conditions prevailed and where conditions of labor were bad. They were content to accept wages and conditions which the native American and immigrants of the older class had come to regard as unsatisfactory. They were not, as a rule, engaged at lower wages than had been paid to the older workmen for the same class of labor, but their presence in constantly increasing numbers prevented progress among the older wage-earning class, and as a result that class of employees was gradually replaced. An instance of this displacement is shown in the experience in the bituminous coal mines of western Pennsylvania. This section of the bituminous field was the one first entered by the new immigrants, and the displacement of the old workers was soon under way. Some of them entered other occupations and many of them migrated to the coal fields of the Middle West. Later these fields were also invaded by the new immigrants, and large numbers of the old workers again migrated to the mines of the Southwest, where they still predominate. The effect of the new immigration is clearly shown in the western Pennsylvania fields, where the average wage of the bituminous coal worker is 42 cents a day below the average wage of the Middle West and Southwest. Incidentally, hours of labor ar

The recent report of the Committee on Industrial Relations on their investigations at Youngstown, Ohio, shows that conditions there are even more horrible than those which our commission found in Pennsylvania. I will read only the following short extract from that report:

Babies of the workers die at an appalling rate. Forty-one per cent of all deaths in Youngstown during 1913, according to United States census figures, were of children under 5 years of age.

The average head of a family among foreign-born steel workers, who constitute over 70 per cent of the entire force, earns less than $500 a constitute over 70 per cent of the entire force, earns less than $500 a year.

The workers and their families live in squalid, overcrowded houses. A trachoma epidemic at East Youngstown grew so menacing that the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co., whose armed guards on January 7 killed 3 strikers and wounded 25, had to take drastic measures to save the human part of its equipment.

Sanitary conditions in Youngstown in the districts where the steel workers live are frightful. The administration of the health laws is lax, and open garbage boxes and dry privies abound.

For years, until the present demand for unskilled labor gave them a choice of jobs, the steel workers have been forced to accept whatever the Steel Corporation and its followers cared to give them or to starve. This condition of helplessness and economic slavery was forced on them by a policy that kept, with the aid of charity, two men for every job and that ruthlessly crushed any attempt of the employees to organize.

The Youngstown strike was a sign to the owners and managers of the American steel industry that the end will come; that they can not forever adhere to their present policy of depressing wages below a decent standard by maintaining a vast horde of helpless immigrants in a condition of economic subserviency, throwing them on charity during times of depression, paying less than a living wage during times of prosperity, and during all times brutallizing them either by imposing excessive hours of employment or by imposing the enforced leisure that breeds fear and pauperization.

Even around Birmingham and Gadsden, Ala., the honest American laborer is being forced into competition with that low class of illiterate immigrants from southern Europe who are brought here to beat down the price of the workingman's sweat and toll and thus take the bread from the mouths of his wife and children. A few years ago I asked a large mine operator in Alabama who were his poorest laborers. He replied: "The south Italans." I asked if they were poorer than the Negro. He said: 'Infinitely poorer." I asked: "Why, then, do you employ them?" He answered: "To keep down the price of wages." ians."

Gentlemen, that is true, and that is why the big industries all over the country have spent thousands of dollars during the last 10 years to delay this bill. It has teeth in it and they know it.

My Republican brother and I may differ honestly as to whether a protective tariff is best for the workingman, but I can not see how any friend of the man who tolls can want to keep out the foreign goods that compete with those he makes here and yet want to open the floodgates to those who beat down his wages and erect standards of living repulsive to any man who loves his home and those whom God has given him to protect and support.

The distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] says the bill does not keep out the blackhand assassin, because he can read and write. The illiteracy test, it is true, does not keep out that class, but as is shown by Mr. Ward in the article just !

quoted, there are other sections of the bill that do debar him. But the illiteracy test keeps out the illiterate and vicious alien

But the illiteracy test keeps out the illiterate and vicious alien who is the easy tool in the hands of his blackhand leader.

In the I. W. W. strike at Lawrence, Mass., a few years ago the educated blackhander led the long procession and stirred them to frenzy and to crime, but behind him was the horde of illiterates with a bomb in one hand and a banner in the other on which was inscribed "No God, no law, no master." But you ask, Whom will it keep out? It will keep out 40 per cent of the south Italians, the Partney one the Turks, and the Syrians: south Italians, the Portuguese, the Turks, and the Syrians; about 30 per cent of the Greeks, the Poles, the Magyars, and other races in southern Europe, and about 80 per cent of the Mexicans. It will not keep out one-half of 1 per cent of the English, Irish, Scotch, Germans, Bohemians, Swiss, French, Scandinavians and the other peoples of northwestern Europe. That is, it will not keep out five in a thousand of those who come to become American citizens and to make their homes among us.

For instance, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, 33,898 Irish came in, and of these only 359 over 14 years of age could not read and write, and nearly all of these were of the classes exempted from the illiteracy test. As to the Jews, very few adult males are unable to read their Yiddish or Hebrew prayer book, and most of the Jews who can not read Yiddish or Hebrew are wives, mothers, or daughters, who are excepted, and nearly all are fleeing from religious persecution.

So you will see that neither the Jews nor the northwestern Europeans are excluded scarcely at all. I have gone pretty fully into the purpose and effect of the illiteracy test because of the fact that it has been grossly misunderstood and misrepresented. A few years ago as learned a man as Cardinal Gibbons wrote a letter, which was printed in the papers of the country, stating that an alien fairly well educated in his own language would be debarred under this bill if he could not read English. showed that his Eminence had never even read the bill.

Many others have heralded such statements abroad and aroused the antagonism of thousands of foreigners, the people of whose countries are in no wise affected by the bill.

Mr. Speaker, in passing this bill over the veto of the President, we are responding to the demand of millions of people who are working on the farms, in the factories, in the stores, and thousands of others who do not want to see American civilization undermined, and who do not want to see American standards of moral and economic life subverted. In the South the Farmers' Union with two millions of members has repeatedly indorsed it.

Is this not the propitious time to put up the bars? Your votes to-day will show which side you are on. If the steamship companies and the great industries are your masters, serve them. If you owe your allegiance to America and your people, say so this day.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House on reconsideration agree to pass this bill H. R. 10384, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding? The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that only a very few Members were present when the message was read I again ask unanimous consent that the President's message be again read.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. No, no! The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent

Mr. DYER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order, to submit the gentleman's request. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] asks unanimous consent that the President's message be again read. Is there objection?

Mr. MEEKER. I object. Mr. REAVIS. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. Those in favor of passing this bill over the President's veto will, when their names are called, answer "yea," those opposed will answer "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 287, nays 106, answered "present" 3, not voting 37.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 2, 1917.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, the God of the nations of all the earth, we come to invoke Thy blessing upon us at this critical hour of our Nation's history. We pray that as Thou hast led us forth into a large place and established us in our national life upon the great principles of justice and righteousness Thou wilt still lead If Thou dost bring us to the point of testing the devotion of the heart of the Nation to the great changeless principles of righteousness, we pray that we may be found true, and that in every trial we may be willing to make such sacrifice as may be necessary to maintain that for which our Nation has been brought into existence. Guide us this day by the light of Thy Divine counsel. Bless those who are in places of great responsibility in this hour, and may the spirit of God rule over us and protect us from every evil way, and lead us in the paths of righteousness. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Wednesday, January 31, 1917, was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. ROBINSON. I present a petition from certain settlers upon the so-called Golden Lake area of alleged public lands in the State of Arkansas relating to controversies pending before the Commissioner of the General Land Office. I ask that this petition and the name of one of the petitioners be printed in the RECORD, together with a letter in response to the petition from the Commissioner of the General Land Office addressed to myself, explaining the situation of the controversy.

There being no objection, the petition and letter were referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BASSETT, ARK., January 11, 1917.

To the Hon. JOE T. ROBINSON, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The undersigned settlers upon Golden Lake, claimed as Government land, respectfully represent that many of them have been settlers on said area, claiming the same as United States public land for five years; that petition has been pending for a survey of said land for said length of time; that proof was taken about three years ago as to the character of the area and that the decision of the Register and Receiver of the United States Land Office held said land to be public land, on or about the 1st of February, 1915, and that said case was appealed by adverse claimants to the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the same has been pending ever since, before said office; that in the meantime numerous arrests have been made of the settlers, several of them have been incarcerated in jall, and within the past 60 days three more arrests, charging various settlers with trespass, have been made, and that a settled policy has now been adopted by the opposition to harass and annoy the settlers on said area.

In view of these facts, the undersigned feel that they are entitled to speedy action on the part of the General Land Office in order to set at rest the tumultuous condition prevailing in the community, and to adjudicate the rights of the settlers on this land.

We therefore respectfully ask and urge that you use your good offices as our representative in procuring speedy decision by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

JOHN CREWS ROSE (And others).

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE, Washington, January 27, 1917.

Hon. Joe T. Robinson.
United States Senate.

United States Scnate.

My Dear Senator: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of January 19, 1917, with which you inclosed a petition signed by 108 alleged settlers upon lands within the area of so-called Golden Lake, northeastern Arkansas, requesting that immediate action be taken by this office with a view to rendering a decision pertaining to the question of title to the lands therein, and in reply to your request to be advised fully relative to the status of the case I will state that the matter is now under consideration and that it is expected that a decision will be rendered by this office some time within the next 30 or 60 days.

Reference was made in the petition to the fact that a decision had or 60 days.

Reference was made in the petition to the fact that a decision had been rendered by the register and receiver of the United States land office, Little Rock, Ark. I will state that a decision was not rendered by those officers, but that their action consisted merely in making a recommendation. The delay in this case is due to the fact that considerable work has been required in assisting in the preparation for suits of certain cases involving the question of title to the so-called sunk land and other certain so-called lake-land areas in northeastern Arkansas, and also to the fact that the record in the case involving the question of title to so-called Golden Lake is voluminous, and that the importance of the interests involved necessitate careful consideration thereof.

I am returning herewith the petition inclosed by you, as per your request.

Very respectfully,

CLAY TALLMAN,

CLAY TALLMAN, Commissioner.

Mr. ROBINSON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Fort Smith, Ark., praying for Federal censorship of motion pictures, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Cherry Valley, Ark., remonstrating against any change in the postal rate on second-class mail matter, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. POINDEXTER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Bellingham, Wash., praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the act creating the Mount Baker National Park, in the State of Washington, which was referred to the Park, in the State of Washington,

Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a petition of Pomona Grange, No. 210, Patrons of Husbandry, of Trout Lake, Wash., praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent railroads charging more for short hauls than long hauls, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Publishers' Convention of the Review and Herald Publishing Association, of the District of Columbia, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WORKS. I have a telegram from the Chamber of Commerce of Sacramento, Cal., relating to the revenue bill that I ask may be printed in the Record and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SACRAMENTO, CAL., February 1, 1917.

Hon. John D. Works, Washington, D. C.:

Inasmuch as life insurance companies organized or transacting business in California are now required to pay a State tax of 2 per cent of their gross annual premium receipts, a Federal income tax of 2 per cent of their net annual incomes, a Federal excise tax of 50 cents per thousand dollars of paid-up capital, surplus, and undivided profits, besides numerous State licenses and department fees, we are convinced that the business of life insurance is already overtaxed and undue penalties imposed upon policyholders and their dependents. We therefore respectfully urge you to work and vote against incorporation in emergency revenue measure of any provision imposing additional taxes upon life insurance.

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF SACRAMENTO.

Mr. McCUMBER. I present a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of North Dakota, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was re-ferred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE OF NORTH DAKOTA.

I, Thomas Hall, secretary of state of the State of North Dakota, do hereby certify that the following is a true and complete copy of a certain resolution adopted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Fifteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota on Saturday, January 27, 1917.

[SEAL.]

THOMAS HALL, Secretary of State. Concurrent resolution. (Introduced by Mr. Mostad.)

Concurrent resolution. (Introduced by Mr. Mostad.)

Whereas the rules and regulations of the War Department of the United States will not permit the soldiers of the National Guard who are returning from the Mexican border to wear their uniforms and overcoats after being mustered out of active service except when performing active duties as National Guardsmen; and Whereas the soldiers of the North Dakota regiment who have been stationed on the Mexican border are returning from a climate which is semitropical into a climate which is extremely cold; and Whereas these men will not be in a condition to stand the rigors of this northern climate without being warmly clothed, and many of them will not have the means wherewith to purchase the necessary clothing: Therefore be it Resolved, That we, the members of the Fifteenth Legislative Assembly petition the President of the United States, the Secretary of War, and Congress to pass the necessary laws or to issue the necessary orders that will give the soldiers their overcoats, or at least permit the use of said overcoats until climatic conditions have so changed that their wear will not be necessary: Be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of War, and to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress; that we urge our Representatives and Senators in Congress to use their efforts to bring about the results requested in these resolutions.

He also presented a petition of the Carpenters District Council, of St. Louis, Mo., praying for the use of surplus funds from naturalization sources for the education of immigrants, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GRONNA. I have a telegram from the Commercial Club, of Fairbanks, Alaska, relating to the shipment of liquor in that Territory, which I ask to have printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

FAIRBANKS, ALASKA, February 2, 1917.

Senator ASLE J. GRONNA, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Informed Seattle papers published article sent you by Aline Bradley, of this place, stating people of interior want liquor shipments to interior prohibited after May 1. If such statements were made, entirely erroneous; no action taken or expression made by people of interior. Sentiment that of small clique. Believe, in justice to liquor merchants now in business, that importation of liquor should be permitted until September; otherwise it means confiscation of their investment and dis-crimination against people of interior, as outside shipments can not be received until after July 1.

FAIRBANKS COMMERCIAL CLUB.

Mr. GRONNA presented a concurrent resolution of the legis-lature of North Dakota, praying that the National Guardsmen returning from the border may be permitted to wear their uniforms, and especially their overcoats, until climatic conditions change, making such clothing unnecessary, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HUGHES presented petitions of sundry citizens of New Jersey, praying for the passage of the immigration bill over the President's veto, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of New Jersey, praying for national prohibition, which were ordered to lie on

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 19937) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1006) thereon.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 19119) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 1004) thereon. I desire to say that it is my intention to call up this bill for consideration immediately upon the conclusion of the Agricultural appropriation bill conclusion of the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

PENSIONS TO COMMISSIONED OFFICERS (S. DOC. NO. 702).

Mr. CHILTON, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred Senate resolution 327, submitted by Mr. Johnson of Maine on the 23d ultimo, reported it without amendment, and it was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That Senate Document No. 108, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, entitled "Pensions to commissioned officers, etc., United States Army, etc.," with additions and corrections to January 1, 1917, be reprinted as a Senate document.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ROBINSON:

A bill (8. 8105) granting the consent of Congress to the Conway County Bridge District to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Arkansas River, in the State of Arkansas; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. McCUMBER:

A bill (S. 8106) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Lovell (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pen-

A bill (S. 8107) for the relief of Edward Vanderhoof; and A bill (S. 8108) for the relief of William W. Rust; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. PAGE:

A bill (S. 8110) granting an increase of pension to Leroy S. Griswold (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on

A bill (S. 8111) granting an increase of pension to Alexander B. Tadlock; and

A bill (S. 8112) granting an increase of pension to Robert H. M. Donnelly; to the Committee on Pensions.

COAST SUBMARINES.

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 8109) providing for the construction of 80 coast submarines and 20 fleet submarines.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I ask leave to say a word in regard to the bill.

I have introduced it as a special provision to be in addition to any provision that may be made for additions to the Navy in the general naval appropriation bill. It provides that a portion of the submarines provided for in the bill shall be constructed on the Pacific coast. Regardless of any recent international incident, altogether in a general way, I wish to call attention to the fact that the Pacific coast is in a wholly unprotected condition. The provision of this bill for submaniance is producted to the condition. rines is probably the most economical that could possibly be conceived of for the protection of our coast. Of course, it is entirely supplementary to the other branches of the Navy. It is not intended in any way at all to take the place of naval vessels of other descriptions.

If the number of submarines provided for in the bill should be constructed the United States would have about 200 serviceable submarines, which is a small number compared to the number in some other navies of the world. The most complete guarantee of the defense of the country is strength at sea. Mastery at sea is complete defense at home. That proposition is so obvious and so axiomatic that I feel we can afford to expend the money necessary for the construction of this addition to the Navy, and that as a matter of fact we can not afford

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. SHAFROTH submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for horticultural investigations from $62,740 to $70,240, and that $7,500 of this amount be available for a study of the cultivated and wild forms of potatoes occurring in the petato-producing regions of South America, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 19359), which was ordered to lie on the table and be

Mr. WADSWORTH submitted an amendment authorizing the Postmaster General to have full authority to grant to any employee in the Postal Service not to exceed two weeks sick leave in any one year with pay, intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 19410), which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD submitted an amendment proposing to amend the act of August 30, 1890, providing for an inspection of meats for exportation so as to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to permit the admission of tick-infested cattle from Mexico, South and Central America, the islands of the Gulf of Mexico, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 19359), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. POINDEXTER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $3,000 to be used in the destruction and eradication of the coules cricket in the State of Washington, intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 19359), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also submitted an amendment providing that $4,000 shall be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture in cooperative work in forage-crop investigation in the State of Washington east of the Cascade Mountains be used under the direction of the Office of Forage Crop Investigations of the Department of Agriculture in cooperation with the Washington State Experiment Station. etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appro-priation bill (H. R. 19359), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION (H. R. 20079).

Mr. WORKS submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RANSDELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

THE REVENUE.

Mr. SHIELDS submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 20573) to provide increased revenue to defray the expenses of the increased appropriations for the Army and Navy and the extensions of fortifications, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 20573) to provide increased revenue to defray the expenses of the increased appropriations for the Army and Navy and the extensions of fortifications, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

PROPOSED INTERNATIONAL TRIBUNAL.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I submit a resolution, which I ask be read at the desk and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read. The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 346), as follows:

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 346), as follows:

Resolved, That it is the advice of the Senate that the President should endeavor, after the close of the existing European war, to negotiate with a sufficient number of the sovereign States a treaty open to all nations providing for the establishment and support of an international tribunal which shall recognize and maintain the territorial integrity of each nation as it exists at the time of the ratification of such treaty as against foreign aggression, and shall have sufficient military and naval establishments and funds contributed by the signatory powers to enforce its decrees. Such treaty to provide that the signatory powers shall submit to such tribunal all disputes threatening war between them and that each nation shall select from the total membership equal and predetermined number of judges who shall be joined by another or other judges selected by mutual agreement or by lot; the decision of a majority of the judges thus selected shall constitute the decree of the tribunal and be final.

The treaty shall further provide that the naval and military establishments of the signatory powers shall be reduced to limits agreed upon and requisite for the enforcement of their domestic laws, peace and order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

COUNTING OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

Mr. KERN. I submit a resolution, which I send to the desk and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 347), as follows:

Resolved, That the tellers on the part of the Senate authorized by the concurrent resolution of the two Houses relating to the counting of the electoral vote for President and Vice President of the United States be appointed by the President of the Senate.

The resolution was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair appoints as the tellers on the part of the Senate the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Kern] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM].

DEALING IN COTTON FUTURES.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I ask that Senate resolution 345, that went over on yesterday, be now taken up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senato

the following resolution coming over from yesterday.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 345, submitted yesterday by Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, as follows:

Whereas complaint has come from farmers, merchants, business organizations, and also a memorial from the Legislature of South Carolina complaining that the practice of the New York Cotton Exchange in buying and selling contracts below what local spot cotton can be bought in the South; and

Whereas this practice is demoralizing to the domestic and foreign cotton trade, in that it makes impossible legitimate hedging against purchase and sale: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Attorney General is hereby directed to proceed at once to investigate the transactions in buying and selling contracts on the New York Cotton Exchange and ascertain whether such transactions are unlawful and in restraint of trade.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

READING OF WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a continuing order of the Senate that immediately following the reading of the Journal on the 22d day of February of each year Washington's Farewell Address shall be read in the Senate by a Senator who is designated for the purpose by the Presiding Officer. The Chair designates for the reading of such address this year Mr. Works, the Senator from California.

NIGHT SESSION FOR THE CALENDAR.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent.

I ask unanimous consent that not later than 6 o'clock this afternoon the Senate be in recess until 8 o'clock this evening; that upon the reconvening of the Senate after the recess it shall be in order to consider unobjected bills and resolutions on the calendar under Rule VIII; and that not later than 11 o'clock to-night the Senate be in recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas submits a request for the following unanimous-consent agreement: That not later than 6 o'clock this evening the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening, at which time unobjected bills upon the calendar under Rule VIII shall be considered, and that not later than 11 o'clock to-night a recess be taken until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I merely wish to ask the Senator to include in the request that we begin with the calendar at Order of Business 763, where we left off.

Mr. CHILTON. I will object if that is done.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I will withdraw the suggestion and allow all the bills, and so forth, to be gone over again that we went over the last time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SOUTH CAROLINA BOLL WEEVIL COMMISSION (S. DOC. NO. 701).

Mr. TILLMAN. On January 31 the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Chilton] reported from the Committee on Printing Senate resolution 312 and it was considered and agreed to. I move that the vote by which the resolution was adopted be reconsidered in order that I may move certain amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider is agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. In line 3 of the resolution, before the words of Clemson," I move to strike out "Thirty" and insert "Twenty," and in line 4, after the word "printed," insert "with accompanying illustrations."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the manuscript entitled "Report of the South Carolina Boll Weevil Commission, Bulletin No. 20 of Clemson Agricultural College, of South Carolina," be printed, with accompanying illustrations, as a Senate document.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVES BROWN AND MOSS.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that on Saturday, the 24th of February, I will ask the Senate to take appropriate action upon the life and character of the late William G. Brown, Jr., and the late Hunter H. Moss, Jr., Representatives from West Virginia in Congress, who have died during the present session.

THE INAUGURATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 203) to provide for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property in connection with the presidential inaugural ceremonies in 1917, which were, on page 1, line 3, to strike out "$35,000" and insert "$23,000," and on page 2, line 22, to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$2,000." Mr. WALSH. I have been requested by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] to ask that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments are concurred in.

HOUSE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

H. R. 20573. An act to provide increased revenue to defray the expenses of the increased appropriations for the Army and Navy and the extensions of fortifications, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

H. J. Res. 358. Joint resolution authorizing the granting of permits to the committee on inaugural ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President elect in March, 1917. etc., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION-VETO MESSAGE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? If there be none, the morning business is closed.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I ask that the message from the House of Representatives with reference to the bill (H. R. 10384) to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States, be now laid before the Senate

The VICE PRESIDENT. As is the duty of the Chair, the Chair lays before the Senate the message from the House of Representatives referred to by the Senator from South Carolina, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
February 1, 1917.

The President of the United States having returned to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, the bill (H. R. 10384) to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States, with his objections thereto, the House proceeded, in pursuance of the Constitution, to reconsider the same; and Resolved, That the said bill pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask for the reading of the President's veto message, as the Constitution requires.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks it is the duty of the Chair now to direct that the message of the President of the United States (H. Doc. No. 2003) be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I very much regret to return this bill (H. R. 10384, "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States") without my signature. In most of the provisions of the bill I should be very glad to concur, but I can not rid myself of the conviction that the literacy test constitutes a radical change in the policy of the Nation which is not justified in principle. It is not a test of character, of quality, or of personal fitness, but would operate in most cases merely as a penalty for lack of opportunity in the country from which the alien seeking admission came. The opportunity to gain an education is in many cases one of the chief opportunities sought by the immigrant in coming to the United States, and our experience in the past has not been that the illiterate immigrant is as such an undesirable immigrant. Tests of quality and of purpose can not be objected to on principle, but tests of opportunity surely may be.

Moreover, even if this test might be equitably insisted on, one of the exceptions proposed to its application involves a provision which might lead to very delicate and hazardous diplomatic situations. The bill exempts from the operation of the literacy test "all aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States to avoid religious persecution in the country of their last permanent residence, whether such persecution be evidenced by overt acts or by laws or governmental regulations that discriminate against the alien or the race to which he belongs because of his religious faith." Such a provision, so applied and administered, would oblige the officer concerned in effect to pass judgment upon the laws and practices of a foreign Government and declare that they did or did not constitute religious persecution. This would, to say the least, be a most invidious function for any administrative officer of this Government to perform, and it is not only possible but probable that very serious questions of international justice and comity would arise between this Government and the Government or Governments thus officially condemned should its exercise be attempted. I dare say that these consequences were not in the minds of the proponents of this provision but the provision separately and in itself renders it unwise for me to give my assent to this legislation in its present form.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 29, 1917.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass on reconsideration? The Constitution requires that a yea-andnay vote shall be had on the question.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I hope that this matter may go over at least until to-morrow. I desire to submit some remarks upon it. It has been impossible, on account of some important matters, for me to be in the Senate for the last two days or to give any attention to the particular veto message that is now before us. Indeed, I have just heard it read for the first time.

In addition to that, my colleague, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Stone], has been absent, and while I do not speak with authority, I feel sure that he will desire to say something on this veto message. He is, I understand, now on his way from Missouri to Washington, and will, I think, arrive some time during the afternoon. I have not the slightest desire to delay a vote on the reconsideration of the bill on the veto further than is necessary to address myself to the message.

I do not think that I should take over probably an hour of time to complete my remarks, but I am not prepared to speak this morning. If the matter can go over until to-morrow, I shall then be prepared to proceed. I ask the chairman of the committee to allow the matter to go over until to-morrow.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, this matter, as of course is well known to every Senator, is one which has been before us more or less continuously for 20 years. Every phase of it has been thoroughly discussed. The grounds for the President's veto are in part the very grounds of the previous vetoes Several Senators have indicated to me a desire that we should have a vote at once, if possible. I have no desire to cut off any speech, but on account of the pressure of time and the necessity for as great expedition as possible I feel it to be my duty to insist that we shall dispose of this matter as speedily as may be. Of course it is to be left entirely with the Senate to decide; but I shall insist that this matter shall be brought to as speedy a conclusion as possible. The Senator from Missouri has indicated a desire that it go over until to-morrow. It would be almost impossible for us to consider it to-morrow, that being Saturday, in view of matters which are pressing. On Monday other Sena-tors have indicated their desire to be absent on account of pressing engagements which they had made, not knowing at what time this bill would be before us.

I am sure the Senator from Missouri appreciates the fact that prompt action is essential, and that the Senate, outside of himself perhaps, are ready for a vote. I know of no other Senator to add anything to the literature of this 20-year discussion. Therefore, with all due respect to the request the Senator has made for my consent to a postponement, while I shall have to allow the Senate to take such action as it sees fit, for myself I shall insist that we proceed with the consideration of the matter.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator is in error when he states that this bill has been before Congress for over 20 years.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. In 1896 I had charge of a bill containing the literacy test, a bill substantially like this, which was vetoed by President Cleveland. It has been discussed certainly, within my knowledge, from that day to this, a little over 20 years.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, there has been an immigration

Mr. LODGE. But it contained the literacy test.

Mr. REED. There has been an immigration bill before Congress in one form or another during the period of time the Senator states, or approximately that period, which is just what I was going to say, but this bill is not identical with the other bills. It is true that it contains one of the elements of the other bill, the literacy test; but this bill has many other elements in it and affects hundreds of thousands and millions of people who were not affected by the old bills, and it is in that light and with reference to those phases that I want to be heard.

The President vetoed this bill, and his message is entitled to careful and respectful consideration. There is no occasion for any tremendous haste; there is no emergency confronting the country; there is no great influx of immigration threatened within the next three or four days; we will not be overwhelmed by hordes of ignorant foreigners within the next three or four days; we will suffer nothing by giving to the President's mes-sage a decent consideration; and if the votes are here after discussion to pass this iniquitous and outrageous bill over the President's veto, they will be here, and they can be effectively

There are some other reasons why we ought to proceed with a little care, and I might say, in the first place, one of those reasons is that you will save no time by attempting to force a

You will not get a vote to-day.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I am entirely indifferent to any threat of that kind, because I am simply attempting to discharge my duty as I see it. The time of this session is very short; and of all the matters that could be brought before us, this is the best understood. If the Senator wants to assume the responsibility of filibustering on this bill, or delaying it on account of the request I have made that we should have immediate consideration of the subject, I think I can safely say that no other business will be transacted until this bill, which meets the overwhelming approval of both the other House and of this body, has been disposed of. The responsibility of delaying the orderly discharge of the business that is pressing upon us will then not lie at my door.

Mr. REED. Well, Mr. President, I made no threat, but the Senator makes one in very direct terms; and let me say to him that, not professing to possess that high courage which he attributes to himself, I have no fear either of threats. I have proffered a very reasonable request that this matter shall go over until to-morrow. I have said that if it does go over until to-morrow I shall make my remarks in a very limited space of Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, let me submit this proposition to him, that we take a vote of the Senate as to whether or not it desires that this matter shall go over. I am perfectly willing to submit it to the tribunal that has the matter in charge.

Mr. REED. We may have to take that vote; and after having preferred my request to the Senator I intended to submit the matter to a vote.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missourl yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LODGE. No; I do not want to interrupt the Senator. I was only going to make a suggestion.

Mr. REED. I am entirely willing to yield.

Mr. LODGE. I was merely going to suggest that this is a matter which, of course, the Senate must dispose of. It seems to me that if the Senator desires to be heard time ought to be allowed to him, of course, to be heard; but I do think that this matter ought not to be postponed unless a time is fixed for taking a vote.

Mr. REED. I am agreeable to that. Mr. LODGE. If that can be brought about, I see no objection, and I offer that suggestion to the Senator from South Carolina that we fix a time to take the vote.

Mr. REED. What time would the Senator suggest? Mr. LODGE. Well, I should say to-morrow at 3 o'clock. Mr. REED. I would suggest a little later hour than that, because there ought to be time allowed for a few of the Members of the Senate who may want to be heard to speak upon it within reasonable limits.

Mr. LODGE. It is only that to-morrow will be Saturday, when there is apt to be rather a thin attendance. Otherwise, I would be willing to fix any hour.

Mr. REED. Well, how would Monday at 3 o'clock do? Mr. LODGE. I am not chairman of the committee, but if an hour could be fixed I would agree to the request.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I do not see any objection to fixing 3 o'clock to-morrow as the time to vote. The only fear I have is that there may be at that time a slim attendance, but I presume that that could be obviated by giving notice now and let the Members of the Senate understand that we will begin voting on this question to-morrow promptly at 3 o'clock. It has been suggested that the matter go over until As to-morrow will be Saturday, if it is agreeable to those interested in discussing the question, I will suggest, then, that the vote be taken at 4 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. REED. That is agreeable to me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair must make a suggestion. The Chair suggests that the laying down of this message from the House of Representatives be withdraw from the record of to-day and stricken out, because the Chair has a very distinct opinion that the Constitution of the United States requires that when we take up a matter of this kind we have got to go ahead with it. The Chair is very clearly of the opinion that we have not any right to delay a matter of this sort when it is once taken up for consideration. The Chair is not offering an objection to going on on Monday, but the Chair thinks that if the matter is postponed until that day the record of to-day should be stricken out, and that the Chair should lay the message down on Monday.

Mr. REED. I ask unanimous consent that the record of to-day with reference to this bill be expunged, and that on Monday at 4 o'clock the Senate proceed to vote upon the bill.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, it seems to me that it would be a rather remarkable proceeding on the part of the Senate to undertake to evade a constitutional requirement by expunging part of its record. I should not like to see anything of that sort done, myself. I think it would be very much better for the Senate to proceed in regular order, as suggested by the Chair, rather than to take a step of that kind; and if unanimous consent is asked I shall certainly object so far as the record being expunged is concerned.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, do I understand that the Chair ruled that once the matter was laid before the Senate we would have to proceed to its consideration, or withdraw the laying of the message before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; the Chair was not proposing definitely to rule upon the question. The Chair was stating that it was the Chair's opinion that it was the duty of the Senate to proceed, but unless it could be adjusted the Chair was proposing to leave that question to the Senate. The Chair thought he had no right, in view of the constitutional provision, to let it pass by without calling attention to it.
Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think when the veto of President Taft on this same bill was before the Senate it was then held, in practice at least, that we could fix a time to take a vote; and it went over a day, I think.

The VICE PRESIDENT. And that that was a fair construction of the word "proceed"?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President— Mr. LODGE. That was the construction given to it in practice. I do not think there was any ruling on it. The language of the Constitution is "shall proceed"; and it has always seemed to me that the strict construction would mean that they shall proceed at once; I mean, that the matter should take precedence and be dealt with; but I do not think there is a direct ruling upon that point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not a matter of any moment to the Chair, and the Chair hopes that will be understood; but it is a matter that ought to be settled now.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I was going to say that I had in mind the language of the Constitution when the Chair made the suggestion which he did; but I think the language is to be construed with reference to the other language, which gives to the Senate the power to determine the rules of its proceedings; and if it adopts a rule in relation to this matter, it occurs to me that that falls within the requirements of the Constitution. But it does seem to me that in any case, Mr. President, we could hardly admit the proposition that as soon as a message comes here we must dismiss the consideration of everything, no matter how transcendently important it may be, for the consideration of the veto message of the President, possibly on some utterly unimportant local measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is now satisfied with what the Chair has said; and if the Senator from Missouri will be kind enough to withdraw the portion of his request as to striking out the record, the Chair will have the roll called to see whether the hour of 4 o'clock on Monday can be set for the vote.

Mr. REED. I do. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to vote upon the bill H. R. 10384, which has been vetoed by the President, on Monday next at 4 o'clock.

The Secretary. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that on Monday, February 5, 1917, at not later than 4 o'clock p. m., the Senate will proceed to vote upon the question, Shall the bill H. R. 10384 pass on reconsideration?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. LODGE. "The objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That was not the request of the Senator. The Senator said "at 4 o'clock."

"At 4 o'clock." I did not say "not later than 4 Mr. REED. o'clock.'

Mr. GALLINGER. Does that preclude the opportunity for discussion at any time?

Mr. REED. Not between this time and 4 o'clock on Monday. It would not preclude the possibility of discussion between now and 4 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. GALLINGER. But it will not be before the Senate, will it? If we make an order to vote on it at 4 o'clock, it is on the table in the meantime.

Mr. REED. I apprehend it would be subject to discussion under the general rules of debate in the Senate. Anybody can speak on it.

Mr. LODGE. It can be laid before the Senate at any moment on motion of the chairman.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Do I understand that this motion is that at 4 o'clock on the 5th of February the actual voting shall begin, and that all debate or discussion of it shall precede that honr?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Very well.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, it occurs to me that the concluding language of the proposed unanimous-consent agreement is quite inapt. It may be in accordance with the precedents here, but this is not a reconsideration at all. It occurs to me that that language should be stricken out, and the question should be, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. LODGE. That is the vote, and that is the way it ought to be expressed; but if the Senator will allow me—
The VICE PRESIDENT. That is not the Constitution, and that is not the way it has ever been done heretofore.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, the language of the Constitution is "reconsider"; and that was held by Mr. Carlisle, who was one of the ablest parliamentarians that ever occupied the chair of the House, that "reconsider" meant "consider again"; that it could not be used in the narrow parliamentary sense, because there was no opportunity to reconsider in a vote.

Mr. REED. My request was a very simple one. I do not know what the language is as the Secretary wrote it; but my request was that at 4 o'clock on Monday we proceed to vote upon the bill H. R. 10384.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll. The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Martin, Va. Martine, N. J. Myers Nelson Norris Oliver Overman Ashurst Gallinger Smith, Md. Smith, Mich. Smith, S. C. Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I wish to announce that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore] is absent owing to illness.

I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed] presents a request for the following unanimous-consent agreement.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent in the following words: That at 4 o'clock on Monday we proceed to vote upon the bill H. R. 10384.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think that request for unanimous consent ought to be put in the form in which the question is put by the Chair under the precedents and under the Constitution.

Mr. ROBINSON. What is the bill?

Mr. LODGE. The immigration bill-whether the bill shall pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair, of course, does not think that is the question.

Mr. LODGE. I was only taking it from the precedents of the Senate

The VICE PRESIDENT. The precedents are not that way. The precedents are that the question before the Senate shall be, Shall the bill pass on reconsideration?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, this is a very small matter; the particular form is of no great consequence; but I am very sure that that language does not express the idea conveyed by the Constitution. The Constitution provides that if the bill is vetoed by the President it must be presented with his objections to that House in which it originated, which House shall proceed to reconsider it. That means to talk about it, to debate it. goes on to say that after such reconsideration-when the reconsideration is entirely completed and ended and out of the wayif it shall be adopted by two-thirds, it shall become a law. the question is not, Shall the bill pass on reconsideration? It is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Where is the constitutional authority for that?

Mr. WALSH. I read from section 7 of Article I:

Every bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate shall, before it become a law, be presented to the President of the United States. If he approve, he shall sign it; but if not he shall return it, with his objections, to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large on their Journal and proceed to reconsider it.

Now.

If after such reconsideration two-thirds of that House shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if ap-proved by two-thirds of that House it shall become a law.

The Constitution clearly provides that there shall be a reconsideration of the bill, a renewal of the debate upon the bill, and then, after that debate is concluded and the reconsideration is ended, that there shall be a vote upon it.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator agrees with me that it is a reconsideration in the sense of considering again?

Mr. WALSH. Undoubtedly. "Considering" means to think about it; and you vote after the reconsideration is concluded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is not any doubt about that. The only question that can possibly arise is whether the Constitution means that after it has been reconsidered the bill shall pass, or whether the bill shall pass the veto of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding. The Chair is saying that there is not anything in the Constitution that authorizes the Chair in anywise to refer in putting the question to the veto of the President of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the President will permit me, I was led to think that it was the usual form which is stated in the Precedents of the United States Senate, at the bottom of page 610:

The President Officer. Shall this bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding? * * * Two-thirds of the Senators present having voted in the affirmative, the bill is passed, notwithstanding the objections of the President, and the title will be agreed to, if there be no objection.

Yesterday in the House-

The SPEAKER. Those in favor of passing this bill over the President's

Which is the same thing-will, when their names are called, answer "yea."

I think that is the usual form of putting the question; but that is a detail which is not important.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it seems to me that we are taking time upon matters that are utterly immaterial. The plain purpose of the Constitution is that when a bill has been vetoed it shall come back to the House in which it originated, and that House shall proceed to again vote upon that bill. Now, what difference does it make whether in putting the question "Shall the bill pass?" it be put in the form "Shall the bill pass?" or "Shall the bill pass notwithstanding the veto of the President?" or "Shall the bill be passed over the President's The exact form is not material.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if there is no ·difference inasmuch as it requires a two-thirds vote to override the veto and a majority vote would pass the bill?

Mr. REED. It will require that vote in any event, but what will control is the fact with reference to the situation of the bill instead of the exact form of the vote. If the bill is before us at all now, having once passed Congress, it is because the President has sent it back, and he has sent it back in the only way he could send it back—by vetoing it. Therefore, it comes before us a vetoed bill. When we vote on it we vote on it as a vetoed bill. Whether the Chair in putting the vote says "Shall the bill pass notwithstanding the veto?" or "Shall the bill be passed over the veto?" or "Shall the bill be passed?" it seems to me the form is immaterial.

Now, one word more and then I am through. It was with that view I framed the unanimous-consent agreement that we shall proceed to vote upon the bill. If it is deemed necessary to put it in the form "Shall the bill pass notwithstanding the veto?" we are voting upon the bill. If it should be in the form Speaker Clark put it yesterday, "Shall the bill be passed over the President's veto?" we are voting upon the bill. The language that I employed is broad and general language which will permit a vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not care how it is put. It can be put in any way.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the unanimous-consent agreement in the form asked for by the Senator from Missouri is the ordinary passage of a bill. This is the passage of a bill over the veto, which is a very different thing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Senator put that in then.

Mr. LODGE. I should object to the unanimous consent unless it expresses that this is the passage of the bill over the veto, in accordance with the form prescribed by the Constitution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will restate the unanimous-consent agreement now.

The Secretary. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent-

That on Monday, February 5, 1917, at 4 o'clock p. m., the Senate will proceed to vote upon the question, "Shall the blit (H. R. 10384) to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States, pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?"

Mr. REED. That is entirely satisfactory.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the agreement is entered into.

Mr. REED. I desire to give notice that to-morrow morning as soon as the business of the Senate will permit I shall ask permission to address the Senate upon the veto message of the President.

Mr. REED subsequently said: I ask that the bill (H. R. 10384) to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States-the immigration bill-be printed as the bill was presented to the President of the United States for his signature.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

message from the House of Representatives, by E. T. Taylor, jr., one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 7963) to prohibit the manufacture or sale of alcoholic liquors in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18453) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. Stephens of Texas, Mr. Carter of Oklahoma, and Mr. Campbell managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20453) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. Sherley, Mr. Rauch, and Mr. GILLETT managers at the conference on the part of the House.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the State the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18453) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ASHURST. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. ASHURST, Mr. MYERS, and Mr. CLAPP conferees on the part of the Senate.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. WALSH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 408, the unfinished business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I do not propose to attempt to deliver a set speech upon the subject now pending. This proposed law has been very thoroughly discussed already by eminent Senators. The debate has continued for some time. are several propositions involved in the pending legislation which I think merit very serious consideration and justify all the time that has been taken by this body in the consideration of the proposed bill, and, as a matter of fact, justify giving to this measure all the time necessary for a final settlement.

Mr. President, the question of the disposition of the public lands of the United States long prior to this particular session of Congress and the last session has received merited consideration. The policy with reference to the disposition of the public lands and the settlement of public-land States was adopted after a report made to the Senate of the United States in 1846. We have a certain school of public men in this country who, of course, naturally are born and exhibit themselves in a democracy, who are not governed by any precedent, who are restless under any restraint, and are always making new discoveries in the field of politics and government.

Prior to 1846 we had a different system for the disposition of the public lands and the public resources of the country from that which has obtained since. The same contentions exactly for the retention by the Government of the United States of the control over and ownership of its public resources were agitated long prior to the birth of some of the eminent gentlemen who are engaged now in carrying on that propaganda through the public press and in the Congress of the United States and in the Departments of the United States.

For instance, with reference to mining, prior to 1846 the Government of the United States established the policy or practice of leasing its mines, not selling outright, not allowing the individual to acquire the right of ownership. Even in lead mines, for example, the argument was just as we hear it now with reference to the retention by the United States Government for naval purposes of oil lands, that the Government of the United States needed the lead with which to make bullets, and therefore it should retain its property in all lead mines throughout the United States. Legislation of this character was enacted and the Government proceeded to lease the mines.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I suggest to the Senator that in the very act concerning the leasing of the lead mines in Missouri, under the theory that it was a governmental function in the manufacture of munitions of war, it was expressly provided that there should be a portion in kind, and they would take that much of the lead.

Mr. FALL. Exactly. It is the same argument exactly that was used here by the Senator from Montana, for example, in following out the theories of the department in undertaking to enact into legislation a proposition allowing a Government monopoly in radium-bearing ore. The same proposition is now pending before the Naval Affairs Committee after coming from the Public Lands Committee with reference to the leasing of the oil land. The same propositions exactly were discussed here for 40 years in this Chamber, and finally once for all, as we thought, or it was thought, at least, by those who were legislating here at that time, definitely settled after the incoming of the Breese report made by the committee of this body of which the then Senator from Illinois, afterwards, I believe, chief justice of that State, was the chairman.

It was after the world had been electrified by the great speech Daniel Webster made in reply to Hayne upon exactly this proposition, the proposition of the disposition of the public lands of the United States, because the Senator saw the opportunity to urge upon the people of the United States the preservation of and that apparently the supply is yet sufficient to facilitate the this great Union. His speech upon that phase of the subject aroused the enthusiasm of all the citizens alike all over the United States in every section, but the cause of the controversy was lost sight of. We have all forgotten, unless we have had occasion to read the contemporaneous history, that the subject under discussion was the Foote resolution with reference to the public-land laws and the public-land surveys and the general subject of the disposition of the public lands.

I am going to read one or two extracts from the Breese report. January 27, 1846, in the Senate of the United States, Mr. Breese made the following report from the Committee on Public Lands. I am not going to undertake to go into it fully, Mr. President. It is a very lengthy, a very interesting, and a very instructive report. I have some extracts from it. Among other things the committee used the following language:

things the committee used the following language:

Your committee will not enter upon the argument of it and will dismiss it with the single remark that when the United States accepted the cession of the Northwestern Territory, the acceptance was on the express condition and under a pledge to form it into distinct republican States, "and to admit them as members of the Federal Union, having the same rights of freedom, sovereignty, and independence as the other States." This pledge, your committee believe, would not be redeemed by merely dividing the surface into States and giving them names, but it includes a pledge to sell the lands, so that they may be settled and thus form States. No other mode of disposing of them can be regarded as a compilance with that pledge.

Continuing:

Conceding the right exists to own the lands, the power, in view of these compacts to reserve them from sale, is seriously questioned. If a small quantity can be reserved, by the same power the whole domain may be, for where can the power be limited? If mineral lands can be reserved, may not arable lands likewise, and any governmental purpose, as connected with its various wants, be urged to justify the act, and thus the compacts be wholly defeated?

Again:

Again:

Although it might be desirable for the United States to possess within itself a supply of lead, it is no less so that it should be independent in the articles of cotton, iron, hemp, all munitions of war, and provisions; yet no one would seriously propose to set apart from sale and settlement any portion of the public lands on which to raise or fabricate either or consent that this Government, erected in consummate wisdom for great national purposes, should be engaged in such subordinate and uncongenial pursuits. All experience shows, your committee think, that operations of this nature, including mining and the manufacture of lead, can with much greater propriety and with far more beneficial results be left to the free and unfettered energies of individuals; and of supplies of these kinds the Federal Government should be not the producer, though numerous agents of doubtful creation and a dependent tenantry, but purchasers in the market in fair competition with all others. Now, no interest is felt by the tenant in the improvement of the property itself; he does not become fixed in his employment to any spot—

And so forth.

And so forth.

I shall not undertake in the limited time at my command to read into the Record and comment upon this entire report. I wili say, however, that considering the report itself, taking the debates in the Congress of the United States, when the one man who had the courage to stand up and represent the people of the Western country, Thomas H. Benton, stood here for 15 years fighting for equal rights of the people of the public-land States of the West, that Benton was enabled finally to engraft upon the legislation of this country his idea. I shall not undertake, as I said, to go into details in the discussion of this question. It is sufficient to say that, whether right or wrong, the policy then adopted, after consideration by the eminent men with reference to the mineral wealth of the country, for instance, with reference to the precious metals alone, to say nothing of the coal and the iron and the minerals of that character, added over $5,000,000,000 to the accumulated wealth of the country; that it has settled a magnificent domain, which of itself politically settled the recent election; that under the provision of the legislation then enacted civilization prior to that time confined practically to the East extended to California, and we built up a magnificent domain, undreamed of even by Jefferson at the time of the Louisiana Purchase, because Jefferson thought, and the other leaders at that time thought, that never would this country of ours be developed toward the West beyond the Rocky Mountains.

Sir, we have had again in the last few years an agitation in this country for the reservation of the public domain. This agitation originated very largely through the statements—and this was more than 11 years ago—then made, and made over the signature of the same men who are yet carrying on the agitation, that the destruction of the timber of the United States was so great that, proceeding at the same rate, there would not be one tree left in the yellow-pine forests of the South within 11 years; and yet, sir, the statistics of the lumber industry and of the turpentine and naval stores industry will show that from year to year the production of yellow pine in the South has increased from the period when these predictions were made, building of the necessary houses and the other structures to be made of lumber.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If the Senator does not object to an interruption-

Mr. FALL, Not at all.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to call his attention to the fact that there can never be a serious shortage in lumber, because under irrigation 1 inch can be added to the body of a tree every year. Consequently we have an inexhaustible field for raising timber which can never be exhausted.

Mr. FALL. Possibly the fact to which the Senator refersthat timber can be raised rapidly under irrigation—is one of the reasons why the present administration of the United States should be seeking in every way to restrain the use of the irrigation water in the West. That may be in connection with their timber industry, of which they are so careful.

Statements were also made at that time, Mr. President, that the coal resources of the country were practically exhausted, or that within a few years they would be exhausted; yet the fact remains that the Government of the United States has withdrawn from entry in my State alone, and still holds under withdrawal, not only the coal under the surface but the surface land, over 6,000,000 acres of as fine coal land as there is in the United States, containing, according to the best Government reports, over 60,000,000,000 tons of coal.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that the withdrawals in the State of Colorado constitute, according to the Geological Survey, 371,000,000,000 tons of coalsufficient to supply the total necessities of the world, at the present rate of consumption, for over 250 years.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, we have agitation in this country, and we, as a people, are sentimental; our sympathies are very easily worked upon; but two years ago certain eminent scientists announced the fact that radium had been discovered as a cure for cancer. They further proceeded to announce, and others following along in their wake proceeded to announce, the fact that the radium industry in the United States was in the hands of a monopoly, and that it was necessary that Congress should take immediate action to break the monopoly because of the interests of the people of the United States; because of the fact that this dread disease, cancer, was devastating the country; and that this great cure then discovered—radium—was in the grasp of a few monopolists, who were largely located in Pittsburgh, Pa.

The Secretary of the Interior of the United States sent a report to Congress insisting upon immediate action on the sub-A bill was introduced providing for immediate action; and what was it? That permission be granted to the Secretary of the Interior, or that Congress enact a law, withdrawing from any entry whatsoever or from any disposition all lands containing ores of carnotite, from which radium is produced, or of mines containing pitchblende, which is also one of the sources of radium. That bill was seriously insisted upon. It came from the Committee on Mines, under a report made by the eminent chairman of that committee, himself a representative of a western mining State. Immediate consideration of the measure was insisted upon at that time.

Mr. President, the objection of some of us from the Western States that the Secretary of the Interior did not know what he was doing, did not understand the subject at all, was treated with contempt. Minority members of the committee could scarcely receive a patient hearing upon their objections, and yet, sir, the effect of that proposed law would have been to withdraw every acre of land in what is known as the Permian-Juras-sic area of the United States. That withdrawal would have covered the entire half of my State of New Mexico, practically all of the State of Utah, and more than half of the State of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] himself, who introduced the bill. It would have covered practically two-thirds of the State of Colorado; it would have withdrawn from any acquisition or disposition hundreds of millions of acres of land, because carnotite ores are found in this geological formation alone.

It would have gone further, sir. It would have placed in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior of the United States abso-lute control over every silver, gold, and copper mine hereafter located in the United States, until it was affirmatively proven that the ores found along with those metals did not contain radium-bearing ores or pitchblende. Pitchblende is found only in the veins or in the matrices of ores accompanying gold, silver, or copper, and it is found only below the 200-foot level in a mine. The Secretary of the Interior and those advising him knew not what they did, unless it was their intention to paralyze the mining industry of the United States, and unless it was their intention to make a great national reserve of the majority of the States in the West. That could not have been their intention,

Mr. President, I presume, because they have abandoned that proposed legislation. They brought in, however, another bill with reference to radium-bearing ores, but have not pressed it.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President— Mr. FALL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WORKS. I want to suggest in that connection that it has been very thoroughly demonstrated since that time that radium is not a cure for cancer.

Mr. FALL. I am glad the Senator has offered that suggestion, as, of course, it is very pertinent to the statement which I am making. As a matter of fact, it has been found that an ordinary glass tube will produce a ray, practically at a cost of nothing, that has exactly the same beneficial effect or a more beneficial effect than radium rays; and, as the Senator has said, it is now very seriously doubted if there is any remaining doubt upon the subject at all, that the radium treatment is beneficial to cancer.

But withdrawals for every possible conceivable purpose are constantly being made. The effort is seriously being made—and it might as well be understood by the public now-to change this Government of ours into a state socialistic government, whether the people of the United States want it or whether they do not. They might just as well face the issue, and they might as well understand that the trend of the legislation, the intention of the legislation of the character now under consideration, is to put the Government of the United States in competition with individuals in every line of business in the United States. Within four years you will be confronted with a proposition to acquire all the lines of transportation within the United States. are now being confronted with the proposition that the United States of America itself will go into the business of controlling the development of mines, of lands, and of water for the purpose of providing hydroelectric power. I say go into business. Yes; because this bill itself provides that the United States Government shall go into business. This bill limits the time in which the grantee under its provisions shall conduct his work, and then provides that, upon giving notice to him, the United States Government can terminate his lease and take over the production of electric power upon the site. This is one of the insidious attempts that are being made in that direction. The radium bill, so called, was one; the oil-leasing bill was another; the 640-acre homestead bill, which some Senators here were so insistent upon passing for the benefit of the people of the West, was another. Read it and read the circular just issued by the Secretary of the Interior and see the "jokers" in it.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. FALL. I yield. Mr. WORKS. Will the Senator allow me to call his attention to the fact that there is a very great difference between the bill that is now before the Senate and those referred to by the Senator-for example, the oil-leasing bill-in the fact that this involves an interference with the rights of the State in the use of the water, which is the most serious feature of it, to my

I thank the Senator. I will say to the Senator that I intend to take up that phase of the question. I am now simply discussing the tendency of the legislation of the National Government with reference to its own domain, its own resources; and I shall later touch upon the question of interference with State property.

Not only is there the tendency toward State socialism, which is so apparent to everyone, but a tendency absolutely to wipe out all State lines and State rights, making this not a great Nation of independent States, as it came to be as the result of the Civil War, but now to wipe out State lines and make this a great centralized government. I want to say to you, sir, that the peril which I see is not so much in the tendency toward a pure democracy which was rejected by our forefathers in forming this Government, but in the fact that, outrunning that tendency toward pure democracy, is the tendency toward State socialism, which, in my judgment, can not exist in a democracy.

Mr. President, reference has been made in this discussion to Indian reserves and to forest reserves—to the latter particularly. I do not know, sir, in the Western States of the United States one man who has given a moment's thought to this subject who is opposed to the proper conservation of the natural resources of the United States. I do not know one man who is opposed to the proper conservation of forest areas in the United States. Those of us who understand, as some of the eastern people do not, that we can not raise crops in our country except with the use of water by irrigation know that it is necessary in order to perpetuate irrigation that the springs themselves, the sources of the water, be protected, which necessarily means that the timber area upon which the snow may lie and the rains may fall shall be protected in order that the waters may not be carried off in torrential floods to the ocean or go to waste upon the bare sands of the desert.

There are no better or truer conservationists in the United States of America than the people of the West who are opposing the administration of the forest reserves from Washington, D. C. United States of America. We oppose the administration of those reserves; we oppose bureaucracy; we oppose any system or any scheme by which thousands and hundred of thousands, aye, millions, of acres of our land susceptible of settlement are re-served from settlement that a financial statement may be made here, through the Forestry Bureau reports, to the effect that their income upon the forest reserves has met a certain proportion of their expenses. The income from the forest reserves in New Mexico is nine-tenths derived from the grazing of the cattle and the sheep of the people of New Mexico on that portion of the forest reserve upon which a tree does not exist and can not be made to grow. Why, sir, I can produce affidavits here—and their truthfulness can not be denied by the Government officers themselves—showing that in one reservation in the State of Arizona the guide accompanying a Government forest inspector, camping 30 miles within the limits of that reserve, was compelled to buy, for the purpose of making a camp, firewood which had itself been brought for more than 30 miles.

Mr. WADSWORTH rose.

Mr. FALL. I yield to the Senator from New York. Mr. WADSWORTH. Can the Senator inform the Senate as to the percentage of the forest reserves in his State which is used for grazing purposes?

Mr. FALL. I can only do so approximately, Mr. President. I have here a report from the Forestry Service as to the number of cattle or sheep per acre which can be grazed upon the forests in New Mexico, and in making this report they show the elimination of a portion of the reserves as entirely unfitted for any grazing purposes. I propose to read that later.

An anomalous condition has arisen with reference to the protests against the inclusion in the forest reserves of these great grazing areas. When the extensions were made the little cattlemen and sheepmen all around the borders of the reserves, of course, objected to them. They were cut off, cut away. Owning their little ranches on the borders of a forest reserve, they could not graze upon it until they had secured the privilege from some clerk sent by the bureau in Washington, who passed on the case with arbitrary power. Great difficulty, of course, was experienced. In the case of the people living around the reserve, and particularly the smaller men, although the use book says that the preference shall be given to the smaller men, it could not be given to all of them; and, aside from that, preferential right is obtained under the use book of the forest reserve by the purchase of the prior existing rights of another party. Preferential rights once given for grazing carry with them preferential rights from year to year.

Under the system in Arizona and New Mexico, sir, hundreds and even thousands of stockmen were driven away entirely. The big fellow who had been able to protect himself with the expenditure of anywhere from $10,000 to $100,000 or $1,000,000 in the acquisition of various ranches and water holes and land could stay. The little man was driven away, and gradually the man who stayed has acquired the grazing rights on the forest reserves; and to-day, if you offer a proposition here to eliminate the grazing lands, you are confronted with a petition from the bankers and the business men with whom this large cattle company does business protesting against the elimination, because there is no one else to interfere. The little fellow has lost his all and gone, hunted him another home, another range for his cattle. To-day the forest reserves of the United States constitute the greatest monopoly in the cattle-grazing industry in the United States, and whenever you attempt now to throw open a portion of one of these reserves for entry under this 640-acre homestead bill which we passed it will be met by the protests of the stock associations of Arizona and New Mexico, or the southwestern country, and all the allied interests which they can bring to bear.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FALL. With pleasure.

Mr. FALL. With pleasure. Mr. MYERS. I want to say that practically all of the opposition to the 640-acre homestead bill of which the Senator speaks came from large live-stock men, sheep owners and cattle owners. That was practically the entire opposition to the bill, and they opposed it from start to finish.

Mr. FALL. That may be absolutely true, but I do not know why the Senator should seek to inject it in here. I do not understand exactly where it is apropos. However, I will get to your 640-acre homestead bill in a moment.

Mr. MYERS. I thought the Senator was speaking of the 640-acre homestead bill at that time.

Mr. FALL. Possibly the Senator did not understand the point I was making. I said that the opposition to throwing open any of the forest reserves to-day, to making them subject to the 640-acre homestead bill, would come from the great cattle companies and the great cattle men having preferential rights, grazing permits, on those reserves. That is exactly the point that the Senator himself is trying to make, as I understand, so we are not in disagreement about that. I presume the Senator has had furnished him from the department a copy of the instructions sent out to the registers and receivers under his 640acre homestead bill.

Mr. MYERS. No; I have not received them.
Mr. FALL. I shall be glad to furnish the Senator with a copy, then. I should like to ask the Senator what, in his judgment, is the procedure under which anyone could acquire a mining right under this 640-acre bill?

Mr. MYERS. What is the Senator's question? Mr. FALL. I should like to ask the Senator what, in his judgment, would be the procedure necessary for any person to acquire a mining right under this 640-acre homestead bill. The Senator will remember that the mineral rights were all held by the United States.

Mr. MYERS. You would apply for the right to enter, the same as upon any other public land. I know of nothing to prevent it.

Mr. FALL. The Senator does not know how you would go about it?

Mr. MYERS. In the usual manner provided by law for locating a mining claim. I do not know of anything to prevent any person from doing that.

Mr. FALL. If the Senator will read the instructions and read the law itself, which I will not go into fully in detail, he will find-

Mr. MYERS. I have read the law a number of times. I have not read any instructions. I have not seen any instruc-

Mr. FALL. I think the Senator does not need to go to the instructions if he will reread his own law.

Mr. President, if I had time I should like to go through these instructions, provided I could get one or two of the eastern or southern Senators either to listen to or to read my comments upon it. I am hopeless, however, as to that end; but I want to call attention, nevertheless, to the system.

I have here Circular No. 523, furnished me from the department:

Stock-raising homesteads—act of December 29, 1916. (Public, No. 0.) Instructions—

To the registers and receivers.

I should just like to ask anyone here, even from the Western States, or a lawyer, what he thinks of the process through which an humble applicant for a home upon the remaining public domain of the United States must go, and what is going to happen to him.

In the first place-

The lands to be designated are those the surface of which is, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, chiefly valuable for grazing and raising forage crops.

Not one purpose, but two. I pointed that out to the Senate, and pointed it out to the committee. Now, we will see what the Secretary says about it.

Lands * * * chiefly valuable for grazing and raising forage crops, which do not contain merchantable timber, are not susceptible of irrigation from any known source of water supply, and are of such character that 640 acres are reasonably required to support a family. The classification will be made, so far as practicable, so as to exclude lands that are not chiefly valuable for grazing and raising forage crops, either because too valuable for such use or too poor for such use.

Now, imagine where you start from. Did the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah], although he, like myself, opposed the provisions of this bill, dream that this construction could be placed upon it? The Senator will excuse me for addressing him directly; but he is so much interested, as I am, in the matter of the public domain, that I could not refrain from calling his attention to this most remarkable statement.

Now, sir, they are authorized and directed to classify the lands. To render them subject to the 640-acre homestead entry, the Secretary of the Interior says, they will be so classified that the are neither too valuable nor of too little use:

The classification will be made, so far as practicable, so as to exclude lands that are not chiefly valuable for grazing and raising forage crops, either because too valuable for such use or too poor for such use. Lands which are capable of producing valuable crops of grain or other food cereal or fruit are not subject to designation.

Why, forage crops are particularly the nonsaccharine sorghums, which are grain crops. The kafir corn, the milo maize, the nonsaccharine sorghums, are the forage crops which we understand who are to undertake to cultivate the great arid West, and they are grain crops; but-

Lands which are capable of producing valuable crops of grain or other food cereal are not subject to designation and entry under this act.

They are-

Disposable under the 160-acre or 320-acre homestead law, according to their character. Lands of such arid or poor character that they are worthless or fit only for occasional grazing in connection with large areas of other land are not subject to designation and entry under this act.

No. sir: they remain subject to entry under the 160-acre homestead act.

Mr. President, should it be necessary, to enlighten the Senate or the public upon the subject of our lands generally, to go fully into a discussion of a matter of this kind? But I want to go a little further for my own satisfaction. Let us see what a man must do to obtain a designation of the land before he can enter it :

The proviso to section 2 of the act confers a preference right of entry upon a person pursuant to whose petition land has been designated. Any person qualified to make an original or an additional entry under this act may file an application to enter a compact body of unappropriated, unreserved, surveyed public land—

And so forth.

He must, when he files said application, pay the regular fee and commissions; and, if the tract is ceded Indian land he must at that time pay that part of its price ordinarily required when entry is made. All petitions for the designation of lands presented on behalf of individual applicants should be filed in the local land office. Individual petitions for designation will not be considered unless they are filed in connection with applications to make entry under the act.

The petition must be in the form of an affidavit, executed in duplicate,

Now, here is this poor homesteader for whom we are legislating. He must make a petition to have the land designated and subject to his entry. He must make a petition in the form of an affidavit, executed in duplicate and corroborated by at least two witnesses who are familiar with the character of the land. I will say, shortly, that it is required that the affidavit of the applicant himself shall be to the effect that he knows every legal subdivision of the land; that he knows what is growing on it; he must describe the character of scrub growth, the character of grass, what kind of grass it is; he must say whether it is fitted for winter, summer, or fall range; he must declare what character of salt brush or sage brush grows upon it; he must show the mesquite brush upon every 40 acres; he must be thoroughly familiar with every legal subdivision of the entire 640 acres, and he must produce two witnesses who have been with him over every portion of it, and they shall corroborate his affidavit as to the exact character of the land and the growth, if any, thereupon. That is one of the things that must be done; and it is suggested here that to facilitate matters this poor homesteader going from some other country into New Mexico, for instance, to secure a home, shall, in addition to the two witnesses, take along with him a thoroughly competent surveyor and have his survey made, and then it would be very beneficial also if he had a plat and maps made, and it would be more beneficial if he carried with him a photographer and had photographs made of the land and the character thereof.

It is believed that the requirements of these regulations as to furnishing a description of the land can properly be met only by a careful examination of the lands by the applicant, preferably assisted by a competent surveyor.

Now, you can not enter the land, you can not have it designated, if it has any water upon it with which irrigation may be pursued; in other words, if there is any known supply of water for irrigation purposes, either under the ground or above it. Therefore, when you make your application to have the land designated, you must show whether there is any running water anywhere in the neighborhood. You must trace it on your map with a surveyor, marking the lines of the public-land surveys, and tying the watercourse to those public-land surveys to show just where there is irrigation water; and if you can show that it can be irrigated, of course your application is rejected. You must also show whether there are any wells on the land; if not, whether there are any wells in the neighborhood, and, if so, whether there is any water within 50 feet, either flowing above the surface through artesian flow or which can be raised from a depth of 50 feet by pumping for irrigation. You must make affidavit to all these facts; and if you show that there is such a source of water, then necessarily your application is rejected.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator, if he cares to do so, explain to the Senate what object there would be on the part of any civilized man in going on a 640-acre tract of land where there was no water whatsoever, particularly if the water which he can not use may be within 50 feet of the surface?

Mr. FALL. Oh, he must have water for stock purposes, or he can not get his land; but the water must not be sufficient for any irrigation purpose. If there is not water on the land itself in which he proposes to water his stock, he must show that he has the right to water somewhere else where his cattle grazing upon the land can get to the water. Oh, they understand, of course, that even in the desert of the West cattle and sheep have to have something to drink. They really understand that over at the department, apparently.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am glad to be relieved upon that point, because the regulations as read by the Senator would indicate that the department is attempting

Mr. FALL. Oh, they say all this must be done so that they can ascertain whether it would ever be possible for a man to raise a little garden of vegetables for his family, or make a living and attempt to make a home and build up the country

In other words, it is in accord with the general trend of opinion in some quarters now, as indicated by an eloquent speech from one of the Senators here last night, that it should be the policy of the Government to protect sagebrush or a tree in preference to a human being upon the land in a new State, that no longer should we have any consideration, as we have had in the past, for building up the home. The policy now is not to make a home. The policy now is not to cultivate a tree, because upon no reservation in my part of the country is any attempt made to cultivate a tree. If a portion of a forest reserve in my part of the country is cut over, nature is allowed to do the rest. The only attempt in New Mexico to cultivate trees or to reforest forest reserves has been below the timber line. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. Shafroth] spoke of forests in his State being above the timber line. Pine timber does not grow in New Mexico at a lower elevation than 6,000 feet, and merchantable timber not at that elevation. Below 6,000 feet there is nothing except scrub, possibly a little cedar and juniper, but not used for commercial purposes at all. Above 6,500 feet there is the Douglas fir, our mountain variety of yellow pine, spruce, birch, and other timber of that kind.

In our southern country of New Mexico there are only one or two mountains in the entire State which rise above the timber line, but we have at an elevation of 6,500 feet and on up timber growing; below that no timber. But the water supply generally comes from the timbered area upon the forest reserves. Throwing around the timbered area all the extensions of the forest reserve and taking in the grazing lands gives a monopoly and an income for the forest reserve.

Mr. MYERS. At this point, the hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the unfinished business comes regularly before the Senate; but, of course, it is now before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Walsh in the chair).

Chair rules it is now before the Senate.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I am not going to detain the Senate much longer. If the United States proposes to adopt the policy of reservation and of restraining and restricting population, if they prefer the sagebrush and cactus to the man, if they no longer want to build up homes where little children can live and be educated, then, for God's sake, let those of us who have been trying to build up the West know it as soon as possible, that we may in some way help our people to adapt themselves to the new condition of affairs.

Mr. MYERS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. FALL. Certainly.

Mr. MYERS. I ask the Senator if he considers that the objections to the 640-acre homestead bill-objections to the rules and regulations governing the enforcement of the law by the Interior Department—form any argument against the leasing of public lands expressly for the development of water power?

Mr. FALL. The Senator is very serious minded. It has been my misfortune that I have not been able to have him understand the general trend of my argument. I am discussing a policy. I think it is an argument against the water power.

Mr. MYERS. I understand the trend of the Senator's argument. After drawing the deduction, he will, of course, argue in favor of letting the public domain be settled up without undue restriction or opposition, so as to support population and families; but is he in favor of permitting homestead entries on these sites which are valuable for water-power development, as was the case up to 10, 15, or 20 years ago?

Mr. FALL. Yes; I favor their disposition in any way under heaven so the public can get the benefit of them.

Mr. President, there seems to be an idea in the mind of the gentleman and others of his school that in some way this water which is running over the rocks there is being conserved for the benefit of the people. Countless millions of horsepower are going into the sea.

Mr. MYERS. It is going to waste because it can not be pre-

Mr. FALL. Why not? Because of an arbitrary determination of the law, illegal under the laws of the United States, as I shall undertake to show before I conclude my argument, not by act of Congress but by usurpation of power through one of the bureaus. That is how it is being prevented; not by the people of the State.

Mr. President, there has been another policy pursued by this country, and it was not only a policy but it was a principle upon which the Government itself was founded. It was the right of the Government, upon one hand, to maintain control even in the State over the navigable waters of the United States, and the absolute right, upon the other hand, of the State to the entire control and ownership of the nonnavigable waters within its boundaries.

Legislation of this kind is a violation and reversal of the policy of the United States as laid down by Webster and others in dealing with the public lands. It is a violation of the principles of the Government as established by Washington, Madison, Jefferson, Monroe, Jay, and Hamilton, and the others who formed or advised in the formation of our Constitution.

Mr. President, allow me for just a moment to call the attention of Senators to a matter concerning which possibly many of them have given but little thought. The general impression, of course, is, without thinking, that the laws which we had in existence when we achieved our independence from England were naturally the laws of the entire United States. not take the common law from England, but we did take the common-law proceedings and decisions and precedents as governing upon us, or, rather, as instructive and advisory in the decisions of all matters.

But, sir, when we acquired the great domain which Thomas Jefferson secured for us west of the Mississippi, and the portion of which had formerly belonged to France, covering portions of the States of Indiana, Illinois, and the Northwestern States, when we acquired in 1803 the Louisiana Territory, we took that Territory under the civil law and not the common law. Supreme Court of the United States has decided that in that portion of the Territory over which the civil law had pre-vailed prior to its acquisition until further disposition by Congress or authorized local legislation, the civil law remained in

Under the common law, as we understood it and as we yet understand it, the property of the lands along nonnavigable streams was that of a riparian owner. In other words, in the States in which irrigation was not the custom, as under the common law, generally a landowner along a nonnavigable stream had a right to see that the water flowed by the banks of his land in undiminished quantity, and he could protect his rights in the court against anyone undertaking to interfere with him.

This was the law of riparian rights. Some Senators apparently have the idea that the United States Government, being a landowner in the Western States of the Union, would stand in the same position as would a riparian-right owner, we will say, in the State of Maryland. That is an entirely incorrect opinion of the law. Riparian rights did not exist under the civil law. When we acquired New Mexico in 1846 we settled the title to Texas, acquired New Mexico and Arizona and California, and a quit claim to a part of Colorado and other portions of the West from Mexico we, as decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, took that country under the laws in existence at the time we took it over, those laws to remain in full force and effect until they were changed, unless they were entirely in conflict with the Constitution of the United States

The Territory of New Mexico was immediately organized by the Congress of the United States, as was the Territory of California, the Territory of New Mexico when organized embracing all the present area of the State of Arizona, and for many years thereafter embracing all this territory. The first many years thereafter embracing all this territory. act of the Legislature of the Territory of New Mexico was to declare affirmatively two propositions. One was that the law of prior appropriations of water should always exist. Of course, that was merely a legislative act, but at that time they understood it to be in the nature of a constitutional provision, and it has always been recognized and followed. The other was that instead of the dower right, as existing under the common law, the community law should remain in New Mexico forever in existence, that the wife should be a partner with her husband, and all property accumulated should be divided between the two, and equally the property of the two.

In 1849 the rush of the gold seekers came to California and spread over the entire western country, passing over the American Desert. They found in their placer mining it was necessary to use large bodies of water, and this water ran through the public domain of the United States. Prior to 1866 there was no legislative declaration on the part of the United States as to the difference between the laws applicable to the West, or the arid lands, and those applicable to the East, but in 1866 the Congress of the United States, by affirmative legislation, recognized the necessity for a difference in the methods and customs, and did away, so far as the United States was concerned, with any riparian-right doctrine in the waters or in the lands of the West.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. FALL. Certainly.
Mr. STERLING. I wish to ask the Senator a question there. Is not the distinction between the common law in regard to riparlan rights and the law as applied in the Western States not a difference between the civil law and the common law in that respect, but that the law as applied to the Western States is simply local law, and the courts early took cognizance of the difference in the conditions between the western and semiarid regions and the regions farther east, and denied the application of the doctrine of riparian rights to that western country, rather than basing it upon any principle of the civil law?

Mr. FALL. The first cases which were decided along this line, the California case and those following, were all based on the fact that we inherited the civil law, and the civil law itself did do away with the law of riparian rights, which is the truth. The first law ever written—that is, of which we have any knowledge-is a collection of civil laws, and Justinian himself recognizes the law of prior appropriation as applicable. Italy had then as now great irrigation systems. Spain had then as now great irrigation systems. France itself had then and has now great irrigation systems. The civil-law countries recognized irrigation and recognized the use of the water of all the nonnavigable streams for irrigation first and then for the other uses later.

Mr. STERLING rose.

Mr. FALL. I will say to the Senator, if he will allow me to conclude just now, no law of riparian rights was known under the civil law except the law of "ribereños." That was the law by which in some jurisdictions an owner of land along a river had a preferential right to the use of water by irrigation as opposed to the right of one owning land behind him.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I recognize the distinction between the civil law and the common law with reference to waters flowing over the surface of the land, under the common law the owner of the lower land having the right to throw back the water. Under the civil law the lower land was subject to the easement of the higher land, which was the dominant estate, the lower land being the servient estate and being subject to take the water flowing from the higher land, but I did not think there was this difference between the civil and the common law in regard to riparian rights.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, as an interesting matter, I might say to the Senator that by the Legislature of Louisiana in 1819, upon the organization of the Territory of Louisiana, the civil law pertaining in Louisiana was adopted as the foundation of the laws of the State of Louisiana. What is known as "Las Siete Partidas" was a collection of laws made by Alphonso the Wise in 1228, and the first known printed collection of laws printed somewhere about 1258. The Legislature of Louisiana ordered a translation of this collection of laws and a codification in so far as applicable to the conditions in Louisiana. The Senator may find in that codification made by Alphonso the Wise the law of prior appropriation recognized. He will find also, if he will go back even further to the statutory law, the very first collection of statutes ever published, or attempted to be published, was Ley del Toro, the first Spanish book upon the subject.

Spain was, as, of course, the Presiding Officer recognizes and a number of Senators understand, at that time the most civilized power after the Roman Empire-the most civilized civil-law country, at any rate—and was mistress of at least one-half the world. At one time, I think, it is claimed by historians Spain dominated more territory in a more thorough way than ever France dominated under Napoleon. Spain gave to all the civillaw countries her law, as I said. I refer Senators again to Ley del Toro, and they will recall also the civil law, also the Code Napoleon. Even the codification of the civil law made by Napoleon Bonaparte recognized the law of prior appropriation as distinguished from the law of riparian rights.

In 1866 the Congress of the United States, dealing with the mining conditions which had grown out of the development of land in California and the placer mines in California, passed an act. I may call attention to it later. I thought I had it here in one of the volumes. Under the provisions of that act the law of prior appropriation was recognized. It was to the effect that anyone who had obtained a right to the use of waters from any stream in any portion of the arid West, by appropriation or otherwise, under the local laws and customs should have the absolute right of way across the public domain of the United States for the use of such water.

The second provision of the law was to the effect that in every patent thereafter written or signed by the President of the United States there should be the reservation that this patent was granted subject to the canal rights or ditch rights of anyone whomsoever desiring to use the water to pass the water over his land; in other words, reserving to the individual the absolute right to cross private lands, although patented by the United States Government, following the general trend of legislation in our country giving even to a private individual the use of waters by appropriation, the rights of the sovereign delegating to him the rights of eminent domain. The decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Basey v. Gallagher (20 Wallace) was the first case decided by this tribunal of ours recognizing the law of prior appropriations.

Mr. STERLING. Did it recognize it as the civil law?
Mr. FALL. No; it did not; but subsequent decisions of the court did. I may say to the Senator I was not going very fully into that, because we all recognize, who know anything about it, that the law of prior appropriation as contradistinguished from the law of riparian rights did not exist in the West, and I was simply explaining to those Senators who do not know it, and I suppose who want to know, how it came into existence. As a matter of fact, whether it was a part of the civil law or not was immaterial to the point under discussion. It is the law now.

Mr. President, the consequence is that the United States, and I ask Senators to understand it, has no right as a riparian proprietor in any stream in the Western country; that is, except navigable streams. In one or two States riparian rights in modified form have been recognized, but unless it has been affirmatively given by local legislation the United States does not stand as a riparian owner of any land on the nonnavigable streams in any Western State. No one else does, no individual does, the State does not itself. The waters in the Western States are to be waters subject to appropriation under rules and regulations adopted by the State, and subject to appropriation by any qualified appropriator.

Mr. President, we are faced with this anomalous proposition. Following the act of 1866 and the various other acts of Congress the lands mentioned in this bill here can be acquired, rights of way across them can be used for irrigation or for mining, and under one of the statutes at least and applicable to certain conditions, for manufacturing purposes. We are faced with this proposition. It is not understood generally. The United States may have 50 withdrawals on a stream, each of which is subject to the conditions in the bill, and under the laws of the United States, as they exist now, I can go upon the first withdrawal above and take every drop of water out of the stream, if I have acquired the right to do it from the State, and use it for irrigation purposes and destroy it and not turn a drop of it back anywhere in the stream. This right is recognized not only by the Supreme Court of the United States, but by the direct acts of Congress. I can make this appropriation for mining or irrigation purposes on these withdrawn power sites and absolutely take the water. But because the law itself did not state affirmatively that the right of way was also for the development of hydraulic power, the Secretary of the Interior, without any authority of Congress, rather than the general act allowing him to withdraw lands for general purposes, withdrew these sites from settlement in violation of the spirit. I believe if the United States were to allow a suit to be brought, as suggested by the Senator from Colorado, it would be held that he did it in defiance of the law.

The gentlemen who are supporting this bill say that they are protecting the rights of the people in the great property which is their heritage, and yet they will admit to you that you can take under the law of the United States to-day and the laws of the States every drop of the water out of these streams and apply it to irrigation purposes and not turn a drop of it back; that you can take every drop of it for mining purposes and waste it away after you have had this individual use of it and not turn it back and take it over the same withdrawn sections

A part of this great propaganda is that the inheritance of the people is to be taken away from them, and that therefore you must stop the monopoly, as they claim, of the hydraulic power; and we hear a great deal about the monopoly of the hydraulic power of the United States. I say to you, Mr. President, that before the Congress of the United States go very much further talking about the development of natural resources and the reservation of the great heritage of the people they had better consider for a few moments this great power that is going to waste out here near Washington at Great Falls that might be used for the benefit of the people. I say to you, sir, if this power lay in my State or in any Western State and we had the right to use the land on the stream for development of power the poverty-stricken State of New Mexico or Arizona or any other State in the West would have had this great power harnessed long ago and working for the benefit of the people of the United States.

The theory of the conservationist is that we will not do the thing for you and you shall not do it for yourself.

In so far as this particular bill is concerned, except as it is establishing a principle, except as going to the same extent as the Senate has attempted to go and as Government bureaus have attempted to go with the radium bill and with other measures of that kind, reaching out to pull back and to hold here in Washington control over natural resources, this great heritage of the people, to be administered by bureaus here in Washington—were it not for the fact that it is in line with the same desire apparent in the actions of some people and in the declarations of some people, and were it not a matter of principle, so far as the effect of it in my State is concerned, it would have very little effect; but I do not believe, sir, in State socialism. If we are to have State socialism I think that at least so long as we have a political unit known as the State socialism should be confined within State limits.

I do not believe that it is possible for this country to live with state socialism existing and a bureaucratic government administering the affairs of the country from Washington. That is precisely the trouble with your 640-acre homestead law. The difficulty was inherent in the law itself. I attempted to point it out to Senators who were favoring it. I made no strong opposition to it; for they wanted it. The difficulty was in their own legislation. It is almost impossible for the Secretary of the Interior to construe that law. Some of the Senators laughed at the absurdity of the Secretary's proposal here with reference to the classification of land. You had tied his hands and had bound him so that he was compelled to adopt this proposition as to classification, or else he was compelled to override the act of Congress itself.

The trouble is not only with the bureaus, but it is the shirking of the duty of the Congress of the United States to legislate with reference to these matters. You pass a law and you leave it to the departments to put it into effect. You deputize them to legislate for you. "What is the Constitution now between friends"? It amounts to nothing. What are State rights? Why, we trade State rights any day for an appropriation of $250 for a local institution in a county.

Mr. President, these are some of my objections to this bill. I am not opposed, as I have undertaken to say, to conservation generally; but I am opposed to reservation. I am one of those who believe that it is better to produce a child and to give a home to a man than it is to undertake to cultivate a tree upon soil which will not sprout the seed. I am one of those who believe that even as we have administered our resources in the West—wastefully, just as you people are wasting here the power which is going into the sea every day past our cities—we have wasted in some respects our resources in the West. It has cost us more per ton of ore to mine the ore from the bowels of the earth, possibly, than it should have cost; it has cost us more to manufacture a pound of copper, possibly, than it should have cost. It is true we have allowed the large companies to acquire valuable mining properties in the West; but what have you, the Congress of the United States, done? You have put it into the power of an alien to take all the millions of dollars out of the earth that can be found in it and apply them to his own purposes, although you have said he can not get a patent to the surface of the ground; and you have never amended your laws.

surface of the ground; and you have never amended your laws.

Mr. President, what will be the effect of the passage of this act? The State owns the water; that is conceded in the act itself. The Government of the United States owns the land. A party applying for a right of way or for a lease must first acquire from the State the right to the use of the water. He must then acquire from the Secretary of the Interior the right to use the land upon which to place the water and the structures for its use. The consequence is that there are three estates at least involved; that is, the estate of the United States as the owner of the fee—while it is true that men of my class claim that it is simply a trust—the ownership of the United States in the fee of the soil; the ownership of the State in the water itself; and the estate of the appropriator of the water in the water itself, being a revocable estate or a forfeitable estate, which can return to the State at any time. We then have the leasehold. The party developing the water power is the lessee of the United States. He is the holder of an estate under the State under certain conditions of performance, the violation of which restores the estate to the State itself. We have, therefore, an anomalous condition of affairs. Admitting the State's ownership in the waters, this bill seeks to adopt the principle that the Government of the United States, having its land, may collect a rental upon the use of the State's waters by the permission granted to the lessee to build a power house upon the land; yet, sir, as I stated yesterday afternoon, it is not only in the matter of State rights that the Constitution is being violated in the attempt to enact this character of legislation, in my judgment. There can be no right, in my judgment, in the United States—holding, as I do, that it is a trustee for the benefit of all the people of the United States of the public lands and resources—there can be no right in the United States, in my opinion, to grant this character of estate. Certainly it has not been the policy heretofore to grant this character of estate; certainly it has never been the policy of the United States, even as far as we have gone in the last few years in the interference with the rights of the States, to undertake to maintain domination over that which the United States has admitted by legislation and by precedent belongs absolutely to the State itself; that is, the waters of the State. Yet we now propose to hold jurisdiction or domination over this estate, the property the sovereign State loaned by it to the individual, but we also provide that in the event we choose to do so, at the expiration of a certain length of time, we shall take over all that individual's right and will proceed to run this business ourselves. This is a provision of the bill which we are asked now to enact into law. Of course we object to it.

Mr. President, I only want to refer incidentally to one or two other matters. We want to clear the record. There is some little controversy about certain decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in the matter of the right of the State to tax, and so forth. I have no doubt in my own mind that the Congress of the United States can place an amendment on this bill authorizing the State governments to tax these power sites. There is now no such amendment. I have no doubt, however, of the proposition that Congress can enact such legislation.

One of the Senators here last night referred to the fact that there was one woman in the State of Texas who had 1,600,000 acres of land, and referred to the fact that the United States Government had given to the railroads of the country 155,000,000 acres of land, and stated that, remembering things of that kind, he did not propose to vote away any more of the people's heritage.

The trouble with that argument, Mr. President, is that the western people are not asking anything; they are not asking any donations. They did not give these lands to the railroads, but it was the Congress of the United States, on the recommendation of the bureaus of the United States Government, that gave the lands to the railroads. The States are not responsible for it. That is exactly our objection. We do not want the control of the lands left here; we do not want it to be possible for people not understanding the conditions to legislate for those conditions as they actually exist upon the ground.

As to this great estate of 1,600,000 acres held by one woman, the Senator who made the statement, of course, did not know—he had received his information from some one else who possibly did not know—that it was not under any disposition of the lands by the State of Texas that this lady acquired this very great estate. The State of Texas was a portion of the State of Coahuila and Texas, a part of the Mexican Republic, prior to 1836 or 1837. The State of Texas was then one of the geographical divisions of the State of Coahuila and Texas. It had representatives in the Mexican Legislature. Stephen Austin and son had a great concession from the Mexican Government for the settlement of a magnificent empire estate. He had great grants of land conditioned upon his placing residents upon those lands. Possibly it was unfortunate that this system was adopted by the Mexican Government, because it certainly resulted in the colonists placed there by Austin wresting the great empire of Texas from the Mexican Republic; but, nevertheless, those are historical facts.

The lands that are spoken of, lying in great, enormous bodies, and now owned by Mrs. King, of Cleberg, were largely Spanish land grants. They are not even lands granted by the Republic of Texas, or granted by the State of Coahulla and Texas, or granted by the Mexican Government to the Austin colonists, but are largely original Spanish land grants. The colonists for special services had a head right to a league and labor of land, containing 4,428 acres. Therefore, instead of locating 160 acres at a time, they located 4,428 acres. Texas, on her magnificent domain, allowed her soldiers, both those who fought in the Mexican War and those who had fought in the Civil War, to obtain head rights, which they could locate anywhere, amounting to as much as 4,400 acres. They recognized the fact that one could not live on 160 acres of land of this character. eastern part of the State the rainfall area had been settled up, and this great estate of 1,600,000 acres is in a part of the State which has become valuable by the development of railroads opening up the country, until a portion of it is actually bringing such a high price now, after having been held in private ownership for something like 60 years, that I think 10,000 acres out of the entire estate have been sold in recent years for $25 per acre. It is a grazing proposition, requiring from 30 to 40 acres for a cow, just as in my State it is the requirement.

I have here a document, with which I shall not encumber the RECORD, containing a letter from the Forestry Bureau. I must, however, in answer to the question of the Senator from New York [Mr. Wadsworth], call attention to that one particular letter. In answer to my query of the department as to what their experience was as to the number of acres that were required in New Mexico to graze one head of cattle, the answer was:

Ten acres to one sheep, 38.4 acres to one cow, excluding, however, the broken country which did not bear grass or which was beyond the ready reach of the cattle.

This is the character of the country. Why, sir, the Spaniards knew what they were doing, and had it not been for the system adopted by the Spanish Government, by which nearly one-third of my State had been granted long prior to its incoming to the Union, we would not have been able to maintain a State government to-day.

The people of New Mexico are not responsible for the fact that there are 2,000,000 acres of land in the Maxwell land grant; they are not responsible for the fact that there are 1,000,000 acres in the Tierro Anarillo land grant; they are not responsible for the fact that there are 1,000,000 acres in the Armentares land grant, owned by a great California syndicate; nor are they responsible for the fact that on that great domain it requires 40 acres for a cow to subsist, and that a family located on 640 acres, such as you are giving us out of your great wealth and out of your charity, at the very best could expect to graze but 16 head of cattle—not milch cows, not dairy cows, but 16 head of range cattle.

These are the conditions in New Mexico. Who is responsible for those large grants? It has been maintained for years as to practically every one of the grants which I have mentioned that when the patents to the lands constituting those grants were confirmed by the Congress of the United States by special act they covered from three to ten times the land originally granted. Those confirmations were made specially by the Congress of the United States, and not by the people of the State. We have not granted away any great domain.

The suggestion which I have just made may be illuminated

The suggestion which I have just made may be illuminated by reciting the fact that the court of private land claims, which finally passed upon the title of the remaining Spanish land grants in my State and those in Arizona and in California, in my State invariably cut the amount of the area very materially from that claimed by the claimants. These are just general conditions. This is merely a desultory attempt at enlightenment to give the people generally something upon which to form an opinion.

I desire to say again, by way of emphasis, that legislation of this character is an entire change of policy on the part of the United States. It is a deadly blow at State rights. These are States now; they are no longer Territories; and this legislation proposes to strike a deadly blow at them. Furthermore, it is a long step toward, national state socialism and imposes an inevitable restriction upon the development and the prosperity of the great western country. These are the conditions.

I do not believe in reservation of surface land under any circumstances. I believe that reservation of surface land means restriction of population, for the people must have land upon which to live. Although opposed in principle, because I believe that it is very bad policy to the Government of the United States engaging in any form of State or Government ownership, I am not so bitterly opposed to reservations or restrictions upon the disposition of the minerals under the surface, because the same principle as to population does not apply.

principle as to population does not apply.

On first entering this body I insisted that there must be no disposition of the property, even of the Government, in a State which would deprive that State of the revenues to which it was naturally entitled. Therefore, I have not been so bitterly opposed to the reservation of mineral wealth, even the coal under the public lands of my State, for example, provided that out of every cent of revenue the Government of the United States exacts from those working the property some portion of that revenue is turned over to the State for local self-government, else it is a self-evident fact, needing no proof, that the State can not maintain its local self-government, and will be forced to come here and apply to the Congress of the United States and ask, as Indians upon a reservation ask, for a cash appropriation every year for the support of our State and local governments.

If you are going to enter upon this policy, then be guarded about it; have some respect for the rights of the people who have gone into the western country, and legislate with some understanding. Remember that in the disposition even of the waters, of the coal, of the minerals, and particularly of the surface land, legislation which may be just and may fit the State of Montana may not apply to New Mexico or to Arizona. Remember that the 640-acre homestead bill, with the exception of a few thousand acres in New Mexico which might come under its provisions, constitutes to a person seeking to take advantage of it a liability and not an asset. How is a family going to live upon the land? How is it possible under the provisions of that law for any family actually to comply with the law, make a home, and acquire title to 640 acres?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Thompson in the chair).
Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FALL. I yield. Mr. WALSH. I thought possibly inasmuch as the Senator is evidently in error as to my attitude in respect to the 640-acre homestead law that he would like to be corrected. know that the Senator is advised of the fact that that bill never did meet with my approval.

Mr. FALL. The Senator will pardon me if I appeared to be directing personally my remarks toward him. The Senator will realize that he is the one Senator, possibly, who is paying any attention to the remarks of the Senator from New Mexico, and for that reason I have been directing my remarks to the Senator because he appeared to have some little interest in this matter.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the remarks of the Senator naturally would lead to the conclusion that the 640-acre homestead bill was imposed upon the people of the West by some body in the East. The fact about the matter is that I yielded my objection to it because there was practical unanimity on the part of the representatives from the West in favor of that

Mr. FALL. The Senator is simply misinformed as to that, because there was not that unanimity which he thought there was on the part of western Senators. I think that one or two western Senators, including the colleague of the Senator from Montana, who is chairman of the committee, supported the bill and appeared to be very sincerely and very wholeheartedly in

Mr. WALSH. I merely desired to express my understanding of the matter, that the 640-acre homestead bill originated with and was urged by the representatives of the West.

Mr. FALL. If the Senator will recognize one from the Southwest as a western Senator, I can say that it did not meet with my approval at all, and I do not think it met with the approval of various other Senators from the Northwest, the West, and the Southwest.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. FALL. I yield. Mr. WORKS. I happen to be a member of the Committee on Public Lands, and I know there was a great deal of opposition in that committee to the 640-acre homestead bill. I impressed with it myself, but I did not make any active opposition to it because some of the Senators from other States said it would be of value in their States. I did not think it would be in California, and, while I did not believe in it, I did not actively oppose it.

Mr. FALL. That was the position of the Senator from New Mexico. I did not favor it. I was not present at the time the vote was cast. Had I been present, I should not have voted for the bill because of my objections to it. I would have been favorable, as I am favorable now, to any possible measure which will cut loose from the Department of the Interior or from any bureau of the Government any of the resources of my State, and, although I do believe that the 640-acre bill will prove a delusion and a snare and a liability rather than an asset, it will finally result in putting lands generally into larger bodies and into private ownership where they can be taxed for purposes of local self-government.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield further to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FALL. I do.

Mr. WALSH. My only purpose, Mr. President, in referring to this matter at all was that I thought the remarks of the Senator were calculated to leave upon the country the impression that the 640-acre homestead bill originated with the bureau or department officers or somebody in the East who was imposing an unwelcome policy upon the West.

Mr. FALL. Well, sir, if the Senator insists upon the history of the 640-acre homestead bill going into the Record, he can find it in the report on the Ferris bill, and he will be possibly rather enlightened by reading that report. It originated with a Member who lives in a State which is largely a nonpublic land State of the West.

Mr. President, I have been referring to differences in local conditions, because they exist and they should govern legislation as well with reference to water powers, as I have said, as with reference to mineral development or as to surface development or population and settlement. What is applicable to Montana is not applicable to New Mexico. What does all this mean? It means that in the handling of the public domain it is impossible intelligently to handle it from Washington. Let the Congress of the United States pass such safeguards as it sees fit in order to provide that the natural resources shall not be monopolized generally, and let the administration of those laws and of those resources be confided to the localities where the resources them-selves are situated. Let this be done under the general supervisory power of Congress or of the department which it may intrust with the business, but give us local self-government, and you will not have the trouble with reference to the disposition of the public lands, the great heritage of the people, which is now experienced.

Why, Mr. President, it costs double the amount of morey to administer the forest reserves in New Mexico than is received from them. I stood here four years ago and offered a compact between the Legislature of New Mexico and the United States Government or the Agricultural Department under which we would take the forest reserves in New Mexico and administer them under the laws of Congress and under the direction of the Department of Agriculture itself and under the direction of the Department of Agriculture itself and under the Use Book without one cent of cost to the Treasury of the United States. I could not get that proposal accepted. To-day I have protests, particularly from the stockmen in the State of Arizona, at the action of the Forestry Bureau under the Agricultural Department of the United States in attempting to raise grazing fees on these lands from $1 per head to $2 per head. The department knows nothing of the conditions. In the State of Montana there are nutritious grasses which will develop a beef cow or a beef animal. Our cattle are shipped from our region of country, which is a breeding country, to Montana, Wyoming, and other States and put upon the grasses there. We can not develop them; we ship at 11 and 12 months to the pastures in other States; and then in the other States they sell to feeders after they have fattened the cow or the beef animal. We can not do that in our portion of the country. In Montana and other States they can pay $2 per head for grazing privileges, while we can not pay that amount in our country, where we are simply raising breeding animals, and where 40 acres to a cow quired. The people here do not understand the conditions. The Secretary of the Interior knows nothing about them. average Senator knows the conditions in his own State, but nothing about those in any other State.

Complaint is made of the great landholdings, as I have said, and I have referred to the great areas in my State embraced in land grants. Why were they granted? Do you suppose the Spaniards were not empire builders and did not know how to build? The greatest pioneers that the world has ever known were the old Conquistadores, who brought civilization in the State of New Mexico before the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth They granted these great grazing areas because they knew while 50,000 acres sounds like an enormous estate-and it is claimed now that such estates deprive the people of this great Union of their heritage—that in the State of New Mexico 50,000 acres will at best support 1,000 head of cattle. Spaniards were true pioneers, and they knew what they were doing. We still had Bentons from the West in 1846 to fix the policy under which we developed our Territory; but we have no Bentons now. We have, however, some who, for one reason or another, are following the suggestions thrown out by the Secretary of the Interior; so that we have almost surrendered all legislative prerogatives to a bureaucracy.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in the course of the remarks of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Fall] he said as follows, referring to the subject of radium:

referring to the subject of radium:

A bill was introduced providing for immediate action, and what was it? That permission be granted to the Secretary of the Interior, or that Congress enact a law, withdrawing from any entry whatsoever or from any disposition all lands containing ores of carnotite, from which radium is produced, or of mines containing pitchblende, which is also one of the sources of radium. That bill was seriously insisted upon. It came from the Committee on Mines, under a report made by the eminent chairman of that committee, himself a representative of a western mining State. Immediate consideration of the measure was insisted upon at that time.

Mr. President, the objection of some of us from the Western States that the Secretary of the Interior did not know what he was doing, did not understand the subject at all, was treated with contempt. Minority members of the committee could scarcely receive a patient hearing upon their objections; and yet, sir, the effect of that proposed law would have been to withdraw every acre of land in what is known as the Permian Jurassic area of the United States. That withdrawal would have covered the entire half of my State of New Mexico, practically all of the State of Utah, and more than half of the State of the Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh] himself, who introduced the bill.

The Senator from New Mexico was speaking from recollection of something that transpired in the Sixty-third Congress, a matter of two years ago. I hold in my hand the bill referred to by the Senator, Senate bill 4405 of the Sixty-third Congress, second session. As it does not provide for the withdrawal of one acre of land, I ask that it be incorporated in the RECORD at this point, without reading

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The bill as proposed to be amended by the Committee on Mines and Mining is as follows:

A bill (8. 4405) to provide for and encourage the prospecting, mining, and treatment of radium-bearing ores in lands belonging to the United States, for the purpose of securing an adequate supply of radium for Government and other hospitals in the United States, and for other and treatment of radium-bearing ores in lands belonging to the United States. But he purpose of securing an adequate supply of radium for Government and other hospitals in the United States, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter all deposits of carnotite, pitch-blende, or other ores containing radium in sufficient quantity for extraction, in lands belonging to the United States, and the lands containing same, shall be subject to exploration, occupation, and purchase under the mining laws upon condition that said radium-bearing ores shall be exclusively sold and delivered to the United States as herein-after provided, and the exclusive right of the United States to purchase and receive said ores from the owners of such lands, their lessees and assigns, together with the right of the United States to enter upon the lands so patented and mine, develop, and remove said radium-bearing ores in the event that the patentee, his lessees or assigns, of the market value of the said ores so mined and removed, as fixed by the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of section 4 of this act, less the cost of mining and removing same, shall be expressly reserved in any and all patents which may hereafter be issued for lands located under this act. Provided, That if the United States shall at any time fall or refuse to purchase any such lands so located, whether patented or unpatented, upon the tender of the same for sail in carload lots at any radiroad station, or such a such patenter of the same for sail in carload lots at any radiroad station, or such and the such provided, the said of the said tions on lands located as herein provided for shall at all times be subject to inspection by authorized representatives of the Secretary of the Interior, and the locators or patentees of such lands, their lessees and assigns, shall transmit annually to the Secretary of the Interior or to his authorized representative, on blanks to be furnished by him, a statement of all developments, the nature thereof, and the quantity of ore mined.

Sec. 6. That there is hereby appropriated for the erection and general equipment of a suitable building or buildings for radium extraction the sum of $150,000, and for the necessary expenses connected with the purchase and treatment of radium-bearing ores and the extraction of radium therefrom during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, the further sum of $300,000.

Sec. 7. That nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect or abridge the right, in good faith, to locate or appropriate (under existing laws) any public lands, whether mineral or otherwise, not known by the locator or appropriator to be of value because of any radium-bearing ores therein, and any patent issued for such lands so located or appropriated shall be unlimited in character except as in such laws provided, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

Sec. 8. Except as herein provided the general laws in relation to the disposition of mining lands shall be applicable to the lands in this act referred to containing radium-bearing ores.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I likewise have before me a

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I likewise have before me a copy of the hearings had upon that bill. They were quite extensive. Contrary to what might be inferred from the remarks of the Senator from New Mexico, every opportunity was given to those who were opposed to the bill to be heard at length by the committee. There were examined, among others antagonistic to the bill, O. B. Barlow, of Montrose, Colo.; Joseph M. Flannery, of Pittsburgh, Pa.; Thomas R. Henahan, of Denver, Colo., State mining inspector of the State of Colorado; Thomas V. Curran, of Placerville, Colo.; Hon. W. H. King, of Salt Lake City, Utah; and W. L. Cummings, of Placerville, Colo.; and the record will show that the Senator from New Mexico, being present at most of the hearings, interrogated the witnesses to whatever extent he cared to do so.

I am quite sure that so far as the committee, at least, was concerned every opportunity was given to the Senator from New Mexico and all other members of the committee opposed to the bill to express at length whatever views they might have concerning the measure, and also to interrogate all witnesses who were called before the committee.

This I say in justice to the committee and to myself.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, the Senator is very sensitive. I do not care to get into a controversy with the Senator. I am a member of that committee. I appeared before that committee. I sought to offer certain amendments. I remember exactly what the consequence was and what treatment I had. When the Senator brought in the bill and put it on the calendar I made certain personal requests of him, which are usually accorded to any Senator making them, with reference to absenting myself for two or three days on particular matters to go to New York. The Senator will recall that when I remind him of it. The Senator could not grant me the request.

It is matters of this kind to which I have reference, simply as showing that undoubtedly the Senator was perfectly sincere in thinking that it was necessary to enact this legislation immediately to save the people of the United States from the great cancer trouble. I do not care to go into details. I am a pretty frank man if it is necessary to be so.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator from Montana has never changed his view about it. I understood that the Senator from New Mexico had a different view about the matter. sired to get the record straight on it; that is all. I merely de-

Mr. FALL. I have nothing but a very kindly feeling for the Senator, and I do not care to get into any personal controversy. I made the statement, and if necessary I can furnish details which I think will convince anyone as to the correctness of the statement I made.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 19359, the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I trust the Senator will withdraw that motion. I understood that it was the Senator's desire that the Senate proceed to the consideration of that measure. If he will withdraw the motion, I will ask unanimous consent to lay aside the unfinished business temporarily for the consideration of the Agricultural bill.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Certainly. Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I think I shall have to object to the request for unanimous consent. The bill that the Senator is advocating has been held over us here now for some time. The history of it has been made. Another bill was before the Senate, or sought to be brought before the Senate, and a Democratic caucus was held, and it was decided to displace that bill with the present bill. That statement has been made, and I am simply reiterating statements that have been made to the Sen-It was agreed to displace it, although it was not agreed in this caucus, I believe, to bind certain Senators to vote for the water-power bill. Still it was to be brought up and was to displace the Townsend retired-officers' bill. It has served

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMPSON in the chair). Does the Senator object?

Mr. FALL. I am arguing the question as to the request for unanimous consent. If I am speaking in the time of the Senator from Montana, very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; does the Senator object? I am undertaking to explain what my object will be if I do object. I do not understand that I have not the privilege of making that explanation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Certainly the Senator has Mr. WALSH. If I have any right to the floor, I very gladly

I am very sorry if I interrupted the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. Not at all. Mr. FALL. I thought the Senator had made a request and was through with it.

I was glad to yield to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana The Senator from New Mexico will under-

Certainly; the Senator can take the floor, then. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of taking up House bill 19359.

And upon that request I addressed the Senate. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there an objection?

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I obtained recognition, did I not, from the Presiding Officer?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

Very well. Mr. President, I feel that I should Mr. FALL. object to this request for unanimous consent, and I desire to give my reasons for doing it, some of which I have already explained to some extent.

This bill has been laid aside now for a discussion of other measures and still is brought back, pending, hanging over us all There has been some attempt, at least, toward insinuations that there has been a filibuster on the part of some Senators against the consideration of the bill. I want to vote for or against it. I want a chance to vote upon it. I will do anything to facilitate that object. It will not be facilitated by simply hanging it as a club over my head and that of other Senators opposed to it and laying it aside from time to time to consider the business which the Senate is going to settle. You know perfectly well that you have no idea in the world of passing the bill that is now pending. You know that you want to consider matters of importance, and you expect to do it. I do not mean that the Senator who has charge of the bill has no hope of passing it. He may have some hope of that character, but I think the majority of the Senators know perfectly well that this bill is not going to pass, and they are simply using it for some reason as a buffer.

I realize that the appropriation bill should be taken up. am perfectly willing to agree with the Senator to take it up, but I am not willing to agree to any more unanimous consents, keeping this bill here in the way of everything else. I shall have to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an objection.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold the objection for just a moment?

Mr. FALL. I will. Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I suppose I am as much opposed to this bill as any other Senator, but I think the Senator from Montana is perfectly sincere in his efforts to secure its passage. I think he and I would both like to see these waterpower sites developed, and I had hoped that out of this discussion might come some bill that would be satisfactory to all of us that would bring about that result.

I am utterly opposed to the bill in its present form, because I do not believe in a leasing system, to begin with, and for the further reason, generally speaking, that it is a violation of the right of the States to control the waters flowing within the limits of the States. So far the Senator from Montana and I are about as widely divided as could be possible.

But there has been a proposition presented here, or there will be, to turn over this whole matter to the States and allow them to deal with it. I think that would be a very proper way of disposing of the whole question, because the most important part of the property that is going to make these water-power sites valuable is the water itself, and that belongs to the States. If the two could be brought together under the supervision and control of the States, I think that would be a happy disposition of the whole subject.

On the other hand, Mr. President, I have introduced here a substitute for the committee amendment that provides for the absolute sale of these water-power sites, with a view of bringing about the same result. I should be glad to have that proposition submitted to the Senate and determined. If a bill of that kind could be agreed upon, it would bring about what the Senator from Montana wants, probably not in the way he wants it. but at least it would develop water-power sites within the State of Montana and the other Western States. So that I have no disposition myself to prevent the consideration of this bill, to the end and with the hope that some result may be reached that will be satisfactory to the representatives of the Western States. Therefore I hope that the Senator from New Mexico will not insist on his objection to temporarily laying aside this bill in order that it may receive proper consideration.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I feel that I should like to appeal to the Senator from New Mexico in the same way. I am very sure that he realizes the necessity for some legislation upon this very important question; and I appeal to the Senator from Colorado in the same way.

There are amendments or proposed substitutes for this bill.

These represent three different ideas. The bill before us represents the idea that these lands ought to be leased out for a period of 50 years. The Senator from California has offered a substitute which provides another plan, namely, that these lands shall be put up and sold outright to those who desire to develop them. The Senator from Arizona, as I understand, has another substitute, which provides that these lands shall be transferred to the States in which they lie.

Now, why should we not take the judgment of the Senate upon which one of these three systems ought to be adopted? And if any one is we can then seek to modify the proposal so as to get general concurrence.

I do not exactly like to feel that any Senator would simply like to postpone this matter without having any solution what-ever arrived at, or even the judgment of the Senate taken concerning the particular method of disposition that ought to be exercised. I hope that we may be able to keep this measure before the Senate and get a vote on these substitutes, or one of them at least, and then upon the final matter.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, has the Senator from New Mexico concluded?

Mr. FALL. I have concluded, but both the Senators have been appealing to me to withdraw my objection.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator has concluded his remarks, according to a promise that I made to another Senator I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] on account of official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh] has asked unanimous consent to lay aside the unfinished business for the purpose of taking up House bill 19359, the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I object to the unanimous con-

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I move, then, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 19359.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I do not believe that motion ought to prevail. It looks to me like simply a plan to displace the unfinished business. I am sorry the Senator from New Mexico objected to the request for unanimous consent to lay it aside. The Senator must see that if this motion prevails it will displace the unfinished business, and I hardly think the Senator from New Mexico would want to displace it. I thought he would be willing for it to stay before the Senate a day or two longer, a few days longer, to give it a fair chance of getting to a vote.

Of course, the Senator having made his objection, which is his privilege, if this motion prevails it will displace the unfinished business. I shall vote against the motion, and hope it will not prevail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MYERS. On that I call for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LANE (when Mr. Chamberlain's name was called). wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. Chamberlain] is absent on official business, and that he has a pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]

Mr. CLARK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Brandegee] and vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). The junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson] is necessarily absent on account of illness, and I am paired with him for the day. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLean] who is absent, to the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], and vote "nay.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). Has the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. THOMAS. I have a pair with that Senator and therefore withhold my vote. Were I at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Goff] to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Lea] and vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Lippitt] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and vote "nay.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and vote "yea.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. Harding] to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Broussard] and vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Kirby] and vote "nay."

Mr. VARDAMAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to inquire if the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Brady] has voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I am paired with that Senator. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE] and let my vote stand.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] to the junior Senator from California [Mr. Phelan] and vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (after having voted in the affirmative). I wish to income whether the junior Senator from Minnesota wish to inquire whether the junior Senator from Minnesota

[Mr. CLAPP] has voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am paired with that Senator, and not being able to get a transfer I withdraw my vote.

Mr. HOLLIS. I was requested to state that the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. Pomerene] is detained on official business.

Mr. SIMMONS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Clapp] to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Pomerene] and vote "yea."

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Chambeelain], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Rob-INSON], and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] are absent on official business

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 19359) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for action on the committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, under the head of "Department of Agriculture," subhead "Office of the Secretary," in the item of appropriation for "Salaries, Office of the Secretary of Agriculture," on page 2, for "Salaries, Office of the Secretary of Agriculture," on page 2, line 7, after the words "Secretary of Agriculture," to strike out "$2,500" and insert "$3,000," so as to read:

Salaries, Office of the Secretary of Agriculture: Secretary of Agriculture, $12,000; Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, $5,000; solicitor, $5,000; chief cierk, $3,000, and $500 additional as custodian of buildings; private secretary to the Secretary of Agriculture, $3,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that is about the only increase in salaries in the bill, as far as I have examined the bill in the short time I have had it before me. May I ask the Senator from South Carolina if this is the only increase of salary in the bill?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. There are only two others. There are three in the whole bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, the appropriation bills that have passed so far have passed without a single increase in salary, and that seems to be the settled policy of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator will allow me, I should like to state the reason which prompted the committee to this action, and I think it will meet his objection.

The Agricultural Department has grown so enormously and there have been added so many bureaus and divisions, and its work has been extended until those who are charged with the responsibility of meeting the requirements of new legislation from time to time have been so burdened that it takes practically the entire time of this private secretary. In increasing the salary of the private secretary of the Secretary of Agriculture we looked upon him as in the immediate official family of the Secretary of Agriculture. The fact was brought to our attention and the committee unanimously deemed it wise where great labor and responsibility were placed upon these officials to compensate them in this way. There are only three of these increases in the bill, and we thought we were justified in making them.

Mr. SMOOT. I take it for granted that everything the Senator says is absolutely correct, but it not only applies in this one case here but it applies to many cases that were brought to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations, particularly in the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. I know that there are employees of the Census Bureau whose salaries without doubt ought to have been increased.

There are one or two in the Treasury Department and there are others in other departments of our Government. I should have said that the committee even went so far as to increase these particular salaries, but after a complete consideration of the bill the committee decided that the only course that could be pursued without criticism by a great many of the employees of the department would be to adopt a policy, and that was that this year there should be no increases in salaries.

To be consistent, it seems to me that all the committees having appropriation bills in charge should follow the same policy. If not, the Committee on Appropriations will be pointed to as the only committee having appropriation bills in charge that has followed it, and there would be severe criticism of them in some quarters for adhering to a policy that they thought ought to be followed in all the other appropriation bills.

I wish to say to the Senator frankly that I have not heard the details as to why this particular officer ought to receive an increase, but I do not hesitate to say that the committee thought that the testimony was sufficient that he should receive the increase, just as the Committee on Appropriations thought that there ought to be an increase in salary of certain officers the appropriation for whom was carried in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I was not present in the Chamber when the Senator began. May I ask to what item he

Mr. SMOOT. I was calling attention to the increase in the salary of the private secretary of the Secretary of Agriculture and making a statement as to what has been the policy of the Committee on Appropriations as to an increase in salaries so far in all the bills it has had under consideration. If in the Agricultural appropriation bill we are to increase salaries, it seems to me that the Committee on Appropriations, which has so many of the bills under its control, should follow the same I think there ought to be uniformity in the matter. The District appropriation bill was reported this morning, and the policy has been just the same as it was on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. There is no increase of salaries in that bill.

I ask the Senator from South Carolina if he does not think that that same policy ought to be carried out by all the committees having appropriation bills in charge?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I wish to state to the Senator and to the Senate that it was the disposition of the committee, I am quite sure it was of the acting chairman and of the entire committee, to cut down the appropriations just as much as economy and efficiency would justify, but after we have added in the last two or three years the grain grading, and added the Market Bureau, and added other things that will come under the administration directly of the Secretary of Agriculture, and after their work had been increased so greatly this increase seemed to be so justifiable that, though we did not allow any increases elsewhere, yet at three particular points where there seemed to have been an accumulation of the work, where it had to be distributed, the committee felt justified in raising the salaries slightly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Certainly.
Mr. GALLINGER. I regret the action of the committee in increasing any salary. In the legislative bill I was extremely anxious to have an increase given to a man whose responsibilities are great, but it was argued that no increase should be allowed. No increase was allowed in the District of Columbia appropriation bill. I think I am permitted to say this. We made increases in a good many cases, but at the urgent request of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and of Senators every one of them was stricken out this morning.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Let me make a statement to the Senator. This amendment records the feeling of justice of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry upon the specific facts furnished to them. If it is the judgment of the Senate that we should adhere to a uniform rule, and that there shall be no infraction of that rule, then it absolves us from all the responsibility which necessarily rests upon us under the merits of the specific case.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the precise rule which was invoked in the committee this morning. Of course, the Senate can do what it pleases about it. I think we ought to have a general rule.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President-

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BRYAN. I think it is a good time to establish the rule right now. The committee having in charge the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill did not increase any salaries, and there were just as many meritorious cases on that bill as there can be upon this bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Take the case of the chief clerk of the Census Office.

Mr. BRYAN. That is not the only one. We were told if we did not increase his salary $500 we were liable to lose him. The committee did not increase the salary. There was another case referred to by the Senator from New Hampshire. There were innumerable cases. This morning the District appropriation bill was reported from the subcommittee, and I think I can say it contained no increases in salary; and so far as the Committee on Appropriations are concerned it seemed to us indefensible to take up one bill and adopt one policy and then have another bill coming out of the same committee and adopt a different policy, and then to have the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry come along with their appropriation bill and suggest a third policy. There ought to be one general policy laid down. In this bill there are only three increases in salaries, and I think the chairman of the committee can very well afford to forego those increases this year and let us treat everybody

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. In justification of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry I want to say that the committee to which the Senator refers took its action and the Senate ratified it. Any other committee having appropriation bills in charge takes its action and the Senate ratifies it or not. We have taken our action, and now it is for the Senate to say what it is going to do.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I merely want to say that I think this amendment should not be agreed to, for the reason that if it is agreed to it will probably justify a great many increases that have not been allowed by the Committee on Appropriations in bills that have been already reported to the Senate. As stated by the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Florida, we have adopted a plan whereby the salaries of the class to which this belongs shall not be increased. We have made the rule general. There is certainly less necessity and justification for increasing the salary of the private secretary of the Secretary of Agriculture than there is for an increase in many other cases in the way of salaries where increases have not been granted, and where the salaries will not be increased by reason of the action of the Committee on Appropriations.

I cite the instance of the chief clerk of the Bureau of the Census. The decennial census is coming on. The work in that bureau is enormously increased and will be during the next fiscal year. The chief clerk is one of the most efficient men in the Government service; nobody disputes that; the evidence is conclusive upon that point, yet in order to adhere to the principle which the Appropriations Committee established, and in order to practice some degree of economy in the case of clerical positions of that class we did not allow him the increase. We did not allow any increases.

So in the few instances in which the Committee on Agriculture have felt induced not to put that rule into effect, I express the hope that the Senate will not grant the increase, because if you do you will have an almost unlimited debate on items in the other bills, which are even more easily justified than the item now under consideration. We cut down in some instances the allowance made by the House of Representatives upon that same theory.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word in explanation of the action of the Committee on Agriculture with reference to this particular increase, and after saying that I am disposed to join with the balance of the Senate in adhering to the rule adopted by the Committee on Appropriations.

The Department of Agriculture has only one Assistant Secretary. It has grown to be one of the largest departments in the Government service. The private secretary to the Secretary of Agriculture, within the knowledge of the members of the committee does provide the secretary to the secretary of the committee does be a secretary to the secretary of the secretary to the secretary of the secretary to the secretary of the secretary to the secretary to the secretary of the secretary to the secretary to the secretary of the secretary to the secretary of the secretary to the secretary to the secretary of the secretary to the seconomic transfer to the secretary to the secretary to the secreta mittee, does practically the work of an Assistant Secretary of the department. It was owing to our personal knowledge of the work we have put on him and the great efficiency with which he performed the work that we felt he was due the increase. I still think so, but I am willing to conform for the present to the policy that exists. I am sure he does not perform merely the work of a private secretary, but to a very large extent the work of an Assistant Secretary. Yet I shall not insist upon the increase.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not the least doubt but that the statement just made by the Senator from Georgia is absolutely correct, and yet admitting that it is correct I believe it would be and yet admitting that it is correct I believe it would be an unjust act on the part of the Senate now to increase even this worthy employee's salary.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question just there?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly. Mr. VARDAMAN. Does the Senator think that the work that this man is doing—or to put it more correctly, will the performance of the functions of his place deserve greater compensation than that proposed to be given in this bill?

Mr. SMOOT. It is not worth any more than the work that is being done by a great many other men in the employment of the

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does not the Senator think in view of what the man's work is worth he ought to be paid the amount carried in the amendment? The Government is able to pay for the services of its employees. I question the morality of a law which would compel or permit a man to work for the Government at a salary less than the work is worth.

Mr. SMOOT. In view of the attitude that has been taken by the committee I would have to say no, because this is not the only department of the Government that has grown. I call the attention of the Senator to nearly every one of the departments of our Government to-day. They appeal to the Committee on Appropriations and base their appeal upon the fact that the work has immensely increased. We know it has done so.

Mr. OVERMAN. In the Navy and War Departments, and especially in the Census Bureau, that is the case. The Senator will remember that the Census Committee were unanimously of the opinion, as the Senator from Arkansas has stated, that that man in the Census Bureau has more work on his shoulders than probably he ought to have.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Then I think the committee was derelict in its duty in not giving him an increase of salary.

Mr. OVERMAN. If we had gone into an increase of salaries, we would have had to have gone into the Navy Department, because the Senator knows how much work is imposed on the Secretary and the private secretary there. We adopted a general policy that we would not increase anybody's salary this year.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I do not believe in legislating that way. In a case so distinctly and admittedly meritorious as the committee evidently thought this was, it seems to me the laborer ought to be given just and fair compensation. I believe the laborer is always worthy of his hire, even though he may be working for the United States Government.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President-

Mr. VARDAMAN. I want to say in this connection, if the Senator will permit me, I did not rise to protest against the injustice that may be done by refusing to give this man an I am not informed as to the merits of the case; I am willing to take the committee's judgment; but I do from the bottom of my heart desire to see the terms and provisions of the bill properly carried out. I believe that this is the most important appropriation bill that Congress will be called upon to pass. I think the Government derives more benefit from the money invested through the Agricultural Department than through any other department of the Government. I do not want it hampered, hindered, or crippled in any way in the administration of its affairs by underpaying the men who are to

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not know a Senator who would do anything to interfere with the splendid work that is being done by the Department of Agriculture. I think myself that the work which is imposed upon this private secretary has greatly increased as has been stated, but there should be consistency in the action of the Senate, and as long as taken the position in the past and the Senate upheld the committee in that position, that there should be no increase of salaries, I believe a different rule should not apply in this particular case any more than in other cases that are just as worthy. I call to mind now that there is hardly a chief clerk of any of the departments who was not recommended by the head of the department for an increase.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I merely wish to explain that the committee has exercised its judgment. Now, if the Senate is going to establish the rule that has been adopted voluntarily by another committee and recommended to the Senate I have no more to say. I just want a vote and see how the Senate stands.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator is correct, and I am perfectly willing to have a vote at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILTON in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for "Salaries, Office of the Secretary of Agriculture," on page 4, line 8, after the words "in all," to strike out "$412,010" and insert "$412,510," so as to read:

Twenty-one laborers or messenger boys, at $480 each; 1 messenger or messenger boy, $360; 1 charwoman, $540; 3 charwomen, at $480 each; 15 charwomen, at $240 each; for extra labor and emergency employments, $12,000; in all, $412,510.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 5, line 7, after the words "Secretary of Agriculture," to strike out "$717,820" and insert "$718,320," So as to make the clause read:
Total for Office of the Secretary of Agriculture, $718,320.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, with reference to an item which has been passed over, I want to ask the acting chairman of the committee if he has ever looked into this item relating to the Office of Farm Management with a view to determining whether we might not save some money in connection with that particular office. That is an office, as I understand, where men are detailed from the Agricultural Department to go out into the country and to teach the farmers how to farm. They visit the farmers, have conversations with them, and are supposed to instruct them how they can raise potatoes, wheat, beans, and other desirable products; when to plant them, I suppose, and when to harvest them. I have looked into the matter somewhat, and I think the work is almost useless and that really very little, if any, good comes from it.

I know it is a provision which has come to us from the other

House; but notwithstanding that, I trust, if the acting chairman, who is a very industrious Senator, has not looked into it this year, that as an influential member of that committee he will just visualize it a little before the next bill comes in, for I am so thoroughly satisfied that there is a waste here that might well be saved that I should like to have it at least examined with care.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I shall be very glad, Mr. President, to investigate this department, as well as other departments.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is a gentleman at the head of this office who is considered to be a scientist, an expert man along this line; but, of course, he himself can do very little, even if he had time to do it. However, he details men to go down into South Carolina, I suppose. They have never reached New Hampshire yet, but they will probably come there after a while and tell the farmers of New Hampshire how to pull rocks, how to build stone walls, how deep they should plow, when they should plant, and when they should harvest. The old farmer will look upon it as a joke, and the men will come back to Washington and draw their salaries. That is the view I take of this office. I should like very much if the Senator from South Carolina would look into the matter somewhat carefully.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, as I have said, I shall be very glad to investigate this department as well as others. I think, however, that the Senator from New Hampshire may have gotten an erroneous idea in regard to the matter by virtue of these men not having visited New Hampshire. I am quite sure that much good has been done by them; but I desire to say that I agree with the Senator that not only in the Agricultural Department but in several other of our departments we have numbers of men who, as Paul said about the Jews, have "a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge." I think, however, it would be well for us to scrutinize the matter very carefully, and I heartily agree with the Senator that that should be done. I think, however, in this particular instance this bill represents as close a scrutiny perhaps as any bill in reference to the Department of Agriculture has ever had within the time which has been given to us for the purpose.

Mr. GALLINGER. The amount of $237,380 is appropriated for this office, and, among other things, for instance, for "one clerk or photographer." I do not know what they are photo-They have four clerks or map tracers, three clerks or map tracers, and one lantern-slide colorist. Just what those men are doing when they visit the farm, whether they are taking photographs of the barns or of the sheds or of the houses or of the trees or of the fields, I do not know.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, perhaps by some mistake these employees have been wrongly classified. From what the Senator from New Hampshire states, I should imagine they belonged to the Forestry Service. [Laughter.]

Mr. GALLINGER. I should think that would be a more appropriate place for them. I have, however, looked into this matter a little, and I have read some debates in another body in regard to it. I have been profoundly impressed with the feeling that this is one place where a saving could be made. I know the bill has been scrutinized; I think it is a very clean bill; and I am greatly in favor of liberal appropriations; but, after all, it does seem to me absurd that clerks should be sent out from the Department of Agriculture to tell the farmers how to farm.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, is it not true that a great deal of the work that was formerly done by the Office of Farm Management is now being done through the extension work of our agricultural colleges?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. In order that the Senator may understand the terminology here used and the functions which this division is called upon to discharge, which are in different fields, I desire to say that the Farm Management Office has done a particular kind of work. The photographs to which the Senator from New Hampshire refers are taken by them of different kinds of buildings, barns, cow sheds, buildings in which chickens and other fowl may be housed. They make photographs showing how plowing may be done. An ocular demonstration is worth a whole book. A man does not care whether a description be in Latin, Greek, French, or German if he can see depicted the thing that he desires to see. These officers are doing a great work. They are getting out bulletins along this line that have particular reference to farm manage-

There are departments of the Government which seem to duplicate work, but upon a close scrutiny the Senator will find that this legislation is framed as clearly and has been scrutinized as closely as it is possible to do and still obtain efficiency.

Mr. SMOOT. For the consideration of the Senator from South Carolina, when he is framing this paragraph next year, I desire to call his attention to the fact that I believe this is the only appropriation bill that carries such salaries as $2,520, $1,020, $930, and so forth. There may be some reasons for it, but all the other appropriation bills either carry a salary of $2,500 or $2,550 or $2,750; but in this bill we notice amounts inserted such as never occur in any other appropriation bill.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think the Senator from Utah will find that the reason for these apparently odd amounts or fractional parts of a hundred dollars is because the amounts are made up largely from per diems which have been given. think the Senator will find that these amounts would commend themselves to him, rather than otherwise, because they show a close calculation as to what would be the real value of the services rendered.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that this is the only appropriation bill which carries any such odd amounts in salaries paid to Government employees.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think the Senator will find the reason to be as I have stated it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I do not like to have the item passed over without protesting against the suggestion that this Farm Management Division of the Department of Agriculture is of little use. I believe it is one of the most useful services which the Department of Agriculture has established. may not have reached all parts of the country, but I think those States where it has been tried will testify that it has been of real, practical use.

It stands to reason that even experienced farmers, to whom the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger] has referred, do not know all of the modern methods of farming. If farming had reached perfection, there would be no need of the Department of Agriculture. It has been my experience that such farmers are very anxious, indeed, to come in contact not with "clerks" from the Agricultural Department but with experienced and trained men in the particular forms of agriculture which these instructors are sent out to demonstrate and teach. So I do not want it understood that this department is of no particular benefit to the farmers. I repeat that I know of nothing that is of more real, practical service and that is more beneficial to the farmers in all communities which these officers have visited than is this particular service.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I think it might be well, in connection with this discussion with reference to farm management, to call attention to the statement of Mr. Spillman in the hearings before the committee of the other House, and to give some examples of what is done under this particular appropriation. I agree with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Townsend] in his statement that this work is accomplishing a great deal of good.

Mr. Spillman says here:

The records we get show that always-

Referring to a source of particular loss in connection with different dangers that come to the farmer and his crops, and so

Mr. Spillman. The records we get show that always; we show just where the defect that caused the loss is, because we get a very complete and detailed statement of the entire business of the farm.

Mr. Doollittle. Doesn't the farmer know himself, before you make a survey, in a case of that kind?

Mr. Spillman. Frequently not; very frequently not. For instance, in one case we made a survey of a farm that was thought to be one of the profitable farms of the county in which it was located, and the farmer lacked $751 of making anything. Now, he attributed his loss to the fact that he had rather poor dairy cows, and that, indeed, was one of the factors, but we found that his loss was due principally to the fact that he had 52.5 acres of apples in a region where apples were not the proper thing. Now, the man was very enthusiastic about apples. After we pointed out to him that it was not the type of farm for apples, he was still very enthusiastic about apples. But since then he has had to give up his farm; and some time the new man will have to go in and try to pull out the apples, because they are in the wrong place.

Mr. Helesen. Speaking of profitable cows and some that are not, isn't it a fact that profitable cows are extremely scarce; I will say the highest class of cows are extremely scarce; but a cow does not need to be the highest class in order to be profitable. For instance, cost of production includes the farmer's labor, and it may be that the farmer has not anything else to put that labor to. For instance, the farmer may do $25 worth of work a year for each of his cows, but it is frequently during the winter when he would not be doing anything else. Mr. Hawley. But all he needs to do is to get a good bull?

Mr. Spillman. Yes; but that takes time.

Mr. Hawley. He can not get good stock any other way.

Mr. Spillman. That is the very best way. We had a case where there was a 500-acre farm that had been run for quite a number of years and had never paid a single cent of return to the owner. There was a tenant on it who was making a fairly good living and barely paying the expenses of the farm. The owners of this farm, a couple of bankers, called in a man from the Office of Farm Management to examine the farm and tell them what was wrong with it. He made three recommendations to the owners. In the first place, our man happened to be an experienced dairy farmer, and he pointed out that they had, say, 4 cows there that were worth keeping, and 16 that were not paying their way. He recommended selling tho make a profit.

Then there was another suggestion by a member of the committee, and Mr. Spillman replied:

It is an extremely difficult matter, I will admit; but these men did that.

Now, the next recommendation was that on this 500-acre farm they do away, as much as possible, with two-horse implements and get four and five horse implements; so that one man, instead of plowing 1½ acres a day would plow 4 or 5 acres a day. They did that.

Then he made the recommendation that in addition to paying the tenant the same salary he was getting, they should give him 10 per cent of the profits of the farm. At first the owners objected to that; they said the profits belonged to them. Our man said to them: "Yes; it is true the profits belonged to them. Our man said to them: "Yes; it is true the profits belong to you, but you are not getting any profits at all now, and under this arrangement you will get $9 for every dollar he gets." The next year that farm paid 6 per cent on the investment, just through the adoption of those three suggestions.

Mr. President I will not take the time of the Senate further.

Mr. President, I will not take the time of the Senate further. What I have read indicates to some extent the character of work that is done under the farm-management item, and I presume that the instances of good it has accomplished could be multiplied very greatly.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, under the subhead "Weather Bureau," on page 9, line 1, after the word "aerology," to strike out "$1,302,870" and insert "$1,301,190," and in line 2, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$664,180" and insert "$662,500," so as to make the clause read:

For necessary expenses outside of the city of Washington incident to collecting and disseminating meteorological, climatological, and marine information, and for investigations in meteorology, climatology, seismology, evaporation, and aerology, $1,301,190, including not to exceed $662,500 for salaries, $114,940 for special observations and reports, and $294,750 for telegraphing and telephoning.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 5, to insert: For the establishment and maintenance of a Weather Bureau station at Greenville, S. C., $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator having in charge this bill, whether this expenditure is really needed at this time?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will state to the Senator that this matter was up last year-

Mr. THOMAS. Did we not make an appropriation last year for this identical purpose?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; not last year.
Mr. THOMAS. Well, the year before last?
Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; I think not. The Senator will recall that the department has recommended that a weather bureau be established on the eastern slope of the Blue Ridge Range for the purpose of studying the daily changes of weather incident to that mountain chain; and they state in a communication which was before the committee that Greenville is at a point where the mountains taper off, and it is the best place to establish a station to study and forecast the local changes incident to that mountain chain. I have that letter

Mr. THOMAS. Let me ask the Senator how many weather bureaus there are in that section of the country?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. This will be the only one that I know of.

Mr. THOMAS. Can the Senator inform me where the nearest one is?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think the nearest one, perhaps, is at Norfolk, Va., at a place where the conditions are totally different from those at Greenville. I will state to the Senator that the information we have here indicates that this is perhaps the most advantageous point for the location of a weather bureau. The main Weather Bureau can predict the general trend of the "lows" and the "highs" throughout the entire country; but the changes incident to that mountain chain east of those mountains affect Florida, Georgia, North Carolina, and South Carolina, and a station established at Greenville would put us in a position where we could be notified of a change which now can not generally be forcasted.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, this bill is in one respect sui The Senate Committee on Agriculture reports the bill generis. back to the Senate with an aggregate which is less than that carried by the bill as it passed the House. That being the case, I will not make any objection to this appropriation, as something might be started which would lead to the usual result—that is, an increase instead of a decrease in appropria-

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether any estimate was sent down by the department for this item?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. JONES. Did the estimate cover the location of the weather bureau at Greenville?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. JONES. Was this estimate contained in the Book of Estimates, or was it a recommendation contained in a formal

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I can state that it was estimated for by the department. The full committee considered and unanimously adopted this item.

Mr. JONES. As I understand, then, it was in the Book of Estimates

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am not advised as to that; do not know; I presume it is not. Mr. JONES. That is what I understand is meant by our rule in connection with the consideration of legislation when we require an estimate to be sent down, and not a mere letter from the department recommending an item of appropriation.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But the Senator will also recall that there is a provision in the rules as to an amend-ment being reported by a standing committee. The committee received the estimate and the information and then recommended the appropriation.

Mr. JONES. I was not really suggesting a point of order, but I wanted to get at whether this was really one of the items which the department considered of sufficient importance to be included in the annual estimates sent to Congress.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not know as to that. Mr. JONES. I will say to the Senator that I have not been able to find out myself, and therefore it occurred to me that

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, we have made three increases, I think, that were not in the original estimates of the Treasury Department, but were recommended to us by the department subsequently. One is $300,000 to fight a rust that has gotten into the white-pine trees, with the view of stopping the rust from crossing the Mississippi, and checking it in the East; one is this; and one is $20,000 to resist a disease that has just developed in pecans. Those three are the only additions we made. They came as recommendations, and were not in the original departmental estimates.

Now, I want to ask the Senator from Georgia Mr JONES whether or not he considers this item of such importance as to warrant him in voting for it notwithstanding his declarations heretofore that he did not propose to vote for any appropriation that was not absolutely necessary?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I really have not given any special investigation to this item myself. I know that there was a report from the Secretary of Agriculture in favor of it.

Mr. JONES. It occurred to me that this was a matter that we could very well put over for another year. I imagine that this has been urged, even before, by the Weather Bureau, and we have put it over from time to time. I merely suggest that.

I think I will simply ask for a vote of the Senate. I will not ask for a roll call or anything of that kind. I simply did not wish to have it go through without objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I want to state that the whole discussion apparently grows out of the fact that the location of this proposed station happens to be Greenville, S. C., in the home State of the acting chairman of the committee. Now, I have not been greedy about any of these things, but I do know that the topographical formation of that country indicates this, as the Secretary says, as the most advantageous place for all the area east of the mountains in that vicinity, and I hope the Senate will retain it in the bill.

Mr. JONES. I do not want the Senator to understand that I am opposing this station because it is to be located at Greenville. I think if they need a station along there so urgently now, very likely Greenville is the proper place to put it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I want to state, as a farmer on the coastal plain, with all my property there, that there is not a place where it would be of more benefit than the coastal plain, extending along the whole line where it is affected by the Blue Ridge Mountains. This goes beyond any question of economy. It goes to the protection of the farmers whose property lies between the Blue Ridge and the coast.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.]

By the sound the noes appear to have it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I ask that the vote be taken again, Mr. President. The amendment reads "$20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary." I do not know that it will be necessary to spend so much, but I ask the Chair to submit the question again. I am quite sure that the Members of the Senate do not think I am asking for a thing that is not needed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, it is very embarrassing to oppose a proposition which is offered by the chairman of the committee which affects his State directly, and I am not opposing it as strongly as I would oppose it if it were presented under any other circumstances. But it seems to me that if we are going to try to follow the idea of economy at all this is one of the items that surely should be eliminated. There are thousands of things which the Members of the Senate can suggest for which possibly the interests of real economy would demand that appropriations should be made. But if we are starting out with the idea of reducing the expenses of the Government this establishment, without which the country has endured so long, it seems to me, could be dispensed with or could be put off until a better season, when we perhaps will have more money. In other words, Mr. President, I can not understand how we could justify the appropriation of this amount of money and refuse to appropriate money for the salaries of men who, we all know, are grossly underpaid.

As I said, I dislike very much to oppose a measure that is proposed by the chairman and located in his own State; but if the Senate is really going to be consistent, if it is really going to look after the interests of the Government and practice real economy, this is one of the items that could be dispensed with without embarrassing anybody.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, as to the merits or the real necessity for this appropriation I can not speak, but I take it that the committee, after carefully considering the question, reached the conclusion that it is needed. If it is needed, the United States is just as well able to establish that station today as it will be next year, or ever was in its history

This country never was quite so prosperous, taking the country generally, as it is to-day, and if this station is needed the Government is able to pay for it.

I am opposed to crippling the work of this great department of the Government on the plea of poverty. If you want to economize, cut out some of your battleships, and do not appropriate the enormous sums for armies and navies that are not needed; but do not cripple the Agricultural Department in the great work it is doing for the American people.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, the committee reported this item after they had heard the arguments, and I think it was the unanimous opinion of the committee that this item should go into the bill. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. Townsend] calls attention to the fact that it is not in the interest of economy to appropriate $20,000 for this Weather Bureau station. If the Weather Bureau does any work at all in the interest of anyone living on land, it must be in the interest of the farmer. After the experience that they have had in this particular country, in South Carolina, with the tremendous storms which swept through the country about a year or two ago, destroying millions of dollars' worth of property, as I understand, it seems to me that it is in the interest of economy. It is a small amount. was shown by the Senator from South Carolina and by others that it was necessary, and that it would be beneficial to the public, to have a station at this particular point, or somewhere near this point. For that reason the committee unanimously reported it out.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I have been very much interested in the suggestions of the Senator from North Dakota, and yet I am somewhat puzzled to know how the establishment of this station at Greenville would have diverted that storm to some other locality.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, if the Senator wishes to be facetious, I shall go into the matter a little more fully. Of course the Senator from Washington, not being a layman, probably can not understand what I was going to say.

If the function of the Weather Bureau is good for anything, it is for the purpose of sending out warnings to the farmers of the country, thus enabling them to prepare for storms, frost, and other changes in weather conditions. It might have been possible, I will say to the Senator from Washington, for the people of that particular vicinity, if they had had warning of this storm, to have taken care of some of the property that was destroyed. I do not wish to have the Senator from Washington misinterpret what I intended to say if I did not explain myself

Mr. JONES. Of course I did not intend to misinterpret the Senator. I am very glad indeed that he has pointed out some of the particulars with reference to this matter. I should have been glad if he had gone more into details with reference to this storm, so that we would know something about what sort of a storm it was, what damage it did, about what time of the year it came, and if he had pointed out how the establishment of this station there could have assisted the farmers in that locality.

I know that these weather stations are of great benefit to the farmers under many circumstances and in many ways. that in my locality, where we raise fruit, it is sometimes of very great importance that the farmers should get notice as to probable changes in the temperature, so that they can take steps to protect their fruit from frost, as they do very frequently, by means of smudges and things like that. I did not know whether there was any condition like that down at Greenville or not. I should have been glad to have had some-Mr. President, I agree with many of the suggestions made by the Senator from Mississippi. I called attention to this item more because of the statements that I have heard from a great many of our friends on the other side with reference to their desire to economize, or, rather, the necessity for keeping down the appropriations. I am not in favor myself of cutting out the necessary appropriations for the development of the industries of our country, and I do not believe it is a real economy

Mr. GRONNA.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator from Washington if he believes it would be in the interest of the farmers of the State which he so ably represents to have a weather bureau to advise the people when to build smudges in order to protect their fruit from frost?

Mr. JONES. I thought I suggested something of that sort just a little while ago.

Mr. GRONNA. We have such appropriations as that in this

Why, yes; that is a good thing.

Mr. GRONNA. This is simply laying the foundation for exactly the same thing that we have in the State of Wash-

Mr. JONES. I was trying to get at things like that, showing the necessity for this Weather Bureau station at Greenville now. If conditions like that exist there, and they need this station, I do not think it is economy to cut it out; and I have not been especially opposing this item. I have been asking for information in reference to it and the necessity for it. I have heard several Senators on the other side say that they did not propose to vote for items that were not absolutely necessary now, because of the state of the Treasury and because of the necessity for raising a large amount of revenue; so I wanted to get at the facts that warranted and showed the great necessity for this item now. As I understand, this item has been urged for several years before this.

Mr. GRONNA. It was estimated for a year ago.

Mr. JONES. But it has not been provided for.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator that it was estimated for by the Secretary a year ago.

Mr. JONES. Yes; but the committee did not provide for it.
Mr. GRONNA. It did not at that time.
Mr. JONES. Then I wanted to find out whether the need for it was more urgent now than it was then.

Mr. GRONNA. It is more urgent, because they have had frequent storms since that time, and the people who are living in that part of the country think that they would be benefited by having this station. This station will be just exactly like other stations that we have in the United States. We not only have them in the continental United States but we have them in Panama; and it seems to me that it is as important to build them along the coast of South Carolina or along the Atlantic coast as to build them at Panama. The Senator, I believe, is an advocate of preparedness. It seems to me that this is one of the things that helps make for preparedness.

Mr. JONES. There are some kinds of preparedness of which am in favor; and I rather expected that the argument on behalf of this item would finally get around to the necessity for preparedness, because that is the basis of most of our arguments for these different items whenever we have not anything else.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator, of course, in the light of preparedness, believes in cyclone cellars in some of the States?

Mr. JONES. I have had no experience with cyclones. do not have them in my part of the country. We are not afraid of them there. The Senator will have to call upon Senators from other States for experience in connection with cyclones.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have seen the cellars, and I have thought that they constituted a very good form of preparedness.

Mr. JONES. Yes; that is true.

Now, Mr. President, I am not going to take further time. I took enough interest in the matter, however, to look at our weather map out here to see how many weather-bureau stations there are down along the Atlantic coast. I imagine that there are stations around there that had notice of that storm that came up and probably published these notices, but possibly the people of Greenville did not see them in time to get to their places of refuge.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, these weather stations are quite important for the benefit of the farmer. Whether they should be close together or far apart depends to a great extent upon the condition and topography of the country. In some places it is necessary to have them closer together than others; and I suppose the appropriation for this particular station is important for other reasons in addition to agriculture,

If you want to economize, the place to commence is in the little items where there might be some benefit to the farmer, or the business man, or the laboring man. Cut off parks for the children; cut off things of this kind, necessary for good agricultural development; but do not cut down the Army, or the fortifications, or the Navy. If this were a battleship, it would be lack of patriotism if you dared to criticize it, and you would either lack in patriotism or in bravery.

But, Mr. President, you can couple this particular item up with the charmed word "preparedness." It is located not very far from the coast, and it would give notice to our mariners and our Navy located off the eastern coast of the approaching storm as it came across the mountains. It might save some of our battleships, some of our torpedo boats, or something of that kind. If the Naval Affairs Committee had brought in this item, there would not have been any objection made to it; but the Agricultural Committee is supposed to base its reasons for these appropriations on a different foundation. Here is one, however, that will work both ways, and as long as you can couple it up with the Army or the Navy it makes the appropriation absolutely safe, even though it does do the farmer some good.

Mr. GALLINGER. It makes it sacred.

Mr. NORRIS. It makes it sacred; yes. It takes it away out of the domain of criticism. It settles it absolutely.

It seems to me, therefore, that for all the reasons that move us to make appropriations of millions we ought to add this little appropriation that will save a battleship as well as help the farmer raise the crops.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 9, after the word expenses," to strike out "$1,450,420" and insert "$1,468,740," so as to make the clause read:

In all, for general expenses, $1,468,740.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 10, after the words "Weather Bureau," to strike out "$1,778,320" and insert "$1,796,640," so as to make the clause read:

Total for Weather Bureau, $1,796,640.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read to line 24, on page 9, as follows

Salaries, Bureau of Animal Industry: One chief of bureau, $5,000; 1 chief clerk, $2,500; 1 editor and compiler, $2,250; 1 executive assistant, $2,500; 2 executive clerks, at $2,000 each; 6 clerks, class 4; 1 clerk, $1,680; 14 clerks, class 3; 1 assistant in live-stock investigations, $1,600; 2 clerks, at $1,500 each; 24 clerks, class 2; 2 clerks, at $1,320 each; 1 clerk, $1,300; 1 clerk, $1,260; 51 clerks, class 1; 1 clerk, $1,100; 1 clerk, $1,800; 59 clerks, at $1,000 each; 2 clerks, at $960 each; 105 clerks, at $900 each; 1 architect, $2,000; 1 illustrator, $1,400; 1 laboratory aid, $1,200; 1 laboratory helper, $1,200.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what the difference is between "one laboratory aid" and "one laboratory helper"? The salary is the same.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. To what line is the Senator referring?

Mr. SMOOT. I am referring to page 9, beginning on line 23-"one laboratory aid, $1,200; one laboratory helper, $1,200." there any difference between them?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I suppose one has some skilled knowledge and the other is just a mere helper. I really am not posted as to that.

Mr SMOOT. Then, if that be the case, they should not be

Mr. SMOOT. Then, if that be the case, they should not be paid the same salary.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I suppose the amount of work would justify it. I really do not know.

Mr. SMOOT. It seems to me it ought to be either "two laboratory aids" or "two laboratory helpers."

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read to line 16, on page 13, the last paragraph read being as follows:

to line 16, on page 13, the last paragraph read being as follows:

For all necessary expenses for the eradication of southern cattle ticks, $631,560, of which sum $50,000 may be used for live stock and dairy demonstration work, in cooperation with the States Relations Service, in areas freed of ticks, and of this amount no part shall be used in the purchase of animals: Provided, however, That no part of this appropriation shall be used in the purchase of materials for or in the construction of dipping vats upon land not owned solely by the United States, except at fairs or expositions where the Department of Agriculture makes exhibits or demonstrations; nor shall any part of this appropriation be used in the purchase of materials or mixtures for use in dipping vats except in experimental or demonstration work carried on by the officials or agents of the Bureau of Animal Industry.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, my own recollection is

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, my own recollection is somewhat vague as to what were the purposes of the committee in connection with this item for the eradication of the Texasfever tick. I know that it had been the intention of the committee to examine more closely into the uses to which the $50,000 which was to be subtracted from the total appropriation was directed. If it is in order at this time to discuss a matter in the bill which does not relate to an amendment made by the Senate committee, my own idea is that the $50,000 which is taken away from the Texas-fever tick appropriation and devoted to the purpose of demonstrating the value of dairy work in the area freed from the Texas-fever tick, involves a duplication of work; for, as I understand, we already have a Dairy Division in the Department of Agriculture.

My inquiry is not hostile, of course, to the committee.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I know that, Mr. President, but I would suggest to the Senator that that is the first time my attention has been specifically called to this matter; and I shall be glad if he will just reserve the right to offer an amendment at that point-he has that right, of course, either in Committee of the Whole or in the Senate-and let us go on with the bill for committee amendments, and then revert to this at the proper time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The bill is being read now for committee amendments?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; it is just being read for committee amendments.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Animal Industry," on page 14, line 3, after the word "expenses," to strike out "$250,300" and insert "$262,580," so as to read:

For all necessary expenses for investigations and experiments in animal husbandry; for experiments in animal feeding and breeding, including cooperation with the State agricultural experiment stations, including repairs and additions to and erection of buildings absolutely necessary to carry on the experiments, including the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, rent outside of the District of Columbia, and all other necessary expenses, $262,580.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think there is an error in the figures. The committee, as I recall it, added $12,280 to the House figures for the sheep experiment station in Idaho, but we took off $8,380 from the same appropriation for experimenta-tion in poultry breeding, including the breeding of ostriches, and so forth. In making the report from the committee the entire $12,280 has been added, when it should have been $12,280 less $8,380 from the proviso on page 14, lines 7 and 8. So those figures, instead of being $262,580, should be reduced $8,380.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator from Georgia is correct

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the committee amendment placing the figures at $262,580 be reduced $8,380, making $254,200

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is right. The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, in line 8, after the word "appropriated," to strike out "$45,380" and insert "$37,000," and in line 9, after the word "breeding," to strike out "including the feeding and breeding of ostriches and insert vestigations and experiments in the study of the ostrich in-dustry" and insert "Provided further, That of the sum thus appropriated $12,280 may be used for the equipment and maintenance of the United States sheep experiment station in Fremont County, Idaho, including repairs and additions to and the erection of necessary buildings to furnish facilities for the investigation of problems pertaining to the sheep and wool industry on the farms and ranges of the Western States," so as to read:

Provided, That of the sum thus appropriated $22,840 may be used for experiments in the breeding and maintenance of horses for military purposes: Provided further, That of the sum thus appropriated $37,000 may be used for experiments in poultry feeding and breeding: Provided further, That of the sum thus appropriated $12,280 may be used for the equipment and maintenance of the United States sheep experiment station in Fremont County, Idaho, including repairs and additions to and the erection of necessary buildings to furnish facilities for the investigation of problems pertaining to the sheep and wool industry on the farms and ranges of the Western States.

The amendment was agreed to

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 20, after the word animals," to strike out "investigation of tuberculosis in cattle," so as to make the clause read:

For all necessary expenses for scientific investigations in diseases of animals, including the maintenance and improvement of the bureau experiment station at Bethesda, Md., and the necessary alterations of buildings thereon, and the necessary expenses for investigations of tuberculin, serums, antitoxins, and analogous products, $134,600: Provided, That of said sum $50,000 may be used for researches concerning the cause, modes of spread, and methods of treatment and prevention of the disease of contagious abortion of animals.

Mr. SMOOT. The words "the investigation of tuberculosis in cattle" has been carried in the Agricultural appropriation bill for many years. Is it stricken out on the theory that all necessary expenses for the scientific investigation of the diseases of animals include the investigation of tuberculosis?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; we had a communication from the department to the effect that it would in no wise diminish at all but simply emphasize the object of the appro-

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I took the action to be. Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There was this further purpose: The department is investigating tuberculosis in other animals besides cattle, and if we put in this provision simply for cattle it would indicate that the department was improperly using the money for the investigation of the investigation. money for the investigation of tuberculosis in other animals.

Mr. SMOOT. I interpreted the action of the committee correctly. I simply want to say that, to my mind, the money could not be expended in any better way than in the investigation of tuberculosis in cattle or other animals. The evil effects from it are so far-reaching that one can hardly realize them.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The language used here is entirely unnecessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 6, after the word expenses," to strike out "$2,586,056" and insert "$2,598,336," so as to make the clause read:

In all, for general expenses, $2,598,336.

Mr. SMOOT. That total should be changed in conformity with the change that was made on page 14, line 4.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Norris in the chair). If there is no objection, the clerks will be authorized to make changes in all totals.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 13, after the words sum of," to strike out "$501,620" and insert "$400,000," so as to make the clause read:

Meat inspection, Bureau of Animal Industry: For additional expenses in carrying out the provisions of the meat-inspection act of June 30, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 674), there is hereby appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, the sum of $400,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will inquire of the acting chairman of the committee what are the conditions that warrant the deduction of the appropriation for meat inspectors from $501,620 to $400,000? I presume there is some good reason for it, but I would like to know what it is.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. We found that the estimate last year and the act of last year carried only $344,500. The estimate this year was $575,360. The House allowed $501,620. The Senate committee in investigating it did not see any evidence of any increase in the force or any new method by which the inspection could be aided other than under the law of last year, and they allowed an increase from $344,500, which was the amount in the act of last year, to the amount of $400,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Secretary of Agriculture give any reason for his estimate, which is above the amount the House placed in the bill?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It calls for more force, more men were to be employed, and he recommended the extension of the work along the line of increasing the force for the purpose of inspection. In order to do that, we would have had to make the extra appropriation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then, the other body acted rather care-lessly in putting in this largely increased appropriation without providing an additional force, it seems to me.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator will understand that even the increase the committee allowed would grant a partial increase of force about as much as we thought would be justified. The House allowed a larger sum and the department estimated for a still larger sum. This is really in the judgment of the committee the proper amount at this time to be appro-

Mr. GALLINGER. It is certainly one of the most important works that the Department of Agriculture has ever taken up, and with what little knowledge I have of this kind I should say we ought to be very liberal in our appropriations for that purpose. But I have not looked into it, and the committee may looked into it, and, of course, I raise no objection, except I But I have not looked into it, and the committee have wanted a little information; that was all.

Mr. JONES. I suggest that this question of meat inspection is an important matter, one in which everyone is very much interested in the whole country, and we ought to appropriate whatever is necessary to properly administer the law which we passed for meat inspection. I wish to ask the acting chairman of the committee whether the Secretary of Agriculture has been consulted, and whether he can do the work that ought to be done with this appropriation of $40,000?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We had before us the statement of the officer in charge of this work, and we read carefully his argument in favor of the increase. It lacked detailed specification calculated to carry conviction that so much was needed. We thought we were giving all that was required under the statement made by him.

Of course, the Secretary furnishes us the figures from the bureau. The head of the bureau came before the House committee and made an argument in favor of this increase. did not think he sustained in his statement a case that justified so large an increase; it was too general and too indefinite, and our conclusion was that the increase we gave would accomplish all that he indicated he could do efficiently.

Mr. JONES. I understand the original estimate made by the department was something like $575,000, so that the House in making an allowance of $501,620 reduced the amount estimated by the department as necessary to do the work by some $70,000. They apparently convinced the House that they should have $501,000, and I take it from what the Senator says the committee did not call the representative of the department before it in reference to the matter.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; we read carefully the argument made by him before the House committee asking for the increase, and we were unable to figure how a greater increase than we allowed could be sustained.

Mr. JONES. Does not the Senator think it would have been advisable for the committee to have called the representative down and asked him for some detailed information?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If we had thought so, we would

Mr. JONES. It occurs to me it would have been a wise thing. I am not going to oppose the proposed reduction, because the matter will be in conference.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It involves a suggestion that perhaps in some places double shifts were required, and it indicated, without sufficient definiteness, the use of the money. My own view of appropriations of this kind when estimated by the department is that unless they can show you really what they want they do not make out their case. They ought to be able to indicate that they are going to use the money in a certain specific way, especially when it is given a lump sum. I am not fond of lump-sum appropriations, anyhow, and when they come and ask for an increase in a lump sum and deal simply in generalities and can not say so much for such work and such work for the fiscal year it is too general to justify our granting it.

Mr. JONES. I agree with very much the Senator suggests, but apparently the bill is framed very largely on the theory and system of lump-sum appropriations. Of course the representatives of the bureau would certainly point out to the committee considerably in detail how it expected to use these various sums of money, and when the committee thought they ought to cut down the appropriation over $100,000 for carrying out such an important act it seems to me it would have been wise to have called in the representative of the department and obtained detailed information in reference to it, and ascertained what the effect would be upon the service by cutting it down in this way.

Of course I would not favor the suggestion if the Senator thinks the department had in mind any increases of pay, but it might be necessary to have double shifts and things like that to carry out effectively the meat-inspection law. That is all I care to say in reference to it. It is a matter that will probably be before the conferees, and it can be corrected if it is shown that this is not the proper amount to appropriate.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator if after the bill was printed the committee received any protests on account of the reduction of the appropriation to $400,000?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not that I have seen or heard. Mr. SMOOT. The Senator has not been approached on the matter?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not at all. Mr. SMOOT. My experience is, Mr. President, that wherever a committee cut an appropriation and the head of the bureau thinks that the decrease is too much every member of the committee is apprised of it immediately after the action is taken. If the notice has been given and no objection from the department filed, I think we are perfectly safe in allowing the reduction to be agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We gave them $6,000 more than they needed last year and there has been no indication that what they had last year did not enable them to do the work efficiently.

Mr. JONES. I agree with the suggestion of the Senator from Utah, but I call attention to the fact that the bill was just reported yesterday and the print of it was out this morning, and they have not had time to get around.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is a member of the Committee on Appropriations and I think he knows that it does not take more than an hour and fifteen minutes after a bill has been printed for the committee to hear from the department when any reduction is made.

Mr. JONES. It does not take very long.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. This reduction was made several

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 14, after the words "Bureau of Animal Industry," to strike out "$3,528,046" and insert "$3,438,706," so as to make the clause read:

Total for Bureau of Animal Industry, $3,438,706.

Mr. SMOOT. The total will have to be changed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerks will correct the total.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before those long items are read under the heading "Bureau of Plant Industry," I wish to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I notice that on pages 27, 28, and 29 the provision for the purchase and distribution of valuable seeds is stricken from the bill, and yet in the paragraph that is about to be read there is a provision for one executive assistant in seed distribution, one superintendent of seed weighing and mailing, one seed inspector, one seed warehouseman, another seed warehouseman, and still another seed warehouseman. Of course those officials will not be required if there is no distribution of seed. I presume there is a large number of persons included in this paragraph who will be dispensed with.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to state to the Senator that striking out the paragraph for seed distribution has reference to the ordinary little flower and garden seed distribution. There is not stricken from the bill the distribution of rare seeds, the selected and pedigreed seeds, that have been developed for field use. That distribution is extended, and really results in tremendous good to farmers throughout the country

Mr. GALLINGER. What are those pedigreed seeds, I will ask the Senator?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is a term we sometimes apply in the animal industry. It means that a cross is made. I will illustrate it with cotton: You have an ordinary seed of cotton which you cross with a finer variety and blend it in a certain environment of climate and humidity, until by selection you get a fixed type of a staple superior perhaps to the parent seed. In that way those seeds are distributed throughout the country in such quantities as to illustrate their superiority in production and in fiber.

There grew up what was known as the Indiana Corn Seed Breeders' Association. The department here are taking up that work. They are developing a particular type of corn so that after planting and selecting they find that it "types" itself, as they call it. They send that seed corn out through the country

I will state to the Senator right in this connection, for I know he is interested in the reduction of the cost of living and in the improvement of the production of our fields, that I have seen on my own farm selected seed furnished by the Government of the United States planted with nothing but a row between, to which were applied the same fertilizer and the same cultivation, and which, of course, had the same season, being in the same locality, which produced from 25 to 30 per cent more to the acre for the same labor than the ordinary seed would produce.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. GALLINGER. Just a word. Mr. VARDAMAN. I was merely going to make an observation.

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.
Mr. VARDAMAN. I know of an instance in my own State where a farmer has pursued the course which has been outlined by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] in the judicious selection of seeds and the breeding of plants, and he has developed a corn which will produce under the same circumstances and conditions, on the same land, more than twice as much as will the ordinary corn. He has developed a corn there which, under proper cultivation, will make from 75 to 100 bushels to the acre. I, therefore, submit that the Government of the United States can not invest a small amount of money more profitably to the tillers of the soil particularly and to the American people generally than in the prosecution of this line of study. Agriculture in the United States is in its infancy, and I am quite sure that a dollar invested in teaching a man how to grow plants, analyze the soil, cultivate the land, raise hogs, cows, horses, and other live stock, and otherwise properly manage his farm will yield the largest returns of any money appropriated by the Congress.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator now will allow me, I merely desire to make one observation, because it may help us further on in the consideration of this bill. There have been so many deceptions and frauds practiced in advertising and selling by irresponsible parties of what purported to be rare seed, seed which is capable of producing fabulous results, that the people at large will not even buy from an advertiser who is a responsible man. So that there is untold benefit to be derived from the activities of the Government in this direction, because the people have confidence in what the Government does, and they realize that when the Government undertakes a work of this kind and issues bulletins regarding it, the statements made Then, small packages of the seed are sent to the are true. farmers who plant the seed in a seed patch, and the next year they are able to plant a crop from that seed. There is not a department that has in it elements of greater actual benefit to all the people of America than has the Agricultural Department, and the proper seed distribution by the department is one of the most important of these elements.

As I have said, the farmers will not buy even from responsible and honest seed breeders unless they know them personally, for the reason I have already indicated, but when the department sends out small packages of different varieties of seed the recipients test the seed in their plots, and they find the type is true, and the production is true. So the production of cereals and fibers in this country is being revolutionized.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have no doubt what the Senator says is according to the book. I am one of those who do not believe in striking out this provision for seed distribution.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Neither do I.
Mr. GALLINGER. As the Senator knows, I have always opposed striking out that provision, but I have been in the minority in this body, and to my gratification the item has always been restored in conference, as I imagine it will be this year, but I am a little confused about it.

The paragraph stricken out is:

Purchase and distribution of valuable seeds: For purchase, propagation, testing, and congressional distribution of valuable seeds.

There are two or three other paragraphs remaining, however, one reading:

For investigations in foreign seed and plant introduction, including the study, collection, purchase, testing, propagation, and distribution of rare and valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants from foreign countries and from our possessions, and for experiments with reference to their introduction and cultivation in this country, $93,040.

Another is-

For the purchase, propagation, testing, and distribution of new and rare seeds; for the investigation and improvement of grasses, alfalfa, clover, and other forage crops, including the investigation of the utilization of cacti and other dry-land plants; and to conduct investigations to determine the most effective methods of eradicating weeds, $139,180: Provided, That of this amount not to exceed $60,000 may be used for the purchase and distribution of such new and rare seeds.

Mr. President, that is rather a confusing statement to have in a bill. The first item is for the investigation of foreign seeds, and an appropriation of $93,040 is made for that purpose. The next item, which includes the eradication of weeds-and I approve of eradicating weeds, although I do not think the Agricultural Department is making great progress in that work-is for $139,180, and then-

For general administrative expenses connected with the above-mentioned lines of investigation, * * * $31,020.

Then we find "For purchase, propagation, testing, and congressional distributing of valuable seeds," there was an appropriation by the House of $243,720. That is stricken out. Now, I call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina to the fact that, beyond a doubt, the officials to whom I have called attention, are all of them high-salaried officials and have something to do at least with the item that is stricken out. They administer the distribution of those seeds with a great corps of clerks who are employed in the department, as I happen to know; and I simply wanted to call the Senator's attention to the fact that if the paragraph stricken out is not restored, the paragraph which the Secretary is about to read, ought to be

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. President, I heartily agree with the Senator; but the method of weeding them out would consume this session, perhaps, if not longer. I want to take occasion to say now that, as a member of the committeeand I can only speak for the committee; and this amendment was adopted by a majority vote—I, for one, want to state here and now, that I believe that what is ridiculed as a fraud and deception in the distribution of seeds, I doubt not appears to be true to our urban population; I doubt not that it is true in the eyes of those who have ample means of securing proper seeds when they want them; but I know of my own knowledge thousands of familes who, through this means, get their only idea of the difference between fresh seeds, that will germinate and be of value in their small gardens, and poor seeds.

Mr. GALLINGER. And those families largely have gardens, when they would not have them were it not for the distribution of these seeds.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is absolutely true.
Mr. GALLINGER. But what I want to emphasize to the Senator is that I think he ought to strike something out of this paragraph; that if the paragraph proposed to be stricken out remains out of the bill there will be nothing for the conferees to do regarding this other paragraph; and something ought to be done as to it. I think that the Senator might well pass it and look into it a little further.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am perfectly willing to do

Mr. GALLINGER. I think we ought to amend it in some way, so as to throw it into conference.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Very well.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then let that paragraph be passed over for the present.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is agreeable; and I will ask that the paragraph be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the paragraph will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 19, line 7, after the word "fruits," to strike out "$71,415" and insert "$76,415: Provided, That $8,000 of said amount shall be available for the investigation of diseases of the pecan," so as to make the clause read:

For the investigation of diseases of orchard and other fruits, $76,415: Provided, That $8,000 of said amount shall be available for the investigation of diseases of the pecan.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the pecan is a very luscious I happen to have a particular fondness for it, and I am glad that we are going to safeguard it and see that it is not destroyed; but I will call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina to the fact that I think we are overdoing it a We have a provision of $8,000 for the investigation of the diseases of the pecan. Then, on page 25, we have an appropriation of $14,000 "for the investigation and improvement of the pecan, and methods of growing, harvesting, packing, and shipping," and on page 55 we have a still further provision:

For investigations of insects affecting deciduous fruits, orchards, vineyards, and nuts, $83,380: Provided, That $9,600 of said sum shall be available for the investigation of insects affecting the pecan and method of control of same.

It may be that we ought to make these three appropriations for the protection and improvement of the industry of raising pecans, but, as I said a moment ago, it seems to me that we are overdoing the thing a little, and I should like to hear from the acting chairman of the committee as to the facts.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, there is some mistake in the figures. The sum we agreed upon was $20,000, to be distributed at the proper places, but, instead of that, the bill contains items aggregating $30,000 in three different places.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.
Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The amount agreed upon was $20,000.
Mr. GALLINGER. There is an appropriation of $8,000; then an appropriation of $14,000, which makes $22,000; and then an appropriation of $9,600, making an appropriation of $31,600

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, there must be some mistake in the print. The amount allowed was $20,000, and it was to be in the specific items providing for investigations. I assure the Senator that there must be a typographical error or some mistake in calculation, because the total amount allowed

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from South Carolina if that can not be put in as one item?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I myself thought that it would be better, but the proponent of this appropriation, who is also a member of the committee and familiar with the work, asked that it be put under different heads.

Now, I suggest to the Senator, as there is a desire to go into executive session, that we let this matter go over, and I ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of having an executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is temporarily laid aside.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CHILTON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 1 hour and 25 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock p. m.), under the order previously made, the Senate took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m.

THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Robinson in the chair). Under the order heretofore fixed the Senate will proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar under Rule VIII. The first business on the calendar will be stated.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States conferring upon women the right of suffrage was announced as first in order upon the calendar

Mr. SMOOT. When we vote upon this joint resolution I desire that there shall be a full attendance of the Senate. Therefore I object to its consideration and ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2406) to amend section 162 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT: At the request of a Senator I ask that the bill

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will go over.

Senate resolution 20, for the appointment of a committee of Senators to examine into questions relating to the acquisition or construction of manufacturing plants to supply the Army and Navy with arms, armament, etc., was announced as the next business on the calendar.

Mr. WARREN. Let the resolution go over. The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

The bill (S. 3551) relating to the procedure in the United States courts was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.
The resolution (H. J. Res. 145) authorizing the erection on the public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a statue of James Buchanan, a former President of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will go

The bill (S. 1107) to amend, revise, and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

The resolution (S. Res. 107) relative to leasing of Osage oil lands was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

The bill (S. 1100) to pay the balance due the loyal Creek Indians on the award made by the Senate on February 16, 1903, as announced as next in order.

Mr. CURTIS. Let that go over. The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

The bill (S. 1096) to provide for carrying into effect of the greement between the United States and the Muskogee (Creek) Nation of Indians ratified by act of Congress approved March 1, 1901, and supplemental agreement of June 30, 1902, and other laws and treaties with said tribe of Indians was announced as next in order.

Mr. CURTIS. Let that go over. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 3927) for the relief of the legal representatives of Francis Busch, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. All the bills we have now reached are from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and I ask that they may go over, because there is a general bill covering them all.

The Secretary. Senate bill 4884, House bill 8592, House bill 9291, House bill 9458, House bill 9459, House bill 9556, House bill 9635, House bill 5986, House bill 10963, and House bill 3447.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do not think the bill (S. 4418) to establish game sanctuaries in national forests, and for other purposes, comes within the objection of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I will object to that bill at the same time. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bills will go over.

SUMMER RESIDENCE HOMESTEADS.

The bill (S. 1065) to provide for summer residence home-steads, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments in section 1, page 1, line 6, after the word "States," to insert "or who has filed his declaration of intention to become such"; in section 3, page 3, line 7, after the word "they," to insert "if at that time citizens of the United States" and in section 3, page 4, line 13, after the word "that," to insert

SUITS IN THE SUPREME COURT.

The bill (S. 5126) giving the consent of the United States for the bringing of certain suits in the Supreme Court of the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next

Mr. SMOOT. I know nothing about the bill, but I know it has been objected to on every occasion when the calendar was called.

Mr. CHILTON. I can not hear what the Senator says

Mr. SMOOT. I say I know nothing about the bill in its details. I simply stated that upon every occasion when the calendar has been up there has been objection to its consideration. I do not feel like objecting to it, nor has anyone asked me to-night to object to it. Therefore I shall not do so at this time.

Mr. CHILTON. I hope the Senator will not object. It is a ery important bill.
Mr. SMOOT. I do not know as to that.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any State which now has or hereafter shall have a cause for action against the United States, which, as between individuals, would be cognizable in a court of justice, is hereby authorized to sue the United States thereon in the Supreme Court of the United States. The United States shall have the right in any such suit to interpose any counterclaim, set-off, equitable or other defense which could be made by the defendant were such suit between individuals.

The bill (S. 5206) for the relief of mail contractors was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. This bill was reported from the Committee on Claims by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I understand that there are a few names in the bill which was reported from the Post Office Committee that are not in this bill. The object of the two bills reported is exactly the same, but the bill reported from the Post Office Committee has all the names of the contractors provided for in this way. I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that it would be very much better, it seems to me, if we are going to pass a bill, to pass the one in which all the names are included.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection to considering the other bill, because, if I recollect correctly, that has already passed

te House. I am not sure about that, however, Mr. SMOOT. I rather think that is the case. I will look it up in a moment.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the bill be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Walsh in the chair). The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4060) to limit the effect of the regulation of interstate commerce between the States in goods, wares, and merchandise wholly or in part manufactured, mined, or produced by convict labor or in any prison or reformatory was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.
Mr. HUGHES. Does the Senator object to that bill?
Mr. SMOOT. I promised a Senator before coming here tonight that I would object to it. I have no objection myself to having the bill taken up and considered, but the Senator told me he had an engagement to-night and unless I would object to it he would have to break his engagement. I told the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], when he spoke to me in relation to it, that I would have to object to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill

The resolution authorizing the Committee on Fisheries to employ a stenographer to report hearings held before the committee was announced as next in order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will go over.

The bill (S. 2215) to provide divisions of mental hygiene and rural sanitation in the United States Public Health Service was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over. The bill (S. 5854) to provide for the erection, furnishing, and equipping of a building in the city of Washington, D. C., for the Department of Justice was announced as next in order.

Let the bill go over. Mr. WARREN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

The bill (H, R. 308) to amend the act to regulate commerce, as amended, and for other purposes, was announced as next in

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill may go over. The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

The bill (S. 681) providing for the election of a delegate to the House of Representatives from the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

Senate resolution 195, amending Rule XXII of the standing rules of the Senate, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRYAN. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

ARTESIAN WELLS.

The bill (S. 5772) to provide for the sinking of artesian wells, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Is there an amendment to that bill to make it general? What I mean to ask is whether it is a local bill applying only to Montana.

Mr. MYERS. It applies only to Montana.

Mr. SMOOT. Was it not the understanding that if we reported the bill it would be a general bill?

Mr. MYERS. Not in this bill. At the last session there was an amendment made to the Agricultural appropriation bill for a general investigation, but it was defeated in the Senate or went out on a point of order, I do not know which.

It was passed in the Senate and went to con-Mr. SMOOT.

ference and was lost.

Mr. MYERS. It dropped out in conference. This is only a local bill. I would not have any objection to its being made general, if the amount is increased.

Mr. SMOOT. The object of the bill is a worthy one, but it ought to be a bill that applies to all the arid and semiarid land

Mr. MYERS. If the amount is not increased, with the limit of $25,000, it would not amount to anything in a general bill.

Mr. SMOOT. That is one quarter of all that is asked for general work in all of the States.

Mr. MYERS. If the amount was increased to $100,000, I would not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Robinson in the chair). Is there any objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I will not object if the bill is amended so as to make it general, but I do object if it is going to apply only to one State

Mr. MYERS. If we consider it so that the bill will be open to amendment, I will vote for such an amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would have to object if amended so as to make an appropriation of $100,000.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator can vote against the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have the right to object at any time in the process of the bill, I understand.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator can help to vote down the amendment

Mr. SMOOT. So that there will be no further time spent upon it to-night, I shall ask that the bill go over, and then I will take up the question with the Senator from Montana. I shall be perfectly willing then that we move to take it up for consideration.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to say if we appropriate a small sum and let the Secretary of the Interior take it and find out whether he can do any good with it, I would not object. But I do not want to appropriate $100,000 and just turn it loose.

Mr. SMOOT. The trouble with that, I will say to the Senator from Georgia, is this: If we limit it to one district within one State it may prove a success or the work may prove a failure, and if it proves a failure we never would make an appropriation for any other State.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would be glad to confer with the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Utah about it and see if we can not agree upon a plan.

Mr. MYERS. I will ask the Senator if it were amended at this time so as to include Montana and Utah would there be

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I shall object.

Mr. STERLING. There are other States than Utah and Montana to which it should be made to apply.

Mr. JONES. The State of Washington needs work of this

I should like to have the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill goes over.

ALLEN M. HILLER.

The bill (H. R. 1024) for the relief of Allen M. Hiller was considered in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Allen M. Hiller, who was a first lieutenant in Company G, One hundred and ninety-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as an officer of said company and regiment on the 28th day of June, 1865, but no back pay or pension be allowed prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 5437) to further amend the act of Congress entitled "An act providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected," approved June 25, 1910, to extend the same to elections for United States Senators and for presidential electors, and to regulate, control, and limit campaign and other contributions and expenditures in connection with such elections, and to define corrupt practices in connection therewith, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over. The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

The bill (H. R. 6097) to ratify the compact and agreement between the States of Oregon and Washington regarding concurrent jurisdiction over the waters of the Columbia River and its tributaries in connection with regulating, protecting, and preserving fish was announced as next in order

Mr. JONES. While I should like very much indeed to have that bill passed, I know the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Lane] is very much opposed to it, and therefore I will ask to have it go

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over. The bill (S. 3444) to provide for a permanent exhibit of the resources of the States of the Union in or near Washington, D. C., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. We just authorized here the other day an exhibit in all the departments of the Government during the inauguration. If we begin the practice of providing for permanent exhibits of the States in the city of Washington, I do not know where we are going to land. We have had here, I suppose, for the last six years at least 20 such bills reported, not as to Washington but as to other parts of the country. I do not think the Government ought to embark in the business.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The Senator understands that .

the various States will provide the exhibits?

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that.

The bill (H. R. 9533) to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. POMERENE. I object.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection whatever to the consideration of the bill if it can be done

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like very much to have the bill considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 3351) to amend the act of August 30, 1890, was announced as next in order.

AID TO ROADS IN ARIZONA.

The bill (S. 865) granting to the State of Arizona public lands for the construction, repair, and maintenance of public roads was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 4, after the name "Arizona," to strike out "two hundred and fifty" and insert "Colorado, Idaho, Montana, New Mexico, Nevada, Utah, Wyoming, North Dakota, California, Oregon, and Washington, each, five hundred," so as to make the clause read:

That there is hereby granted and conveyed to the State of Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, New Mexico, Nevada, Utah, Wyoming, North Dakota, California, Oregon, and Washington, each, 500,000 acres of unreserved, nonmineral, surveyed public lands, the proceeds of the sales of which shall be used solely for the purpose of constructing, repairing, and maintaining public wagon roads."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, on page 2, line 2, after the word "commission," to insert "or State land board, or in case any State shall have no such board or commission, then and in that case by the governor of each State, respectively "; in line 10, after the word "patent," to strike out "to said State of Arizona" and insert "to the respective States"; and in line 13, after the word "State," to strike out "of Arizona," so as to make the section read:

Make the section read:

Sec. 2. That said lands shall be selected under the authority and direction of the State land commission or State land board, or in case any State shall have no such board or commission, then and in that case by the governor of each State, respectively, within the period of one year after the passage of this act, and may be designated and selected under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior from any lands in the State of the character described in section 1 hereof. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue United States patent to the respective States as soon as the selection or designation thereof has been certified to his office by the governor of the State, the designation to be made by legal subdivisions of the public land surveys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, on page 2, line 17, after the word "notice," to strike out "as the governor of the State" and insert "and under such conditions as the legislature of each State," and in line 23, after the word "granted," to insert:

Provided. That said lands not sold by said State under the provisions hereof may, under such regulations as the legislature of each State may prescribe, be leased for periods of not less than five years, and such lands shall not be subject to entry under any of the land laws of the United States, but shall be reserved for the purpose aforesaid.

So as to make the section read:

Sec. 3. That the lands herein granted shall be sold, after issuance of patent, by the proper authority of the State at public auction, after such notice and under such conditions as the legislature of each State may prescribe and in such units not exceeding one section, or 640 acres, as he may prescribe, no one individual, association, or corporation to be permitted to acquire more than 5 per cent of the total area herein granted: Provided, That said lands not sold by said State under the provisions hereof may, under such regulations as the legislature of each State may prescribe, be leased for periods of not less than five years, and such lands shall not be subject to entry under any of the land laws of the United States, but shall be reserved for the purpose aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JAMES. What is the pending bill, which seems to be giving away several hundred thousand acres of land to various States? It seems as though some information ought to be given about it.

Mr. WARREN. It is a bill which was reported by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. Smith]. There were individual bills as to all the arid States, providing for a grant of from one to two million acres of land each. The Interior Department reported on them, recommending that there should be allowed a less number of acres to each and that such grants should be assembled in one bill and made general as to the arid States. So this bill provides for a grant to the arid States alone of a certain number of acres of land each of the unused, non-mineral, nontimber land, public United States lands, the pro-ceeds from the sale of which are to be devoted to the building of public roads. I think it is a good bill and that it ought to pass. I will say that it had the unanimous support of the committee.

Mr. JAMES. Does it leave any land out there at all belonging to the Government?

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that it leaves a few million acres, and we should like to have the Senator from Kentucky take fifty or sixty million acres out of Wyoming.

Mr. JAMES. I should not like to fool with such a small amount of land. [Laughter.] Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. Presid Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Kentucky that there will be 92 per cent of the land in Arizona still belonging to the Federal Government, and that this

Mr. JAMES. I thought it was several hundred thousand acres of land, and that it might not be out of place even to make an inquiry about it; but, as it seems that the committee has reported favorably on the bill and as everybody out there gets part of the land, of course I shall not make any objection.

Mr. FLETCHER. What I can not understand is the existence of so much arid and worthless land in the arid States when we hear so much about their glory, their prosperity, and their wealth.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I do not happen to be a member of the Public Lands Committee, but I desire to inquire of the chairman whether the committee considered the advisability of placing any restrictions whatever upon the sale of these lands?

Mr. MYERS. I do not know. Mr. WALSH. The chairman of the committee will recall that Mr. WALSH. in all grants which were made to the State of Montana, to the State of North Dakota, to the State of South Dakota, to the State of Washington, and, my recollection is, to Idaho, to Utah, and to all of the new States—the four States I first mentioned I can speak positively about—it is provided that the lands must be sold at public auction for not less than $10 per acre. I am very sure that that policy has the unqualified approval of the people of our State.

Mr. WARREN. Was that not provided by a statute of the State?

Mr. WALSH. No; it was provided by the enabling act.
Mr. WARREN. That has not been so in all cases.
Mr. SMOOT. I will say that it is not so as to the State of Utah and as to some of the other States, but it is true as to the four States first mentioned by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. It is so as to the four States which I first mentioned. They can not sell an acre of land granted to the State at less than $10 an acre, and must sell the lands at public auction. Consequently they are obliged to hold the lands and simply to lease them until in the course of time they are sold for that amount.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana will remember that that question was very thoroughly discussed in the Senate at the time the grant was made to the State of Nevada. In that grant the Senate finally decided to limit the minimum price at which land could be sold.

Mr. WALSH. It was limited to $2.50 an acre, my recollection is.

Mr. SMOOT. It was either $1.50 or $2.50 an acre, I have forgotten which. I will say to the Senator, however, that so far as Utah is concerned I doubt very much whether we could select lands now that would sell at public auction for $10 an acre. The department has tried to sell Indian lands that were remaining in the Uncompander Indian Reservation and also in the Unitah Reservation, and those lands were sold at public auction as low as 50 cents an acre, when the department ceased to sell them. It has tried twice to sell those lands and received bids for them, but could not get $1.25 an acre for them, which the department thinks it ought to get, and which I think it ought to get. So I will say to the Senator that in some of the States to fix a limit of $10 an acre would be entirely out of the question. Mr. WALSH.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I will say that I had not in mind at all the idea of fixing a $10 limit applicable to the lands in all of these States. What I did have in mind was to provide that the sale of these lands should be subject to the same restrictions as are provided by the existing laws in respect to lands heretofore granted to the States.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, so far as Wyoming is concerned, our constitution provides for a price of $10 an acre.

Mr. WALSH. It is exactly the same in Montana, because Montana expressly accepted the terms of the enabling act; but of course that applies only to land granted at that time, and does not contemplate future grants. This would therefore be freed from the operation of the constitutional provision as well This would therefore be as from the enabling act itself.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator. Mr. SHIELDS. Perhaps the Senator will remember that when the bill granting to the State of Nevada, I believe, about 7,000,000 acres of land for school purposes was before the Senate early in this Congress the question arose as to the minimum price for which those lands should be sold; and in a colloquy between the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] the fact was brought out that in the State of Utah and in other arid States-Nevada and I think Arizona—the minimum restriction was $1.50 an acre. member that distinctly, and by calling it to the attention of the Senator perhaps he, too, will remember it. I suggest that, from what has been said here about these arid lands in Arizona, anything like a limitation of $10 an acre would prevent the sale of the lands entirely.

Mr. WALSH. I am quite in accord with that idea; and, in order to test this matter, I offer the following amendment, to he section 4 of the bill:

SEC. 4. That any restrictions upon the sale of lands heretofore granted to any of such States, respectively, shall apply to the lands herebry granted.

Mr. SMOOT. There may be restrictions, I will say to the Senator, other than the one as to price; and if that were the case, of course we could not handle these lands.

Mr. WALSH. Exactly. I am telling the Senator that not only is there a restriction as to price, but also as to the manner of sale. In the case of the four States which I have mentioned it is also provided that the land must be sold at public auction.

There may be other restrictions upon grants in other States which, if applied to these lands, would make it impossible for the State to dispose of them. I am not objecting to the principle of the proposed amendment at all; nor would I object to the amendment itself unless there are restrictions upon some of the other grants made to the States of such a character that they could not be applied to these lands.

Mr. WALSH. I will say to the Senator from Utah that I find it difficult to conceive what the restrictions might be, because these lands are to be granted just the same as the other lands were granted; and whatever restrictions there are upon the sale of the other lands the lands granted under this bill would bear the same restrictions.

Mr. SMOOT. No. For instance, there were grants of land to the State of Montana, to the State of Utah, and to every other Western State of so many hundred thousand acres for school They are restricted to that purpose.

Mr. WALSH. But that is not the language of the proposed amendment. The proposed amendment refers merely to restrictions upon the sale, and not upon the use to which the proceeds are to be applied.

Mr. SMOOT. If it only applies to the sale of the land, I have no objection.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. I presume the Senator is aware that there are certain restrictions on the sale of the land covered by this bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It shall be sold under such conditions as the legislature may prescribe.

Mr. HUGHES. The bill provides that the land shall be sold at public auction, after advertisement, "and under such conditions as the legislature of each State may prescribe."

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, it is pretty safe to trust the legislature of a State. The State will endeavor to get all it possibly can out of this land for road construction, and, in my opinion, no better use could be devised for the proceeds of the sale of this land than the construction of public roads. Unless we make a grant of this kind soon, it is likely that all the land of any value will be taken up, and for that reason we will not get any.

Mr. SMOOT. Furthermore, every State will be interested in selling the lands at just as high a price as can possibly be obtained, because of the fact that every dollar of the proceeds will go to the building of roads within the State.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly, and inasmuch as so much of the public land is in reserves in the States, it seems to me that the Government ought to freely grant such a request upon the part of the Western States.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I recognize all this, and I can bear testimony with the other Senators from the West to the fact that the Western States are very carefully conserving the grants of land made to them; but at the same time this policy has been adopted; it is rather a wise policy, and this is an exceedingly large grant. I can not see when lands are granted for school purposes, granted for the purpose of constructing public buildings, granted for the purpose of aiding the State universities, and for every other public purpose of that character, and it is provided in the act making the grants that those lands shall not be sold except at public auction-not at private sale but at public auction—and shall not be sold for less than a certain price per acre, why we should not throw the same safeguards about the great grant that is proposed to be made by this

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the amendment of the Senator will be accepted.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, in reference to the question of my colleague [Mr. Walsh], I will say that I do not know that the feature of the matter referred to by him was considered in the committee. The bill was drawn by a subcommittee, to which were referred a large number of bills providing for donations of public lands to different Western States, and the subcommittee evolved one bill as a substitute for all of the others, and the full committee ratified the action of the subcommittee. I think the feeling of the full committee was that it was safe to make these grants to the States; that the States, through their State officials and legislatures, would carefully guard the treasure which had been committed to them, and would see that the lands were not sold for inadequate prices,

So far as I am concerned, I think that a great deal of what is left of the public lands of Montana would not bring $10 an acre; certainly they would not bring it now or for a number of years to come; and I am rather inclined to believe that the State officials and Legislature of Montana would sufficiently safeguard the The idea was to donate these lands for public roads: and I assume that the States want to sell them as soon as they can in order to get out of them whatever money they may be worth or whatever they will bring, so as to use the money on the public roads now and not wait quite a number of years until the land might bring $10 an acre.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, that is just what I am afraid of. I am afraid that the desire to convert these lands into cash at once will be so impelling, that there will be so many arguments advanced in favor of that policy, that the bars will be let down and they will be sold for a less price. My colleague will remember very well that when the grant was made upon the admission of our State into the Union in 1889 we selected lands all over the State, and very few of them could be sold at $10 an acre or anything like $10 an acre; but with the advance in the price of land they are being sold pretty rapidly at $10 an acre, and they are going even higher than that now. So it is not unlikely that, if we select 500,000 acres of land now we would have to take land that we could not sell for $2 an acre, but the price of land is going up, and in the meantime the lands will be leased.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, it seems to me that when the State gets these lands it is going to sell them for the best price it can get. We have not a restriction of $10 an acre in our State, but $3.50, and yet we have sold land at $54 an acre.

Mr. WALSH. Then, this restriction will fix the minimum price of these lands in Colorado at $3.50.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That may be. I want the bill to pass, and I would rather have it passed even with the amendment than not to pass at all. I believe, however, it is safeguarded sufficiently well as it stands.

Mr. WARREN. Does not the Senator know that lands are sold at public sale, as has been stated, in Colorado as well as in Wyoming?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am perfectly willing to have the amendment adopted, if we can not get the bill through as it is.

Mr. WARREN. I think we can trust the legislatures of the States to take care of the matter, in view of the interest they will have, because every dollar received is to be expended for

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana state the amendment he desires?

Mr. WALSH. I have offered it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will state the amendment.

The Secretary. On page 3, after line 4, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 4. That any restrictions upon the sale of lands heretofore granted to any of said States, respectively, shall apply to the lands hereby granted.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, speaking for myself, I think we need the good roads now, and I believe the bill would be better without the amendment.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to see this bill pass, but if that amendment is put upon it I am satisfied that the State of Washington will never get any advantage from it at all. There are only a few million acres of public land in that State that have not been reserved, either in forest reservations other reserves, and I am satisfied that we could not find a 160-acre tract of public land in the State of Washington that would sell at $10 an acre, and most of it I am satisfied would be considered to be selling at a good price if it brought $1.25 or $1.50 an acre. As has been suggested, our people will take good care of this land. They are taking good care of their other lands. When the original grants were made to the State there was a great deal of public land in the State to select from, but the best of the land has been taken up, and the poor land is all that is now left

Mr. WARREN. That is more or less so in Wyoming, also.

Mr. JONES. If $10 an acre was the price fixed for the sale of the land in our State we could not get anything like that. The amendment of the Senator from Montana would simply make this bill practically nugatory so far as the State of Washington is concerned. I hope the bill will pass, but I hope that amendment will be defeated.

Mr. WALSH. Let me make an inquiry of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. You have these restrictions in the grants heretofore made to the State of Washington?

Mr. JONES. Oh, yes. Mr. WALSH. Have ye Have you not filled up your grant?

Mr. JONES. No; we have not. The State is at work now taking out such land as is left, worth $2 or $3 an acre, and probably not that; but about 20,000,000 acres in our State were put in forest reserves before the State could make its selection, and it has now very little to select from. We are trying to get the Government to assist us in exchanging our lands within the limits of forest reserves and get them in blocks, but the State so far has not been able to fill out the grant that it has.

Mr. WALSH. Can the Senator give us an idea about what proportion of the grant is filled?

Mr. JONES. Well, there is a large portion of it filled. I do not know how many acres are not; but I know that only a few days ago I received a telegram from the public-land commissioner of the State of Washington, asking me to see the Secretary of the Interior and endeavor to have him reserve some of the public lands from the operation of the 640-acre homestead law until he could get them surveyed and ready to file on-some 30.000 or 40,000 acres.

Mr. WALSH. I dare say there are many thousand acres of the land selected by the State of Washington worth very much more than $10 an acre.

Mr. JONES. That is true; but they were selected when we had an abundance of public lands in the State. Much of our land was selected away back in 1889, when we had 150,000 people. We now have a million and a half people.

Mr. WALSH. Let me inquire of the Senator from Washington also whether they did not select lands of very great extent, that were at the time worth much less than $10, but are now worth much more than that amount?

Mr. JONES. No: I do not think so, Mr. President. I think most of the lands selected 10, 12, or 15 years ago would have been considered worth $10 an acre, and much of them even more than that.

Mr. WALSH. I think this is a very reasonable provision. Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Montana will withdraw his amendment, and, with me, have confidence in the legislatures of these States that they will take good care of these lands. The selections will be different now in all these States than when the school sections in place were taken or when other lands were selected since. The best lands have been taken and the poor lands left. I hope they will all bring $10 an acre, but it may be that in some cases they will bring much less. The bill certainly was well considered, and for a long time, by a number of Senators interested in this subject. I do not believe that the amendment is necessary, and I do not believe that it should be adopted.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, this provision does not affect our State at all, because we have no such restrictions in our State; nor does it affect, as I recollect, the State of Arizona. This bill was originally introduced by the Senator from Arizona, and these other States have been added to it. The amendment of the Senator from Montana involves the whole principle underlying this question, and that is whether the particular locality can not or will not protect itself.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question right there? He knows better than I do about this

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Is it or is it not a fact—I have heard it was-that you could hardly select the number of acres necessary in Arizona out of land that could be relied upon to sell for anything much-25 or 50 cents an acre, a great deal of it? Mr. PITTMAN. I have ridden over Arizona, but I am not so familiar with it as I am with my own State, although I think the conditions there are quite similar. I will state that we have had the homestead law in the State of Nevada for 50 years, and during that time there have only been 1,000 homesteaders who have proved up; and out of the 70,000,000 acres in that State less than a million acres have gone into private ownership through that beneficent law, while the State of Oklahoma has been settled up entirely, and other States where they have rainfall have been settled up.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is not Arizona pretty much in your condi-

Mr. PITTMAN. Arizona is practically in the same condition. For instance, take the desert-land law. That does not require residence. It requires a certain amount of development each year; and yet in the forty-odd years that the National Government have pretended to settle up the lands of our State they have only patented 34,000 acres out of 70,000,000.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; I yield. Mr. JAMES. This bill provides that this land shall be sold Mr. JAMES. under such conditions as the legislature of the State may impose. What conditions does the Senator imagine that his own State, or the other States there, would impose in regard to price-any condition, or just put it up to the highest bidder?

Mr. PITTMAN. I imagine that our State would do this: That it would classify the lands, and, if there were possibly 5,000 acres or 10,000 or 20,000 acres that were more valuable than the rest, that they would place a minimum value on that area of $3 or $4 or $5 an acre, and say that they would not dispose of it for less, but for as much more as they could get under the terms of this bill at public auction.

The public-auction clause in this bill is the best protection you have, because you have people who know the value of the land standing there to bid against each other for it. That determines the value of the land. The legislatures would have their State officers fix a minimum price on different characters of land. They would classify it. We can not classify lands standing here; and I want to say to you now that in the State of Nevada and the State of Arizona, to place a ten-dollar limit upon land would be absolutely prohibitive. You might as well not pass this bill, and why should we stand here year after year and pass absurd bills that are not developing that western territory?

To-day 90 per cent—yes, 93 per cent—of all the land in our State is not subject to taxation. Ninety-three per cent of the land of our State is owned by the Federal Government, and the Federal Government constantly declines to enact any legislation that will enable us to support the State. Why? Because the representatives of the National Government here do not understand the conditions existing in my State, and I regret to say that every time a bill is offered here that allows any discretion to the local people in a State we have a distinguished Senator like the Senator from Montana afraid that those people out in that State can not protect themselves with regard to the

Mi SHIELDS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do. Mr. SHIELDS. I should like to ask the Senator a question. I find that in section 3 of this bill it provides-

That the lands herein granted shall be sold, after issuance of patent, by the proper authority of the State at public auction, after such notice and under such conditions as the legislature of each State may prescribe and in such units not exceeding one section, or 640 acres, as he may prescribe, no one individual, association, or corporation to be permitted to acquire more than 5 per cent of the total area herein granted.

It appears that thus it is left entirely to the general assemblies of these several States to protect the interests of the people of those States. Now, I am not familiar with the people of these particular Western States except the Representatives of those States that I have met here, generally. My acquaintance with the inhabitants of those States consists largely of my acquaintance with their Representatives. It occurs to me that the people of these States are amply able to protect their interests, and are honest enough to do it, and will do it.

I want to ask the Senator whether or not he considers the general assemblies of those States honest and capable and able to protect their own internal affairs and to administer their own local matters; and do they do it?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President—
Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BRYAN. Was not the unanimous-consent agreement entered into to proceed under Rule VIII?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was

Mr. BRYAN. As I understand Rule VIII, it provides that no Senator can speak more than once nor longer than five minutes. We have spent nearly an hour on this particular bill, and Senators have spoken not only more than five minutes but more than once.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the Senator will not object in this in-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Florida makes that point of order, the Chair will be compelled to sustain it.

Mr. BRYAN. I shall not make the point of order, but if we are here to consider the calendar under Rule VIII we ought to do it.

Mr. PITTMAN. I concede that the point of order is well ken. I have not spoken before since I have been here this taken. session, and I apologize to the Senator from Florida for having annoyed him thus far. If he will pardon me while I simply answer the Senator for a second, without raising the point of order. I will desist

I think the only obstruction so far that the West has had has been from other portions of the country. I think in the matters as to which they have been permitted to pass local legislation they have been quite successful, and I do not think any one questions either their ability or their desire to protect themselves and the people within their limits.

On account of the point of order I will not discuss this matter any further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I do not know why the State of South Dakota has not been included in the list of States that shall have these grants. It seems to me that my State is in the same class with Montana and North Dakota and the other States named; and I therefore move as an amendment, after the words "North Dakota," in line 5, to insert the words "South Dakota,"

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the only reason why South Dakota was not included was because the Senators from South Dakota had not introduced a bill on the same subject. I have no objection to South Dakota being included.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Secretary. On page 1, line 5, after the words "North Dakota" and the comma, it is proposed to insert "South Dakota."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, there is a correction that ought to be made in the bill, it seems to me, if it is going to pass-that is, if this is a correct copy I have of the bill. It says, "and under such conditions as the legislature of each State may prescribe, and in such units, not exceeding one section, or 640 acres, as he may prescribe." It refers to the legislature as "he." me as though that ought to be corrected.

Mr. PITTMAN. It should read "as may be prescribed." Mr. MYERS. I will ask that it be amended to read "it," changing the word "he" to "it."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Kentucky if he was inspired to make that suggestion by the fact that these are equal-suffrage States?

Mr. JAMES. No; I was not inspired by that fact. thought I would endeavor to correct the phraseology of the bill, if it was going to pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting to certain States public lands for the construction, repair, and maintenance of public roads."

BARKHAUSEN COAL & DOCK CO.

The bill (H. R. 11293) for the relief of Barkhausen Coal & Dock Co., of Green Bay, Wis., was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRYAN. That bill is adversely reported, and I think it should be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

GOTTLOB SCHLECT, MAURICE D. HIGGINS, ET AL.

The bill (H. R. 12742) for the relief of Gottlob Schlect and Maurice D. Higgins, and for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Valentine Brasch, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the Barkhausen Coal & Dock Co., of Green Bay, Wis., out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $163.17, being the sum allowed to said company by the Secretary of the Interior to cover cost of coal and hauling charges thereon, for the Pine Ridge Indian School and Agency, S. Dak.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NEW ORLEANS, BATON ROUGE & VICKSBURG RAILBOAD CO.

The bill (H. R. 540) for the relief of settlers within the limits of the grant to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge & Vicksburg Railroad Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. POMERENE. Let that bill go over.
Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not insist on objecting to this bill. It is a matter that affects a great many people of very small means in my State. It has passed the House of Representatives twice and I have endeavored to have it considered by the Senate a number of times, but without success. I hope we can have a vote on it to-night.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, there is a minority report in this case, and there are many people in my State who are very much interested in this bill. It will not pass without considerable discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed over.

BERNARD A. SCHAAF.

The bill (H. R. 8267) to place Bernard A. Schaaf on the retired list of the Army was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the President of the United States to place Bernard A. Schaaf, formerly first sergeant of Company K. Eighth Regiment United States Infantry, and later a lieutenant of Philippine Scouts, on the retired list of the Army with the rank, pay, and allowance of a master signal electrician, and provides that in computing the soldier's pay credit shall be given for all his continuous service in the Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS OF INTERPLEADER BY INSURANCE COMPANIES, ETC.

The bill (H. R. 12541) authorizing insurance companies and fraternal beneficiary societies to file bills of interpleader was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, on page 1, line 8, before the word "claimants," to insert "bona fide"; on page 2, line 6, after the word "society," to strike out "offers to deposit" and insert "deposits"; on the same page, line 7, before the word "abide," to strike out "to"; on page 3, line 2, before the word "the," to strike out "either"; and on the same line, after the word beneficiaries," to strike out "or the assignee or assignees, or any of them," so as to make the bill read:

"beneficiaries," to strike out "or the assignee or assignees, or any of them," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the district courts of the United States shall have original cognizance to entertain suits in equity begun by bills of interpleader where the same are filed by any insurance company or fraternal beneficiary society, duly verified, and where it is made to appear by such bill that one or more persons, being bona fide claimants against such company or society, reside within the jurisdiction of said court; that such company or society has made or issued some policy of insurance or certificate of membership providing for the payment of a sum of money of at least $500 as insurance or benefits to a beneficiary or beneficiarles or to the heirs, next of kin, or legal representative of the person insurance or member; that two or more adverse claimants, citizens of different States, are claiming or-may claim to be entitled to such insurance or benefits and that such company or society deposits the amount of such insurance or benefits with the clerk of said court and ablde the judgment of said court. In all such cases the court shall have the power to issue its process for said claimants, returnable at such time as the said court or a judge thereof shall determine, which shall be addressed to and served by the United States marshals for the respective districts wherein said claimants reside or may be found; to hear said bill of interpleader and decide thereon according to the practice in equity; to discharge said complainant from further liability upon the payment of said insurance or benefit as directed by the court, less complainant's actual court costs; and shall have the power to make such orders and decrees as may be suitable and proper and to issue the necessary writs usual and customary in such cases for the purpose of carrying out such orders and decrees: Provided, That in all cases where a beneficiary or beneficiaries are named in the policy of insurance or certificate of membershi

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I am interested in the passage of this bill, but I should like to have it passed without amendment. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Shields] reported the bill, and with the report are certain amendments. If he is disposed to insist upon the amendments, rather than jeopardize the passage of the bill I will agree to them; but the situation is like this:

I regard the amendments as immaterial; but the bill has already passed the House, and if it is amended here there is very grave danger that it will not again pass the House. I should just like to have the Senate pass on the bill by a viva voce vote and take my chances on the decision of the Chair, if the Senator from Tennessee is satisfied with that disposition.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that there have been objections to this measure. I have not been asked to object to it to-night, and I am not going to; but if it is to be changed from the way it was reported by the committee, not knowing what the changes are, I should have to object to its consideration.

Mr. HUGHES. I will say to the Senator that nobody is interested in these amendments except the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Shields], and he is here. I regard the amendments as more or less immaterial; but, as I have said, I am afraid the bill will not be acted upon by the House.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, there is plenty of time for that.
Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. HUGHES. Certainly. Mr. SHIELDS. I will say to the Senator from Utah that some comparatively immaterial amendments to this bill were offered by me in committee. I think all of them are good amendments, but there is only one that I would insist upon if it would in any wise jeopardize the passage of the bill, and it is the last one. That, I think, is a material amendment and ought to be made, and I must insist upon it. But the others I do not think

Mr. HUGHES. Then I will say to the Senator that, so far as I am concerned, I will agree to have the amendments adopted.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendments reported by the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

AUSTIN G. TAINTER.

The bill (H. R. 2638) for the relief of Austin G. Tainter was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, that bill is adversely reported. Mr. President, it is true that the committee reported that bill adversely. I have sent for the House report, but failed to get it, and I have only the Senate report.

This man, who was a mail employee, was injured, and the railroad company-as railroad companies are apt to be-were in a hurry to get a settlement, and they got a settlement out of It turns out-I think the House report shows that factthat the man was permanently injured, injured much worse than he thought he was at the time of the settlement. He had a 60day leave of absence, but it became permanent because of the permanent injury, and the committee were so much impressed with the merit of the claim that while they did report adversely they did not recommend the indefinite postponement of the bill.

Now, I know the man. I know something of the circumalthough he now lives in Los Angeles, and I wish the bill might pass. I regret that I have not the House report to show the reason why the House passed the bill favorably.

Mr. JAMES. How much does the bill provide that he shall

Mr. CLAPP. One thousand six hundred and fifty dollars. will say to the Senator that the bill passed the House in that form.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, there was no obligation on the Government to pay for that injury. The man was injured pre-Government to pay for that injury. The Govsumably by the negligence of the railroad company. The Govsumably by the negligence of the railroad company. He was injured through no fault of the Government. The only fault was on the part of the railroad company, and he settled with the railroad company. The accident happened 14 years ago. I see no possible claim against the Government.

Mr. CLAPP. He was injured in the line of his duty. I do not know what means were employed to bring about the settlement, but everyone here who has had anything to do with matters of that kind knows the promptness with which railroad companies settle with a man under those circumstances. If they had not got him to settle with them, there would have been no suggestion here but that the Government ought to have paid him something.

Mr. BRYAN. If he went and surrendered a right that he ought not to have surrendered to the railroad company, is that any reason why he should come and ask the Government to make it good? What claim has he?

Mr. CLAPP. The very report of the Senate committee is practically an admission that the settlement is urged as a reason why they should not pay him anything that he settled with the railroad company; and I say again had he not inadvertently settled with the company at a time when he knew little of his injury there would be no question here to-day but that Congress would allow him a reasonable compensation on account of the permanent injuries he received in the line of duty.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada will state it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Are we proceeding under Rule VIII? The PRESIDING OFFICER. We are.

Mr. BRYAN. I asked the Senator from Minnesota a question, and I believe I am entitled to five minutes

Mr. PITTMAN. Does not Rule VIII limit a Senator to one speech as to each subject?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does. Mr. BRYAN. Here is a man who was injured in a railway wreck. He had a right of action against the railroad company for every dollar of injury he suffered. He settled that right of action for $250. Surely that is no fault of the Government. If he was imposed upon in the settlement, he could have brought a suit notwithstanding and pleaded that imposition at the trial. I can not see on what theory we are going to pay $1,650 14 years after the accident, when just shortly after it he settled it himself for $250.

Mr. CLAPP. He settled with the railroad company. could not have set aside that settlement unless he had been able to show that he was ignorant and did not know what he was doing when he settled. It is merely a question of inadequacy of compensation.

Mr. BRYAN. I think the law of any State will protect a man who is imposed upon in a settlement.

Mr. CLAPP. You can not say that he was imposed upon because he was not an ignorant man. I realize the adverse report of the committee. I have done my duty to the claimant and that is all I have to say on the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida move the indefinite postponement of the bill?

Mr. BRYAN. I do. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the indefinite postponement of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

FISH HATCHERIES.

The bill (S. 4811) to establish a fish-cultural station at some point in the State of Louisiana was announced as next in order. Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Fisheries a question. How does it happen that this item was not included in what is generally known as the omnibus fish-hatchery bill. That provides a State hatchery for

Mr. HUGHES. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill

The bill (S. 4970) to establish a fish hatchery in the State of Delaware was announced as next in order.

Mr. HUGHES. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

PORT OF ASTORIA, OREG.

The bill (S. 5395) to repeal sections 2588, 2589, and 2590 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was announced as next

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think there ought to be some explanation of those sections.

Mr. BRYAN. I find the explanation in the report of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. JONES. The report is very short.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have not had time to read it.

Mr. BRYAN (reading)-

The sections of the Revised Statutes which the bill seeks to repeal require the masters of vessels entering the Columbia River bound for Portland, Oreg., to exhibit their papers to the collector of customs at the port of Astoria and take on board an inspector, and also when bound to sea to leave a copy of their manifests at Astoria. This procedure entails delay and expense, and does not tend in any way to increase the protection to the revenue.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that it would be advisable to repeal the sections of the Revised Statutes mentioned in the bill, and recommend that the said bill be enacted into law.

Very truly, yours,

B. R. Newton,

Acting Secretary.

B. R. NEWTON, Acting Secretary.

Astoria, as Senators may know, is near the mouth of the Columbia River. Portland is about 100 miles up the river. I think the bill ought to pass. I am not especially interested in it, but the Senators from Oregon are I know, and I have no objection to it.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 2588, 2589, and 2590 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same hereby are, repealed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALBERT GREENLAW.

The bill (H. R. 2180) for the relief of Albert Greenlaw was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Postmaster General to credit the accounts of Albert Greenlaw, post-master at Eastport, Me., in the sum of $3,378.02, due the United States on account of post-office funds embezzled by Ernest A. Farris, assistant at the Eastport (Me.) post office during several years, ending December, 1912. But nothing therein contained shall be taken as releasing any other person or persons from liability to the United States on account of said embezzlements or in any manner affecting such liabilities.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAIL CONTRACTORS.

The bill (H. R. 11150) for the relief of mail contractors was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I stated in the beginning in asking that the Senate bill upon this same subject matter be passed over, that this bill is a House bill reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and that it contains all the names of the claimants.

The bill carries an appropriation of $196,000. There have been and are now a number of Senators who are absent to-night who are opposed to it. None of them have asked me to object to-night. Therefore, I shall not object to the considera-tion of the bill. I will say to Senators that the bill has been hefore Congress many, many years.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It is asserted that these claims have been due for 55 years.

Mr. SMOOT. At least that long, and there has always been objection to their payment in the past. I suppose if they are to be paid, this is the proper way to pay them. I understand from the department that this bill will include all those who have claims against the Government, and therefore I shall not object to its consideration.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield to me for a mo-

Mr. VARDAMAN. That is my understanding. Mr. ROBINSON. Careful provision is made for the auditing of the claims. They have, in fact, already been audited and should have been paid a great many years ago.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I hope the bill my pass.

Mr. JAMES. Are any of the people living to whom these debts are due?

Mr. ROBINSON. A great many of them. Mr. VARDAMAN. Yes; some of them. They are very old. One of these bills providing for the settlement of an account was passed by the Senate last summer. It was for the settlement of the claim an old gentleman had against the Government and his heir, his son, corresponded with me about it. I think he was 80 years old. There are quite a number of old people interested in the claims, and many of them have written to me that if they did not get this money within the next year or two it would do them no good. The bill, however, provides for payment to the heirs and how it shall be distributed. There is no trouble in that respect.

Mr. HUGHES. I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It is simply doing tardy justice.
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Objection is made.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does some one object? Mr. ROBINSON. I hope the Senator from New Jersey will withdraw his objection. The bill can be passed very quickly.

Mr. HUGHES. I will say-

Mr. ROBINSON. Let me make a brief statement. All these claims are meritorious and they have been pending before Congress for a long time. The committee has gone to the trouble to obtain the necessary information in order to report them all in an omnibus measure. The Committee on Claims has adopted the policy of not reporting separate bills upon this subject. the Senator from New Jersey now to adhere to his objection will be to occasion a further delay and prevent the passage of this meritorious measure, which everybody who investigates it will see ought to be passed and the Government wants to have it passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey withdraw his objection?

bill appropriating various sums of money to various people. There is no report accompanying it.

Mr. ROBINSON. There is a very voluminous report accompanying it.

Mr. HUGHES. It does not appear here on my file. Mr. ROBINSON. The Committee on Claims reported almost exactly an identical bill with the amount carried in the bill reported by the Post Office Committee. It proposed to pay a few hundred dollars less than the amount carried in this bill, but the whole subject has been gone through with by both the Post Office Committee and the Committee on Claims. When the bill reported by the Committee on Claims was reached on the calendar, as I recall it, the Senator from Utah suggested that the bill be passed over for certain reasons, and especially because this bill had already passed the House of Representa-

Mr. HUGHES. I will say to the Senator that I have here a letter from the Postmaster General which says that his department has no objection to the bill, and it also makes some reference to the facts in another communication.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have in my hands here report No. 701, submitted by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Vardaman], which contains full information regarding the whole subject. It also contains a part of the testimony taken at the hearing before the House committee on the bill.

Mr. HUGHES. I know there are claims enough lying around about the corridors of the Capitol to bankrupt the Government at present and to bankrupt the Government the most prosperous day it ever saw, claims that can be made to appear very good by ex parte statements by those who are interested in them. I had not the information I now have when I made my objection. In view of the light thrown upon these claims by the statement of the Postmaster General, as far as I am concerned, I withdraw the objection.

Mr. SMOOT. There is one thing I should like to say to the Senator from Mississippi if we are going to pass the bill. I am not going to object to its passage, but I call attention to the proviso on page 4 of the bill. I want the Senator to follow the reading of the proviso carefully:

Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall require in the case of each claim before making payment, that any agent, attorney, firm of attorneys, or any person engaged heretofore or hereafter in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting said claim, shall file with him a waiver of all said fees in excess of 20 per cent, and upon receipt of such waiver the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay, out of the amount found due the claimant, to said agent, attorney, firm of attorneys, or other person holding a power of attorney to represent the claimant, a fee not in excess of 20 per cent of the amount allowed and shall pay the residue to the claimant direct by warrant on the Treasury.

In reading it, I doubt very much whether that would prevent the attorney or the agent or the firm of attorneys from carrying out perhaps an agreement which was made when the claim was first brought out by the attorney or the firm of attorneys and pay that attorney or firm of attorneys perhaps 50 per cent or 60 per cent, as the original agreement might be. It is true it provides that he shall file a waiver and they shall pay him only 20 per cent; but in all pension cases it is specifically stated that they shall not be allowed more than 10 per cent or 20 per cent, as the case may be. I have not any doubt in the world but that the attorneys who will collect these claims have a written contract with all the claimants to be paid 50 per cent of the amount collected. Does not the Senator believe we ought to put that in stronger terms, so as to protect these claimants and see that they get the money instead of the claim agents?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I agree with the Senator from Utah that these people ought to be protected. That was the purpose of the provision which he has read. If they see fit, however, to give more to the attorney after the money is collected, I do not see how Congress could control that.

Mr. SMOOT. We could control it in this way: We could make it unlawful for them to collect more than 10 per cent.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I should be very glad to accept that amendment if the Senator will propose it. I am very desirous of protecting these people, but it seems to me the Government is not very much more anxious to settle with them and give them what is due them than the lawyers. If the Senator will propose the amendment, I will accept it.

Mr. SMOOT. I propose that it shall be unlawful for any agent, attorney, firm of attorneys, or any person named heretofore or hereafter in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting said claims to receive more than 20 per cent of the amount of the claim allowed under the provision of this bill.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, if that is the amendment the Senator is going to offer to the bill, I think it already makes such Mr. HUGHES. I have not withdrawn it. I should like to get a chance to make a statement myself as soon as Senators are through. I did not want to interrupt them. This is an omnibus of all his claims except 20 per cent. He settles with the Treasury, and the Treasury pays him 20 per cent. Any person could plead that in estoppel of any further claim, it seems to me.

Mr. SMOOT. In estoppel of any further collection from the party at the time, but we always include a provision in pension bills making it unlawful to do it then or any time thereafter, even though they collected the money.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I will accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. JAMES. I am not going to object, but I want to read this clause in the bill:

Shall file with him a waiver of all said fees in excess of 20 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. That does not make it unlawful.

Mr. JAMES. I know it does not make it unlawful; but if he files a waiver then any person against whom he could make any claim in any court that I know of would merely set up in answer that he had waived it, and he had been settled with, and he would be estopped from collecting anything in addition. But in order to put it beyond all doubt, so far as I am concerned,

I have no objection to offer to the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I feel that I ought to make this suggestion. It is doubtful to me whether such a provision as that suggested by the Senator from Utah would be valid in case an attorney has a contract for the collection of the claim. I doubt whether you can make it criminal for him to carry out his contract, but you can, in the way it is provided in the bill, prevent him from receiving more than the 20 per cent which the bill authorizes him to receive upon proof of his right to receive anything. I believe the provision in the bill is about the best one that can be devised to give fair protection to the elaimant.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I heard the language of the bill read—read very hurriedly, of course—but is the Senator of the opinion that the attorney could not hold up this claim nearly forever by simply not making a waiver? These claims are not to be paid, as I heard the language, until after the attorney files his waiver. Suppose he does not do it?

Mr. ROBINSON. The claim would not be paid without further action by Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If that is the case that language ought to be reformed so as to state that before 80 per cent of any of these claims have been paid by the Treasury the attorney shall file a waiver.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think the amendment aggested by the Senator from Utah will meet every objection. They can fight it out as to the constitutionality.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We ought not to allow the claimant to be punished by the attorney failing to file a waiver.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think the amendment suggested by the of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think there is force in the suggestion which the Senator from Mississippi makes, but I doubt whether you can make it criminal for a man to carry out a contract which was not criminal when he made the contract.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that I am only proposing the usual language that is put in all bills of pension claims. Perhaps it is not the exact wording, but I know the substance is the same as I have suggested.

Mr. JAMES. There was a limitation placed in the war-claims bill that we passed.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I accept the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires the attention of Senators for a moment. The Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] has suggested an amendment, but he has not sent it to the Secretary's desk. The Secretary, therefore, is not able to ascertain where the Senator desires the amendment inserted.

Mr. SMOOT. It is to strike out all after the words "Provided further," on page 4, line 4, down to and including the word "Treasury," on line 16, and to insert what I have suggested in lieu thereof. If the Secretary desires me to read it, I will read it and send it to the desk later. What I desire to insert is:

That it shall be unlawful for any agent, attorney, firm of attorneys, or any person engaged heretofore or hereafter in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting said claim to charge more than 20 per cent—

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest that the Senator make it read "to charge or receive."

Mr. SMOOT (reading)-

To charge or receive more than 20 per cent of the claim.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Twenty per cent of the amount herein appropriated for the claim.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to, as follows:
Strike out, after the words "Provided further," on page 4, line 4, down to and including the word "Treasury," on line 16, and insert in lieu thereof:

That it shall be unlawful for any agent, attorney, firm of attorneys, or any person engaged heretofore or hereafter in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting said claim to charge or receive more than 20 per cent of the amount herein appropriated in satisfaction of the

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire to ask the Senator from Utah a nuestion. Was the amendment he just proposed a substitute for the provision which is now in the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well; but, if not, then the bill should be further amended:

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to he read a third time.

The bill was read a third time and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (8, 6204) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend sections 2275 and 2276 of the Revised Statutes of the United States providing for the selection of lands for educational purposes in lieu of those appropriated," and to authorize an exchange of lands between the United States and the several States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I hope there will be no objection made at this time to the consideration of that bill, but I ask that it be passed over for the present, as I desire to get some data in regard to it.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill be passed over.
Mr. MYERS. I ask that it be passed over temporarily, to be again recurred to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 3773) to cancel the allotment of Davie Skootah on the Lummi Reservation, Wash., and reallot the lands included therein, was announced as next in order.
Mr. JONES. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

ALBERT GREENLAW.

Mr. HUGHES. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 2180) for the relief of Albert Greenlaw was passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Robinson in the chair). The Senator from New Jersey moves to reconsider the vote by which the bill named by him was passed.

Mr. HUGHES. I intended to ask for an explanation of the bill before it was passed, but no Senator said a word about it. I was engaged in reading the report at the time of its passage. In view of the information which is contained in the report on the bill, I desire to enter a motion to reconsider. I suppose we might as well dispose of the bill now as at any other time.

The bill provides for the payment of $3,378.02 to one Albert Greenlaw, former postmaster at Eastport, Me. It seems that one Ernest A. Farris, who was assistant postmaster at Eastport, Me., during several years ending December, 1912, had embezzled $4,878.03, and the postmaster was held responsible under his bond. This bill is now to relieve him and to return to him the money that he was compelled to pay. I notice that the Post Office Department says, in relation to the case, that if this postmaster "had given proper supervision to the finances of the office the former assistant postmaster would not have been able to cover up the shortage as stated." I also quote from the letter of the Postmaster General, as follows:

In a long line of decisions by the Supreme Court of the United States the rule has been laid down that public officers are held to the highest degree of accountability under their bonds for the public funds intrusted to their care, being relieved from liability only in the cases of loss due to the act of God or the public enemy. (See U. S. v. Prescott, 3 How. (U. S.), 578; U. S. v. Morgan. 11 How. (U. S.), 154; U. S. v. Thomas, 15 Wall. (U. S.), 337.)

In view of the fact that under the postal laws and regulations postmasters are responsible on their official bonds for the defalcations of their subordinates, it is not believed an exception should be made in this case.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from New Jersey that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Townsend], who reported the bill, is out of the Chamber at this time. Will the Senator from New Jersey not, therefore, ask that the bill go over for the present and let us take it up later?

Mr. HUGHES. Let the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the bill was passed will be reconsidered. The Chair

Mr. HUGHES. Now, I ask that the bill go over. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over, SUMMER RESIDENCE HOMESTEADS.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I was not present when the bill (S. 1065) to provide for summer residence homesteads, and for other purposes, was passed. It was not my desire that that bill should pass to-night. If I had been present when it came up, I should have objected. I ask that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered. It is my own bill, I will say, I suppose there will be no objection to my request, which I desire the Presiding Officer to put.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the bill referred to by the Senator from Montana was passed will be reconsidered. The Chair hears none.

Mr. MYERS. I now move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana moves that the bill be indefinitely postponed. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered. The Chair hears none.

LANDS FOR EDUCATIONAL PURPOSES.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I now suggest that we recur to Senate bill 6204.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title. The Secretary. A bill (S. 6204) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend sections 2275 and 2276 of the Revised Statutes of the United States providing for the selection of lands for educational purposes in lieu of those appropriated," and to authorize an exchange of lands between the United States and the several States.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that bill go over.

Mr. MYERS. I hope that bill will not go over.
Mr. SMOOT. It will be impossible to pass the bill during the remainder of the evening.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. MYERS. I merely want to say that the bill applies to all Western States, and I think it would be beneficial to Utah as well as to all the other Western States.

Mr. SMOOT. If the bill should pass without certain amendments we might just as well give the balance of the State of Utah over. It will take more than the remainder of the night to discuss this bill.

Mr. MYERS. If the Senator objects, very well.

Mr. JONES. I desire to say that my State is very much interested in this measure and is very anxious to have it passed. I am sorry that we can not take the bill up and pass it to-night.

Mr. MYERS. I should very much like to have the bill passed. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made to the consideration of the bill. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

BUSINESS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 5335) conferring upon tribes of Indians the right to recall their agents or superintendents, was announced as

Mr. CURTIS. Let that bill go over, Mr. President. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over. The bill (H. R. 11939) for the relief of William Guy was announced as next in order.

Mr. HUGHES. Let that bill go over, Mr. President. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BRYAN. Let it go over, Mr. President. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 92) relative to the construction on the site selected of the central heating, lighting, and power plant authorized by the provisions of the sundry civil appropriation act approved June 23, 1913, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES. Let that go over, Mr. President, The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution goes over. The bill (H. R. 14889) for the relief of the heirs of Jackson J. Mash, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. For what does that bill provide?

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it cnacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the heirs of Jackson J. Mash, deceased, the sum of $146.29, for services performed by the said Jackson J. Mash as postmaster at Duncanville, Ga., under commission dated June 15, 1835.

Mr. SMOOT. That will be included in the omnibus claims bill. I should judge, as I understood from the report on that bill that it covered all of the claims for services rendered in post offices. I therefore ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

The bill (H. R. 153) to create a bureau of labor safety in the Department of Labor was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.
Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator if there is any real objection to that bill? I should like to have it passed,

Mr. SMOOT. There is objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. The bill (H. R. 6918) to relieve Congress from the adjudication of private claims against the Government was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES. Let that bill go over. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. The bill (H. R. 204) to promote the efficiency of the Public Health Service was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not insist on his objection to that bill. It is a bill in which the Public Health Service is very much interested.

Mr. SMOOT. I told the Senator a few moments ago why I objected. I ask that Calendar No. 686, being Senate bill 5885, also go over.

Mr. RANSDELL. I ask the Senator if he will help me to get these bills up later? They are bills in which the public are very much interested. One is to promote the efficiency of the Public Health Service and the other to take care of indigent tuberculous persons

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that he knows exactly what my position is. The Senator from California wants to be present when these bills are considered, as he desires to state his position regarding them.

Mr. RANSDELL. Is he sick this evening, or is there any good reason why he should not be present?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know whether he is sick or not. He told me that it was absolutely impossible for him to be present this evening.

Mr. RANSDELL. I hope he will be here the next time these bills are reached, because they are measures of great importance.

The bill (S. 5885) to provide Federal aid in caring for indigent tuberculous persons, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. The bill (S. 4857) granting an extension of patent to Thomas A. Dicks was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. The bill (S. 6178) to exempt from taxation certain property of the Congressional Club in Washington, D. C., was announced as next in order.

Mr. CURTIS. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 6715) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914," approved June 30, 1913, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CHURCH PROPERTY AT KEYSER, W. VA.

The bill (S. 1989) for the relief of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Presbyterian Church, Keyser, W. Va., was announced as next in order.

Mr. HUGHES. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. HUGHES. I ask that it go over. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. CHILTON. That bill has been reported favorably by the committee.

Several Senators. Regular order!

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from New Jersey will withdraw his objection to the bill.

Mr. JAMES. The Senator from New Jersey has withdrawn his objection, I understand.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I objected to this bill the other night, and was lectured somewhat by the Senator from New Hampshire for doing so. I now find that the bill provides for a claim that ought to be presented to the Confederate States of America instead of to the United States. Two churches in Keyser, W. Va., were destroyed by the Federal Army, and this bill proposes to provide that the Government of the United States shall pay for them. That is according to the report of the findings of the Court of Claims.

Mr. SMOOT. Is this one of them? Mr. BRYAN. There are two of them here, both churches being included in one bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, I shall object. Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, this bill was reported favorably by the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, you can often state something that will look very bad on its face, but when you hear all of it you find it is not the fact.

Mr. BRYAN. Let me read the findings. Mr. CHILTON. Just one moment. I know what the findings are.

Mr. BRYAN. I do not want to be taken off the floor. Mr. CHILTON. Very well. Mr. BRYAN. The findings are identical as to the two cases. One was a Methodist Church and the other was a Presbyterian Church. I read from the findings:

On or about April 1, 1862, the military forces of the United States took possession of said church building in the town of Keyser and occupied the same for a bakery to bake bread and other provisions for the troops of the United States, and continued to so occupy said building until on or about November 28, 1864, when it was destroyed by the Confederate forces under Gen. Rosser, who made a raid into said town and destroyed the church building, together with other buildings occupied by the military authority of the United States for military purposes.

purposes.

The reasonable value of the building at the time of its destruction by the Confederate forces as aforesaid was about the sum of $1,500, no part of which appears to have been paid.

That is the amount claimed in this bill.

No evidence is offered to show the rental value of said property or what damage, if any, was done to the building by the United States troops during said occupancy.

There is the same identical finding with reference to the other church.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Has the Senator from Florida concluded his remarks?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

Mr. OHILTON. Mr. President, I take John's horse from his possession and use it, and, while I have it in my possession, Jack forcibly kills the horse, and when I am sued for the value of the horse I reply that I did not injure him, but that Jack did. The United States Government took possession of the two churches in good condition and used them as storehouses, used them for all military and public purposes, and the churches had no control of them whatever. While the churches were in the control of the United States Government the Confederates came along, destroyed the stores and destroyed the churches, and now the United States say that they are not responsible, but that the Confederate government is.

The Court of Claims very properly held that the Government of the United States is responsible, it having forcibly taken the churches from the possession of the lawful owners, having used them for its purposes, and they being destroyed whilst in its possession. That finding of the court is true as a proposition of law and it is true as a proposition of justice.

Now, let us see what the report of the committee says. It

A bill for the relief of this church was sent to the Court of Claims, which found that the church as a church was loyal to the Government of the United States, and that from April 1, 1862, to November 28, 1864, said church building was occupied and used by the military forces of the United States for a bakery to bake bread and other provisions for the troops of the United States Army there. That nothing has ever been paid for the loss or use and occupation of said church, and that it was worth $1,500 at the time.

From examination of evidence submitted to the Court of Claims, and from other evidence presented, this committee is satisfied that when the United States troops took possession of said church it was in good condition as a church, and had floor, pews, pulpit, doors, windows, etc., and that the building was in such condition as a church usually is when used for worship.

That said troops removed nearly all of both ends of the church and drove through the building from end to end with loaded wagons.

That said troops removed considerable on one side of the church and built there a large oven of bricks and stones and mortar, and that for two years and eight months the church was used as a bakery by said United States troops, and that when said church was deserted by the troops there was nothing left of it except the roof, one side, part of the other side, and the four corners sustaining the roof, and all this in a broken and battered condition.

Mr. BRYAN. Let me ask the Senator-

Mr. CHILTON. One second. I am nearly through. The report continues:

One of the witnesses who testified in the Court of Claims case says that when said troops took possession of the church it was in the good condition hereinbefore mentioned, and when they left there was nothing but the skeleton above suggested, and that it was wholly unfitted for use as a church without rebuilding, and that the rental value of the church was $1,500.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator does not find that in the findings of the Court of Claims.

Mr. CHILTON. The report says one of the witnesses who testified in the Court of Claims says that, and your committee so report.

Mr. BRYAN. To whom did he tell that?

Mr. CHILTON. I do not know. I was not on the committee. This is the report:

This testimony is corroborated and, the committee believes, fairly states the facts of the case.

Mr. President, while what the Senator has said is literally true if nothing else was stated, yet in the light of all the facts it does a great injustice to these claimants. I submit that there never was a clearer case from a legal standpoint, nor a more just claim in the broader field of equity and good conscience.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator's position is that the two churches were ruined before the Confederates destroyed them?

Mr. CHILTON. Yes; but even taking the case put by the Senator from Florida, it would be unconscionable that the United States would take possession of a church, and while they had possession of it let somebody else tear it down and then say they are not responsible.

Mr. BRYAN. All these statements are in the nature of exparte statements. We can not discuss this question in five minutes. I am not concerned about it, except for the reason that all church claims were considered and reported upon in an omnibus claims bill two years ago. These two churches could not come up to the rules of the Committee on Claims at that time, and the junior Senator from West Virginia was on the subcommittee that considered the omnibus bill. To now pass the claim of these two churches would open the door to claims for any property that was used by the troops of the United States during the Civil War. For that reason I am bound to object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, it is quite evident that there is a difference of opinion in regard to this matter. It is worthy of consideration, and I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. CHILTON. It has already gone over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been passed over.

FISH-CULTURAL STATION, UNICOI COUNTY, TENN.

The bill (H. R. 11474) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to permit the construction of a public highway through the fishcultural station in Unicoi County, Tenn., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of Commerce to convey to the road commissioners of Unicoi County, Tenn., a right of way for a public highway, not more than 20 feet wide, through the property of the United States in Unicol County, Tenn., used as a fish-cultural station and hatchery, provided that such conveyance of right of way shall not be construed as affecting the right or title of the United States in said property or as in violation of any stipulation or condition in the conveyance of the same to the United States, and on the further condition that the land or right of way authorized to be conveyed hereunder shall be constructed and maintained as a highway free of any expense to the United States, and all work thereon shall be such as not to interfere with the operations and efficiency of said fish-cultural station, and in a manner satis-

there. It takes very little of it. It is a very short right of way. It not only is necessary in order to complete a road across the country there, but, as I said, it is for the benefit of both the Government and the county of Unicoi. I have not read this bill for some time, but I was impressed with its meritorious character when it first came over here, and I examined it.

Mr. HUGHES. I am not objecting to the passage of the bill. I am simply proposing that that amendment-which, in my judgment, always should be attached to acts granting away rights belonging to the people—should be incorporated in the bill. It is the universal practice of the Congress to provide some such language as I have suggested, and I do not think it will in any way militate against the people who are asking for this right, and it will reserve whatever rights we have in case the Government or the people desire at any time to resume possession of them.

Mr. SHIELDS. Did the Senator notice the concluding paragraph there?-

And all work thereon shall be such as not to interfere with the opera-tions and efficiency of said fish-cultural station, and in a manner satis-factory to the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. HUGHES. Yes. Mr. SHIELDS. It seems to me that is ample protection. wish to say this to the Senator in regard to it: The pike which they expect to put through this fish hatchery has been completed right up to it, and the work is, in effect, suspended for the want of this measure. In fact, part of it was constructed in the belief that the bill had actually passed here, as it passed the House some time ago. This is a mountain country, and it is absolutely necessary, in order to complete this road, to go through this fish hatchery. It is impossible to get a right of way at any other place. At this late time in the session, if it should go over to the House for concurrence in an amendment, it is very improbable that it would be finally agreed to and passed; and it is a matter of great importance to those people.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator remembers that he sent me to the other House with some amendments which I had to get concurred in, and I am in the same position with my bill that the Senator is with this; but that is not my object, of course, in suggesting this amendment. I have never knowingly permitted a bill of this character to pass without attempting, and nearly always successfully, to have incorporated in it the amendment that I now propose. Somebody called my attention to-day to the fact that the absence of that language in the grant that permitted the construction of the Keokuk Dam makes it absolutely and utterly impossible for the United States Government to exercise any control over those who received that right and that privilege at the hands of the Government. Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, this is a mere easement over a portion of the land belonging to the Government there, not over 100 or 200 yards wide.

Mr. HUGHES. I understand that.
Mr. SHIELDS. It is a very small thing, and yet it is a very necessary thing in order to complete this pike from one part of this little county to another.

Mr. HUGHES. If I thought I were throwing any real obstacle in the way of the people who want this done, I would not offer this amendment, but I am satisfied that I am not, and I do not feel justified in permitting this absolute right to be granted without retaining in Congress the power to resume it if at any time it thinks it is for the best interests of everybody concerned to resume it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, it is getting pretty close to 10 o'clock.

Mr. HUGHES. I have never seen a bill of this character drawn without that language in it, and I do not think the Senator would have any objection to it.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have no objection to the amendment except for the fact that it might defeat the enactment of the bill at this session of Congress, and it is a very material matter to have it enacted.

Mr. HUGHES. I think the Senator will find that the other Chamber will be very willing to acquiesce in this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

USE OF PUBLIC-SCHOOL BUILDINGS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 5800) to provide for the use of public-school buildings in the District of Columbia as community forums, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

DESECRATION OF FLAG OF THE UNITED STATES.

The bill (H. R. 14822) to prevent and punish the desecration, mutilation, or improper use, within the District of Columbia, of the flag of the United States of America, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. POMERENE. That bill was read the other day, Mr. President

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been read. Is there objection to its present consideration?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have no objection, but when the bill was up for consideration before I think my colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND] stated that he had some amendment to offer to the bill. Does the Senator from Ohio know what the amendment was:

Mr. POMERENE. I think the Senator is in error in that respect. He did ask this question—I have not the RECORD before me, and I quote from memory only: He asked why it should not apply to the entire United States? My answer to that question was that the people who are forming this flag association, and who are back of this legislation, have bills or laws now in each of the several States, but there was no bill with respect to the District of Columbia. Now, let this be passed with respect to the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to object. I only wanted to know if the Senator knew what the amendment was that my colleague wished to offer.

Mr. POMERENE. That was the substance of it. I am quite sure I am right about it. .

Mr. SMOOT. I think my colleague was right, that legislation of this kind ought to apply to every State in the Union. Mr. POMERENE. There is State legislation of that kind applying to other States. The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 6904) authorizing the conveyance of the United States jail and land on which the same is located at Guthrie, Okla., to Logan County, Okla., was announced as next in order

Mr. PITTMAN. Let that go over. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. The bill (S. 6823) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make further survey of the Pecos River and Valley in Texas and New Mexico to determine the feasibility and cost of an irrigation project thereon was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PUBLIC PARK, SALIDA, COLO.

The bill (H. R. 21) authorizing the city of Salida, Colo., to purchase certain public lands for public-park purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the city of Salida, Chaffee County, Colo., for a period of five years, to purchase, and the Secretary of the Interior is directed to convey to the city for public-park purposes for the use and benefit of the city, the following-described lands or so much thereof as the city may desire, to wit: The south half of section 25, and the southeast quarter of section 26, township 51 north, range 8 east, New Mexico principal meridian, known as Box Canon, containing 480 acres, more or less. It also provides that the said conveyance shall be made of the said lands to the said city by the Secretary of the Interior upon the payment by said city for the said lands, or such portions thereof as they may select, at the rate of $1.25 per acre, and patent shall be issued to said city for the said land selected to have and to hold for public-park purposes, provided that the conveyance hereby authorized shall not include any lands which at the date of the issuance of patent shall be covered by a valid existing bona fide right or claim initiated under the laws of the United States; provided further, that there shall be reserved to the United States all oil, coal, and other mineral deposits that may be found in the lands so granted, and all necessary use of the land for extracting the same; and provided further, that said city shall not have the right to sell or convey the land herein granted, or any part thereof, or to devote the same to any other purpose than as hereinbefore described; and that if the said land shall not be used as a public park, the same, or such parts thereof not so used, shall revert to the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FLATHEAD INDIAN RESERVATION, MONT.

The bill (S. 6716) to provide for stock-watering privileges on certain unallotted lands on the Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont., was announced as next in order.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I notice that this is a bill affecting an Indian reservation, and yet it seems to have been reported from the Public Lands Committee. The report is not in the file on my desk, and I will ask that the bill go over.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I wish the Senator would reconsider that determination. The last time the bill was reached the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] objected; but he does not do so at this time, and now the Senator from Kansas objects. I just want to say a word or two in regard to it. I can explain the bill in about a minute so clearly, I think, that the Senator from Kansas will thoroughly understand it, and then I will ask him if he will object.

Mr. CURTIS. I will withhold my objection.
Mr. MYERS. Yes; I should like to explain the bill first.

The facts of the case are these: Along the Flathead River in the Flathead Indian Reservation there is a strip of rough and broken land. It is not Indian land any more, because the Indians were allotted their land and the rest of the land was opened to entry.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I have a copy of the report now, and I will withdraw my objection. The passage of the bill is recommended by the department.

Mr. MYERS. I thank the Senator.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bid. It provides that the act of April 23, 1904 (33 Stat. L., p. 302), entitled "An act for the survey and allotment of lands now embraced within the limits of the Flathead Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana," and all amendments thereto, shall be amended by adding thereto the following section:

SEC. 26. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to designate as valuable for stock-watering purposes such of the unallotted and unreserved lands of the Flathead Indian Reservation which border on streams as may be subject to settlement and disposal under sections 9 and 13 of this act. Lands so designated shall be disposed of under the terms of this act, subject to the condition, which shall be expressed in all patents issued for lands so designated, that existing trails crossing said lands shall be kept open to the extent necessary to provide access for live stock to streams adjacent to said lands. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to perform all acts necessary to the enforcement of this condition.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 8492) to restore homestead rights in certain cases was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

INTERSTATE TRANSPORTATION OF IMMATURE CALVES.

The bill (H. R. 549) to regulate the interstate transportation of immature calves was considered as in Committee of the

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, after the word "old," to strike out the remainder of the bill down to and including the words "twelve hours," in line 7, so as to make the bill read:

bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That no person, firm, or corporation shall ship or deliver for shipment, nor shall any common carrier nor the receiver, trustee, or lessee thereof, receive for transportation or transport from one State or Territory or the District of Columbia into or through another State or Territory or the District of Columbia any live calf not accompanied by its mother unless the same is 4 weeks old or over: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture may make rules and regulations permitting, in cases of emergency only, the shipment in interstate commerce of live calves less than 4 weeks old.

SEC. 2. That any person, firm, or corporation, or any common carrier or the receiver, trustee, or lessee thereof, who shall violate any of the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine of not less than $20 nor more than $50 for each calf offered for shipment, shipped, or received for transportation or transported in violation of any of the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment on page 1, line 9, after the word "four," to strike out the word "weeks" and insert the word "months," so as to make it read:

Unless the same is 4 months old or over.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, does that language apply to the calf or its mother?

Mr. SHIELDS. The calf. The Senator never saw a mother less than four months old. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 1, line 9, it is proposed to strike out the word "weeks" and insert the word "months," so that it will read:

Unless the same is 4 months old or over.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I object to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from North Dakota will see fit to withdraw his objection. This measure has been put forward by a number of humane societies which are very much interested in its passage, and certain conditions existing in the country make necessary this legislation. I see that a great many Senators are treating the subject humorously, including the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Hughes]; but, in spite of that, Mr. President, the bill deals with a real difficulty, and a real evil, and meets a necessity. I hope the Senator from North Dakota will withdraw his objection

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator from Arkansas what is the need for this legislation?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; I shall be very glad to state the need. It is intended to prevent the very brutal practice, which is quite general in some parts of the country, of the slaughter of young calves; and it seeks to prevent this evil through the commerce power, which is the only practical way I know of to deal with the matter as a national evil.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator means the slaughter of veal, or sucking calves?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; certainly.

Where would people get their veal? Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. ROBINSON. They would have to do without it in the case of calves under 4 weeks old.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator whether it is the purpose of this bill to increase the meat supply of the country?

Mr. ROBINSON. It is intended also to conserve the food supply of the country. A large number—I can not state from memory approximately the number—but a large number of im-A large number-I can not state from mature calves are annually slaughtered for veal, and it is the purpose of this bill to prevent that practice.

Mr. KLNYON. I should like to ask the Senator whether this will tend to reduce the high cost of living?

Mr. JAMES. Yes; it will reduce the calves. Mr. ROBINSON. Of course Senators may treat the subject lightly if they want to, but I have stated that it is a serious

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. ROBINSON. I will.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not think the subject is one to be dealt with lightly. Of course it is a grave matter for Congress to take steps toward interfering with the free disposition by producers of their stock. On the other hand, I think in the year 1912, which was the last year that I examined the figures, in many of the States in this Union the number of cows actually decreased because of the slaughter of calves. There were three States, I think-Missouri, North Dakota, and Minnesota-that made considerable gains. If my memory serves me right, in the State of Iowa, one of the great agricultural States of this Union, there was a falling off; and the killing of these immature calves is a serious question affecting the increase of live stock. After a calf reaches the age of 4 months there is less temptation to kill the animal, because the value of the animal is not so great in proportion to the weight of the animal as in the case of the smaller and younger calves

Mr. President, I admit that it is a very serious thing for us to undertake to interfere with the ordinary sale of property by the man who has produced the property. At the same time I do think the wholesale slaughter of young calves that has taken place in this country in the last few years is a menace to the food supply of this country; and if under the idea of the humane side of this matter we are justified, I for one feel justified in voting for a bill that will lessen the slaughter of immature calves

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I want to conclude what I have to say by reading a very brief statement made by Dr. A. D. Melvin, Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Department of Agriculture, in a memorandum supplementing his early testimony before the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. He said:

The shipment for slaughter of very young calves in interstate commerce has grown into a practice. The reports of department agents and officials of State sanitary live-stock boards and of the State and National live-stock humane associations show that shippers of live stock take young calves not yet weaned, and therefore incapable of taking any other kind of nourishment than milk, separate them from their mothers, and ship them to distant points in interstate commerce. At the time of slaughter these young animals have often been separated from their mothers for three or four days or more.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Walsh in the chair) Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. Is it not possible that this is laying the foundation for another bureau or another division with the appointment of a number of men to enforce this particular law?

Mr. ROBINSON. It will, of course, require the adoption of some regulations on the part of the Secretary of Agriculture for the enforcement of the act. It is not thought that in the enforcement of the law he will require any large number of employees to enforce it.

Mr. GRONNA. I am very sorry that I disagree with the distinguished Senator, and I shall insist upon my objection.

Mr. SHIELDS. I should like the Senator from North Dakota to withhold his objection for a moment.

Mr. GRONNA. I will withhold it, but I shall ultimately insist upon it.

insist upon it.

Mr. SHIELDS. This is a very important and a very serious question. I have some statistics that demonstrate fully what the Senator from Minnesota has said. The statistics show that in 1909 there were in this country 71,099,000 head of cattle. They further show that in 1916 the supply had decreased to 61,441,000, or there were nearly 10,000,000 less cattle in the United States in 1916 than in 1909. They further show that in 1916 there were calves two or three weeks old slaughtered for veal numbering 2,048,022. That is something alarming, I respectfully submit to the Senator, and it is an evil that ought to be remedied. Everyone knows the immense increase in the price of cattle in the last few years, which has added greatly to the cost of living, so that very few people can indulge in the article of diet, beef. article of diet, beef.

This subject is not one that is entirely new. It has been discussed a great deal. It has given the Agricultural Department a great deal of concern, and is giving the whole country concern. That is especially the case in my State. While for-merly we raised enough cattle to answer all our purposes for grazing and fattening and export, we now have to go to other States and import cattle for those purposes. We do not raise calves sufficient to answer the demand for grazing in that State. That is so in many other States. One of the great causes is the sacrifice of calves while they are only a few weeks old. It is for that reason that I offered the amendment making the limit four months instead of four weeks.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SHIELDS. I do, Mr. GRONNA. I wish to ask the Senator from Tennessee if he has considered that there are very often cases where a farmer will have a dairy herd. He wishes to dispose, of course, of the male calves. He does not want to raise the male calves. Shall the United States take it upon itself to be the guardian over a man who has such a herd and say when he shall dispose of male calves?

Mr. SHIELDS. I have some statistics, too, upon that subject, as well as some facts that I wish to state to the Senator.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will permit another interrup-tion, what is the difference whether the farmer sells a male calf when 4 weeks old or whether he sells it when 4 months old?

Mr. SHIELDS. It concerns the supply of cattle and affects the price of meat in the United States.

I should like to call attention to some facts stated in an article in the Weekly News Letter. I believe it is a paper issued by the Agricultural Department. I will read only a few sentences from a very recent number upon that subject.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it. Mr. SMOOT. Has objection been made to the consideration of the bill? The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that no objection has been made, and the bill is now pending.

Mr. GRONNA. I said that I would ultimately insist upon an objection, but the Senator from Tennessee wanted to be heard and I stated that I would withdraw it temporarily.

Mr. SMOOT. That is as I understood it.

Mr. SHIELDS. I asked the Senator to withhold his objection until I could make a statement, and he did so.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator is going to object, it does seem to me that we ought not to waste time further on the bill.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator has not objected yet, and of course I have a right to speak to the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee has the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. As the Senator from North Dakota said he was going to object, I shall object now, in order that we may go on with the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah ob-

Mr. SHIELDS. Of course, the Senator from North Dakota might not have made the objection had he heard my statement. I should like to finish my remarks on the subject and place be-fore the Senate the facts I desire to state.

Mr. GRONNA. I trust the Senator from Utah will not take the Senator from Tennessee off the floor. I was very glad to withhold the objection in order to allow the Senator from Tennessee to make a statement.

Mr. SMOOT. I made my objection on the basis that the Senator from North Dakota was going to object when the statement was made. If that is the case, why should we spend any more time upon the bill?

Mr. SHIELDS. But the Senator from North Dakota withdrew his objection in order that he might hear my request to him to not insist upon his objection.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator asks me to withdraw my objection, as the Senator from North Dakota said he is going to object, I shall withdraw my objections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SHIELDS. I am going to briefly state the facts as they appear in this publication.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Tennessee that he has been occupying the floor for five minutes now, but several interruptions were made for which he was in no sense responsible, and the Chair will hold that he has two and one-half minutes more.

Mr. SHIELDS. I thank the Chair. This article in the Weekly News Letter is as follows:

CAN THE SLAUGHTER OF CALVES BE LESSENED?

CAN THE SLAUGHTER OF CALVES BE LESSENED?

The slaughter of young calves is one of the serious phases of the problem of the maintenance of our country's beef supply. Statistics indicate that the slaughter of such animals is increasing rapidly, due primarily to an increase in the demand for veal, in spite of the fact that veal is ordinarily sold at an extremely high price per pound.

These veal calves are largely drawn from the dairy districts, but with the growth in the demand for veal other sections are marketing as veal in considerable numbers calves that, if kept and fattened, would have made good beef steers. The market for stockers and feeders is therefore affected.

Various suggestions have been made to prevent this, even such radical ones as legislation to prohibit entirely the slaughter of calves, The fact is not always recognized, however, that this practice is purely economic. In dairy districts milk production is the chief business and calves are an incident, valuable only to replenish the milking stock or for such revenue as may be obtained from their sale as veal. As the average dairyman must keep the number of his surplus calves as soon as possible. As there is not ordinarily any market for such calves except for veal, veal they become. The slaughter of calves in districts which are not exclusively devoted to dairying probably has as its governing factor a market near by which pays more for calves as veal than as stockers.

A comparison of English and American methods in this respect sheds some light on this problem. In England men make a business of buying young calves throughout the dairy districts, to be raised on milk substitutes and subsequently fattened for beef. In England the dairy cows are largely shorthorns, whose calves are valuable for beef production. In the United States, on the other hand, the cows of the dairy districts are principally of the strictly dairy breeds (pure breds or grades) or natives with no breeding, and the calves from such cows have, as a rule, little value as feede labor but of skill also. In England skilled farm labor is cheaper than in the United States.

Another possible solution of the problem would be an increase in mutton consumption in the United States. We consume annually per capita 7½ pounds of veal, which is 4 per cent of our total meat consumption; the people of Great Britain eat 4 pounds of veal per capita annually, which is 3 per cent of their annual per capita meat consumption. We consume 6½ pounds of mutton and lamb per capita, which is about 4 per cent of our total, whereas the British people consume 26 pounds of mutton and lamb per capita, which is 22 per cent of their annual meat consumption.

An increase in our mutton consumption at the expense of the consumption of veal would, of course, tend to make calves less valuable as veal and would encourage a system of breeding which would bring them into demand as stockers. An increase in mutton consumption would also encourage the farm raising of sheep, and this could be brought about on dairy farms without affecting the economy of management from the dairy standpoint. A small flock of sheep on a farm will increase the productiveness of the farm, keep the farm clean of weeds, and add to the family meat supply without entailing serious additional expense for feed, labor, or shelter.

Mr. JAMES. Will the Senator yield for a question. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. SHIELDS. I do.

Mr. JAMES. As I understand the bill it provides that a farmer can not ship a calf 4 weeks old from one State into another unless it is accompanied by its mother, but the butchers can kill that calf 4 weeks old and Armour & Co. or any purchaser can ship and sell it from one State to another. If the committee wanted to conserve the beef supply and the thing to do was to prevent the killing of a young calf, why was it that they did not make provision against the shipment of veal?

Mr. SHIELDS. If we can get the bill through, that amendment will be offered so as to effect the very object the Senator has suggested and not allow even a calf or veal to be shipped.

Mr. JAMES. It seems to me that that is the way to get at it, if we are going to do it at all.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Will the Senator yield for a ques-

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I should like to ask the Senator how he will help the beef question by conserving the very cattle that are not beef animals and are not profitably raised for beef

Mr. SHIELDS. That is the very question I was speaking of when interrupted. I will state, further, that in this article, as is known to every cattleman, it is stated that by crossing dairy cattle with beef steers a good steer can be produced, and that it is done constantly in a great many dairies. Thus not only a good dairy cow can be used for dairy purposes, but good and valuable beef cattle are produced in that way. That is a very common practice and is done in a great many States, I would say in a majority of the States. In that way a great sacrifice of cattle, nearly 2,000,000 a year, could be prevented in the United States and our beef supply greatly increased, and, of course, the cost of beef reduced to people who need it. As stated in this article, veal is the highest priced beef and can only be used by a comparatively small number of people who are able to pay for it, while the great mass are deprived of cheap beef. I think it is a very meritorious measure, and I hope the Senator from North Dakota will not make an objection to the bill.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, this is a bill which I think is fundamentally wrong. It interferes with private business. For the Government to assume to become the guardian of the private individual I think is wrong. I ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Robinson in the chair). Objection is made, and the bill goes over.

HOMESTEAD RIGHTS.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask what became of Order of Business 726, the bill (H. R. 8492) to restore homestead rights in certain cases?

Mr. CLAPP. I was just going to ask that that bill be consid-The Senator from Utah objected to it under a misappre-

Mr. GRONNA. I have had a great deal of correspondence about that particular bill. A great many people are anxious that it should be passed.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to call the attention of the Senate to this bill and state how I came to object. I forget who handed me the bill and stated that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] requested that I should object to the consideration of it this evening. I am now informed by the clerk of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] that instead of asking me to object to it he asked that no objection be made to it. Whoever carried the information to me from the Senator from Minnesota was mistaken or else I was mistaken in what he stated. Therefore I ask that the bill be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah asks that the Senate recur to the bill (H. R. 8492) to restore homestead rights in certain cases.

Mr. HUGHES. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN NATIONAL PARK.

The bill (H. R. 10124) to add certain lands to the Rocky Mountain National Park, Colo., was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the eastern boundary line of the Rocky Mountain National Park between the section corner common to sections 2 and 3, township 3 north, and sections 34 and 35, township 4 north, range 73 west, and the township corner common to townships 5 and 6 north, ranges 72 and 73 west, is hereby changed so as to read as follows:

"Beginning at a point on the present eastern boundary line of the Rocky Mountain National Park, Colo., which is the northwest corner of section 2 and the northeast corner of section 3, township 3 north, range 73 west of the sixth principal meridian, Colorado, running thence east along the township line to its intersection with the main hydrographic divide east of Cow Creek, between section 31, township 4 north, and section 6, township 3 north, range 72 west; thence northwesterly following along said hydrographic divide, passing over Twin Sisters, The Crags, passing west of Lily Lake, and continuing along said hydrographic divide, passing over Twin Sisters, The Crags, passing west of Lily Lake, and continuing along said hydrographic divide, now between Aspen Brook and Fish Creek and passing over Lily Mountain and Gianttrack Mountain to a point which is the southeast corner of section 34 and the southwest corner of section 35, township 5 north, range 73 west; thence north along the section lines between sections 34 and 35, 26 and 27, 22 and 23, 14 and 15, to the quarter corner common to sections 14 and 15, all in township 5 north, range 73 west; thence east along quarter-section line, through sections of said quarter-section line through section 18 to the quarter corner common to sections 18 and 17, township 5 north, range 72 west; thence north along the section line between sections 18 and 17, 7 and 8, 5 and 6, all in township 5 north, range 72 west, to that point which is the northeast corner of section 6 and the northwest corner of section 5 in said township and range; thence west along the township line to the township corner common to townships 5 and 6 north, ranges 72 and 73 west, which is on the present eastern boundary line of the Rocky Mountain National Park, Colo."

And the lands lying between the present existing eastern boundary and the eastern boundary as changed by this act between said section corner common to townships 5 and 6 north, ranges 72 and 73 west, he hereby reserved and withdrawn from set

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOMESTEAD RIGHTS.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask unanimous consent to recur to the bill (H. R. 8492) to restore homestead rights in certain cases, the objection being made, I think, inadvertently.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to recur to House bill 8492.

Mr. HUGHES. Is that the bill I objected to? The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not now object.

There being no objection; the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the word "laws," to strike out "pursuant to purchase by competitive bids for" and insert "and paid," and in line 6, before the words "per acre," to strike out "$5" and insert "$4," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act any person who has heretofore entered under the homestead laws, and paid a price equivalent to or greater than $4 per acre, lands embraced in a ceded Indian reservation, shall, upon proof of such fact, if otherwise qualified, be entitled to the benefits of the homestead law as though such former entry had not been made: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to any person who has failed to pay the full price for his former entry, or whose former entry was canceled for fraud.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

LANDS FOR EDUCATIONAL PURPOSES.

The bill (H. R. 15096) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend sections 2275 and 2276 of the Revised Statutes of the United States providing for the selection of lands for educa-tional purposes in lieu of those appropriated," and to author-ize an exchange of lands between the United States and the several States was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

DISTRICT JUVENILE COURT.

The bill (H. R. 8348) to amend an act entitled "An act to create a juvenile court in and for the District of Columbia," and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let the bill go over.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. This is quite a long bill. There are several amendments reported from the committee. I suggest that it is impossible to finish it in an hour.

Mr. POMERENE. We have just occupied half an hour in discussing calves. I hope we can take a little time to discuss the boys and girls here in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; it is my appreciation of children that causes me to insist that this important measure be not passed without due consideration and opportunity to per-

Mr. POMERENE. We might just as well take up the time now

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill

CLEVELAND L. SHORT.

The bill (S. 3735) for the relief of Cleveland L. Short was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

JOSEPH A. JENNINGS.

The bill (H. R. 6732) for the relief of Joseph A. Jennings was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

CHARLES L. MOORE

The bill (H. R. 8452) for the relief of Charles L. Moore was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Charles L. Moore, of Pesotum, Ill., $26, the amount being due him for extra pay and disallowed October 9, 1901.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN BRODIE.

The bill (H. R. 12240) for the relief of John Brodie was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to John Brodie, of San Francisco, Cal., $1,000, on account of personal injuries received by him through the explosion of a box of percussion caps while loading the United States Army transport Sherman, in San Francisco Harbor, on the 22d day of September, 1899; but no sum of money due or to become due to the said John Brodie under this act shall be liable to attachment, levy, or seizure by or under any legal or equitable process whatever, but shall inure to the benefit of the said John Brodie.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH MANNING. The bill (H. R. 12145) for the relief of Joseph Manning was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

MRS. JENNIE BUTTNER.

The bill (H. R. 13820) for the relief of Mrs. Jennie Buttner was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay Jennie Buttner, widow of the late Morris S. Buttner, $1,380 as compensation to her for the loss of her husband, who, on the 27th day of February, 1916, died of typhus fever contracted while in discharge of his official duties as mounted inspector of the United States Immigration Service.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GERTIE FOSS.

The bill (H. R. 14572) for the relief of Gertie Foss was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $1,170 to Gertie Foss, widow of Olaf Foss, late gunner in the Revenue-Cutter Service, who was injured while in the discharge of his official duty on October 8, 1913, and later died on November 11, 1913, as the result of such injuries.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALMA PROVOST.

The bill (H. R. 14784) for the relief of Alma Provost was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $540 to compensate Alma Provost, of Martin, S. Dak., for permanent bodily injuries sustained by her on the 1st day of February, 1915, at the Government Indian school at Rapid City, S. Dak., while engaged in work required of her under the direction of persons in charge of said school.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

P. H. AYLETT.

The bill (H. R. 14645) for the relief of the legal representative of P. H. Aylett was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

Mr. BRYAN. What is the objection? These are House bills reported from the Committee on Claims, and the committee very carefully considered them. I do not see why we should continue to postpone their consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to know more about it.

CLEVELAND L. SHORT.

Mr. BRYAN. They are all personal-injury cases that come within the well-known rule laid down by the committee of the House and the committee of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Some of them do not show a report. For instance, there is the bill (S. 3735) for the relief of Cleveland L. Short. It says that he either fell off or was pushed off the train.

Mr. BRYAN. That bill was not passed?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I objected to it.
Mr. BRYAN. Yes; I remember.
Mr. LEE of Maryland. I will say that that is a bill which I reported, and if we are going to pass over these measures there will, I fear, be no time for their consideration later.

Mr. SMOOT. From the report I do not think the bill ought to pass. In the other cases I have had time to read the reports: but I objected to that bill because I do not know upon the report that it should pass.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Will the Senator permit me to make a statement of the case, pending which, if he will withdraw his objection, I would be glad to have him do so.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no necessity in relation to Senate bill 3735, if the report is right-and I take it for granted that it is, because the Senator made it.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. That is the case of an employee who was earning $150 per month, and was pushed by somebody behind him off a platform.

Mr. SMOOT. He may have fallen off.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Peradventure; but the statement is to the effect that he was pushed off.

Mr. SMOOT. The statement of the department is that he either fell off or was pushed off.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. According to the man's own statement he was pushed off, and his right foot was cut off by reason of being thrust under the train. The theory of the bill, as I under-stand it, is that of the workmen's compensation act. We have just passed a workmen's compensation act that will give a man injured from thirty to sixty dollars a month, as he may be compensated by the commission for that purpose. There is no theory of liability. This man is in a very serious condition, being crippled for life, and the question arises whether the Senate that passed the compensation act one minute will the next minute say that there is nothing in that theory. The committee tried to act with some degree of consistency. A man is seriously injured in the course of his business as an employee of the Isthmian Canal, and it does seem to me that the Senator from Utah should not interpose an objection against the bill. He may have voted against the workmen's compensation bill, but under all the circumstance

Mr. SMOOT. No; the Senator from Utah did not vote against

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I am glad to hear that he did not; but I wish he were more consistent in this matter. I think it would be well if he would let the Senate vote on the question, and see if the Senate will not be consistent with its general ideas on the subject

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I think the situation with reference to calendar No. 745, being Senate bill 3735, and calendar No. 746, being House bill 6732, is this: If the injury had occurred subsequent to the passage of the act of 1909 the claimant would have received compensation under that act. If it occurred before the passage of the act it has been the custom of the committees of both Houses to treat those cases just as if the injury had occurred subsequent to the passage of the act, instead of prior to its passage. That has been the policy of both committees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

P. H. AYLETT.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in connection with Order of Business No. 757, House bill 14645, I observe that there is a bond to be given to the Government in the Aylett case, and therefore I will withdraw my objection to the consideration of that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 14645) for the relief of the legal representative of P. H. Aylett. It proposes to pay to the legal representative of P. H. Aylett, deceased, $595, that being the amount of Treasury draft No. 5845, issued April 18, 1861, in favor of P. H. Aylett, United States attorney for the eastern district of Virginia, in payment of attendance, travel, and fees from January 1 to April 3, 1861, the draft having been lost and standing unpaid on the records of the Treasury Department; but before payment the legal representative of P. H. Aylett shall deliver to the Secretary of the Treasury a good and sufficient bond, with the surety to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, to indemnify the United States against all losses, costs, or damage incurred by reason of making the payment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH A. JENNINGS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I should like to inquire what objection was urged against Calendar No. 746, being the bill (H. R. 6732) for the relief of Joseph A. Jennings? That is a bill which has passed the House and appropriates $2,500 for a man who lost his arm working for the Government at the navy yard in Washington. It seems to me that we ought not to "make fish of one and flesh of another" by appropriating for some claimants and denying relief to others. The bill seems some claimants and denying relief to others. to me to be meritorious, and has been favorably reported by the committee

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky ask to return to that bill?

Mr. JAMES. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of that bill.

Mr. SMOOT. There is nothing in the Senate committee report to show what the House report is. It is merely referred to in the Senate report.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I will read the House report to the Senator. I happen to have that report here.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not the House report here, but upon the face of the Senate report I can not tell how much the department has already paid this man.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. He has not received anything, and the accident occurred several years ago.

Mr. SMOOT. He received during that time 30 days' pay.

That is what the committee say.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. The Senator is talking about a different case. Mr. SMOOT. I am talking about the case of Joseph A. Jen-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to recur to Calendar No. 746, being the bill (H. R. 6732) for the relief of Joseph A. Jennings. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Wait just a moment

Mr. JAMES. The claimant in this case lost an arm while working in the navy yard at Washington. The House has passed a bill giving him $2,500, and the Senate committee reports it unanimously. The Senate report says that he lost his arm by reason of being injured by a traveling crane.

Mr. SMOOT. All the information I get from that report is

The facts in detail are set forth in House Report No. 146, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session.

Mr. JAMES. The report says:

This bill as it passed the House provides for the payment of $2,500 to Joseph A. Jennings by reason of the amputation of his left arm, incurred by him while employed as a painter in the gua-carriage shop of the navy yard at Washington, D. C., the arm having been run over by a traveling crane, causing the necessary amputation of the arm above the elbow, the claimant being at the time about 25 years of age and having served previously as first sergeant in Company L, in the First Regiment District of Columbia Volunteer Infantry, in the War with Spain.

The facts in detail are fully set forth in House Report No. 146, Shxty-fourth Congress, first session.

Now, it does look to me as if the bill ought to be passed, and I hope the Senator will not object. I do not even know the man: I do not know who introduced the bill, or anything about it.

Mr. SMOOT. And the Senator from Utah does not know him, either, or know anything about the case.

Mr. JAMES. I am satisfied of that; but I think it is a meritorious claim. The man lost his arm, and the House recognized that he had a meritorious claim; it reported the bill favorably, and it passed that body.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will read an extract from the House report referred to, I think he will be satisfied. The report of the House committee

At that time the crane was standing 40 or 50 feet north of where Jennings was. Jennings was compelled, and did stoop down, with his face toward the floor, and reached down one hand for the purpose of hanging a rod which was used to lock the scaffolding on one of the girders. The proof shows that before looking downward he looked toward the crane and saw it was standing still. Without the bell being rung to give warning of any kind, and while Jennings was in a stooping position, reaching down for a part of the scaffolding, as stated above, the crane struck him, and in order to prevent himself falling he threw his left arm on the girder which supported the track of the crane, and immediately a wheel of the crane ran over his arm, cutting it off near the shoulder. The affidavits and proof, hereto attached, show, we think, conclusively.

immediately a wheel of the crane ran over his arm, cutting it off near the shoulder. The affidavits and proof, hereto attached, show, we think, conclusively—

First. That on the 14th day of August, 1899, the claimant, Joseph A. Jennings, was an the employ of the United States Government in the navy yard at Washington.

Second. That he was employed as a painter by said Government and was in the discharge of his duty when injured.

Third. That it was either the rule or the custom where he was employed to notify employees of the moving of the crane forward or backward by the ringing of a bell, and that either at this time said bell was not rung, or the noise of the machinery was such as to prevent its being heard by Jennings or those in his immediate vicinity.

Fourth. That Jennings was exercising due care and caution in the performance of the duty assigned him; that it was necessary for him to do that which he was doing, and that before stooping over for the purpose of receiving and adjusting certain scaffolding, he exercised proper care and diligence in looking and seeing that the crane was standing still.

Fifth. That the Government was negligent in not providing proper caution or signals to warn him of his danger.

Sixth. That Jennings himself was ordinarily prudent and careful and did not by his own negligence proximately contribute to the injury.

Seventh. If in this case the Government was a private corporation, partnership, or individual, Jennings would have a right of action against it or them upon which he could recover in an action at law.

That was the finding of the House committee.

That was the finding of the House committee.

Mr. SMOOT. How much has already been paid him? Mr. LEE of Maryland. Nothing at all, so far as I know.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator says "so far as he knows"; but what does the department report upon it? I have not a thing here in my files to show what the department has reported.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. The report of the House committee says that there was no payment to him. There was no fund from which to pay him, and he had to stop work when he got his arm cut off.

Mr. SMOOT. That is not what I am asking. In all such cases the Committee on Claims used to ask for a report from the department as to the facts in the case. I do not know of any other claims of this character on which a report from the department or the head of the department has not been asked

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Here are a number of letters of condolence to this man from people in the navy yard, saying that he was entitled to consideration, and all that sort of thing, and there was no compensation paid him.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that nearly every department of the Government, when an employee is injured, pays his doctor's bill, pays his expenses, and pays his salary up to the time when he returns to service. I know that has been done in many cases.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, here is a letter from the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I want to know. What does the Secretary say?

Mr. BRYAN. I suggest that we pass over this bill temporarily, and the Senator can read it.

Mr. HUGHES. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. JAMES. Let it be passed over temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ESTATE OF JAMES A. CHAMBERLAIN.

The bill (H. R. 13106) for the relief of the trustee and parties who are now or who may hereafter become interested in the estate of James A. Chamberlain under the terms of his will was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Ferdinand M. Holmes, trust officer of the Old Colony Trust Co., Boston, Mass., which institution is trustee of the estate of James A. Chamberlain, $1,600, which sum is for the redemption of the following United States 6 per cent coupon bonds, issued under the act of March 3, 1865 (consols of 1865), namely: Bond No. 56743, for $100, included in the fifty-third call; bond No. 17626, for $500, included in the forty-ninth call; bond No. 83794, for $1,000, included in the fifty-third call, with interest from July 1, 1871, to the dates on which said bonds ceased to bear interest, said bonds and interest coupons attached, dated January 1, 1872, and subsequently, which are outstanding, having been lost by the said Chamberlain on or about January 5, 1872; but Ferdinand M. Holmes shall first file in the Treasury a bond in a penal sum equal to double the amount of principal of the bonds and the interest accrued thereon, with good and sufficient surety, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, with condition to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the redemption of the bonds and the payment of the accrued interest thereon.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN W. BAGGOTT.

The bill (H. R. 3223) for the relief of John W. Baggott was announced as next in order.

Mr. HUGHES. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

EVERETT H. CORSON.

The bill (H. R. 1358) for the relief of Everett H. Corson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Everett H. Corson, an employee of the Department of the Interior, General Land Office, $1,237, as full compensation for permanent injuries and damages received by him in an accident caused by a runaway, without any contributory negligence and while in the discharge of his official duties, on the 23d of

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

N. FERRO.

The bill (H. R. 1568) for the relief of N. Ferro was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, there does not seem to be any explanation of this bill at all. The bare statement is made in the report that the bill provides $872 to reimburse this man. I do not think we ought to get in the habit of passing such bills without any information concerning them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HUGHES. I object.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill

SARAH E. ELLIOTT.

The bill (H. R. 3238) for the relief of Sarah E. Elliott was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that $1,073 be paid to Sarah E. Elliott, to compensate her for the death of her husband, James K. P. Elliott, accidentally killed on April 10, 1901, while in the discharge of his duty in the service of the Government of the United States in the Mare Island Navy Yard.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1568) to correct the military record of Adolph F. Hitchler was announced as next in order.

Mr. HUGHES. I ask that that bill go over

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

EDWARD F. M'DERMOTT, ALIAS JAMES WILLIAMS.

The bill (H. R. 6145) for the relief of Edward F. McDermott, alias James Williams, was considered as in Committee of the

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 7, after the word "Infantry," to strike out "and was subsequently transferred to Company C, Eleventh Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry"; and, on page 2, line 1, after the word "pension," to insert "bounty, nor other emolument," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, Edward F. McDermott, who served as James Williams in Company C, Ninetieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, now a resident of New York, shall hereafter be held to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on the 24th day of October, 1864: Provided, That no pension, bounty, nor other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CANON CITY, COLO.

The bill (S. 4450) to provide for the erection of a public building at Canon City, Colo., upon a site heretofore acquired by the United States, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments.

The first amendment was, on line 6, after the word "suitable," to insert the word "fireproof."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 8, after the words "post office," to insert "the Department of Agriculture, and Civil Service Commission."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I desire to inquire if some Senator can tell us why this bill does not go in the omnibus public-buildings bill?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It very likely will go on that bill, because it is a Senate bill, and otherwise would not have much chance of passing the House at this session; but if the omnibus publicbuildings bill is considered, I want the sanction of the Senate as to this measure by having it pass the bill now. This site has already been purchased, and has been available for a number of years. This building is needed, and I should like to have the bill passed.

Mr. WALSH. I am simply trying to learn how it is that we pass an omnibus public-buildings bill——
Mr. SHAFROTH. We have not passed it yet, and I do not know whether it will be passed.

Mr. WALSH. I am trying to ascertain why we prepare an omnibus public-buildings bill and then pass special bills providing for the construction of particular public buildings.

Mr. HUGHES. I will say to the Senator that the reason why the omnibus public-buildings bill will not in all probability pass is because it is loaded down with items such as this. Here is a proposal to expend something like $80,000 to erect a public building in a town of 5,000 inhabitants

Mr. SHAFROTH. Seven thousand inhabitants, with receipts enough to justify it.

Mr. HUGHES. I am going to object to this bill in spite of that swarming population.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The population of Canon City was 5,000 and over, according to the United States census six years ago; and, while some States in the Union may not grow, I assure the Senator that Colorado is growing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. HUGHES. I will withhold the objection until the Senator makes his statement, provided he does not intend to make a long statement

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not desire to make a long statement. I recognize the fact that if an omnibus public-buildings bill is not enacted this bill will not go through, but here is a city that has been trying to get a public building for years. The Govhas been trying to get a public building for years. ernment has purchased a site there, and that site is lying there without any improvements whatever upon it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They want a sight of money to cover that

[Laughter.]

Mr. SHAFROTH. Evidently it was determined by the United States Congress that there should be a public building there, because they appropriated money for the site, and it seems to me that that site ought to be covered now.

Mr. HUGHES. Will the Senator accept the omnibus public-buildings bill as an amendment to this bill?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not want to take any chances of that

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. HUGHES. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF NAPOLEON B. GIDDINGS.

The bill (H. R. 8057) for the relief of the legal representatives of Napoleon B. Giddings was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be investigated the circumstances of the alleged taking from Napoleon B. Giddings, in January, 1847, at Santa Fe, N. Mex., and depositing with A. B. Dyer, lieutenant of ordnance, United States Army. by order of Sterling Price, colonel commanding the Army in New Mexico at that time, of 140 kegs of gunpowder, and to ascertain and determine the reasonable market value of such powder at that time and place, not to exceed the value of $1,950, and whether the same or any part thereof was ever returned or delivered back to said Giddings, and the final disposition of such powder; and if the same, or any part thereof, was never returned to or delivered back to said Giddings, and in the opinion of such Secretary the circumstances of the case render the United States liable for the value of such powder, then to certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount of the reasonable market value at that time and place of the amount of the reasonable market value at that time and place of the amount of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be paid to the legal representatives of said Napoleon B. Giddings the said amount so certified by the Secretary of War to be the reasonable market value of such powder as aforesaid.

S. E. BENNETT.

The bill (H. R. 11745) for the relief of S. E. Bennett was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $133.60 to S. E. Bennett, veterinary inspector, to reimburse him for expenditures made by him under the direction of the chief clerk of the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNA C. PARRETT.

The bill (H. R. 10173) for the relief of Anna C. Parrett was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Anna C. Parrett, dependent mother of Ralph G. Dusell, who lost his life by accidental drowning on July 13, 1915, while in the employ of the Biological Survey, $900, that being the amount of the annual salary which he was receiving from the department at the time of his death.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to know in what State the man was drowned?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator from Utah that the bill does not state.

Mr. SMOOT. I have a case that is exactly similar, of a man who while in the Government service was drowned in a river in the State of Idaho. I have written to the department in relation to the matter, but they state that they are not responsible in any way and report against the claim. Now, I want to know whether there is an adverse report from the department in this case; because if there is, I will know how to act in relation to the claim to which I have referred and shall ask the same report from the committee as is made in this case.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the report contains a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, and he does not report unfavorably upon the bill. The facts are—

Mr. SMOOT. Is it a favorable report?

Mr. HUGHES. The letter says there was an accidental drowning, I will say to the Senator, and that the man was drowned while in the performance of his duty. The Secretary draws no conclusions.

Mr. ROBINSON. The statement in the Secretary's letter, which is germane to the inquiry of the Senator from Utah, is as

Mr. Dusell's camp was pitched about 50 yards from the channel and on ground where under ordinary circumstances there was no danger from high waters. During the early evening of the 12th of July a light shower fell at camp, and on the morning of July 13 at about 4 a. m. the men were awakened by water in their tents, and in less than five minutes the entire camp, including tents and supplies, was carried away by the food. While attempting to reach higher ground, Mr. Dusell was carried away by the current, and two of the other men narrowly escaped drowning in trying to rescue him. Mr. Dusell was 21 years of age and had dependent upon him an invalid mother and three sisters, one of the sisters 17 years old, and the others, twins, 11 years old. Other than the salary and expenses due him from the Government at the time of his death, Mr. Dusell left no estate.

The facts are stated in the report, and I think the bill should

GERTRUDE BECHERER.

The bill (H. R. 3296) for the relief of Gertrude Becherer was announced as next in order, and the Secretary read the bill.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, there is distinctly an adverse report in this case. I hesitate to make objection, as I am not familiar with what the practice has been in regard to these matters, and my sympathies are with the survivors of employees who have been killed, but there seems to be an adverse report here. I read as follows:

A claim for compensation on account of his death was filed by Mrs. Becherer, under the provisions of the compensation act of May 30, 1908, but the same was disapproved by the Department of Commerce and Labor because the service in which the deceased was employed did not come within the scope of that act.

I think the bill had better go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed over.

IDA TURNER.

The bill (H. R. 14978) for the relief of Ida Turner was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $840 to Ida Turner, widow of Andrew F. Turner, late a guard at the United States penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kans., who, while in the discharge of his duties as guard, was stabbed to death by a prisoner.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 12135) to reimburse D. H. Carpenter, postmaster at Seddon, Ala., for money and stamps stolen from said post office at Seddon, Ala., and repaid by him to the Post Office Department, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HUGHES. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. The bill (H. R. 6267) to reimburse Tennie A. Anderson, postmaster at Maplewood, Fayette County, W. Va., for money orders and postage stamps stolen, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HUGHES. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LENA GARAGNON.

The bill (S. 6867) for the relief of Lena Garagnon was announced as next in order.

Mr. HUGHES. For the present I am going to object to that bill. I have not had a chance to look into it. Unless there is some explanation of the bill I will be compelled to object,

Mr. SHEPPARD. Has the Senator examined the report? Mr. HUGHES. I am trying to find it. I will read it while the Senator is explaining the bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. As I understand, Mr. President, this lady was run down in the streets of San Antonio by an artillery caisson, the horses attached to which became unmanageable. They threw the caisson against her carriage and disabled her and a companion who was riding with her. The War Department has examined the case and, I understand, if I remember correctly, has made a favorable report, deeming it a meritorious case.

Mr. HUGHES. Charles G. Treat, colonel of the Third Field Artillery, commanding, winds up his communication to the Commanding General of the Southern Department of the Army with the following statement:

My final judgment was that it was an unavoidable accident,

If we are going to adopt the theory that every time an unavoidable accident occurs, and the Government is in any way connected with it, it must necessarily be the sufferer and must pay under any and all circumstances, this would be a proper claim. I do not find here any recommendation from anybody, and unless there is some good grounds stated, I shall have to object to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I was under the impression that the department had favorably recommended it.

Mr. HUGHES. I will say to the Senator that I do not find any favorable recommendation from anybody, and I will ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ETHEL FREDERICKSON AND DAUGHTER.

The bill (S. 6868) for the relief of Ethel Frederickson and daughter Ethel, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HUGHES. That is the very same thing. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

TENNIE A. ANDERSON.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from New Jersey if he has examined the record in the case of Order of Business 780, House bill 6267? Did he object advisedly?

Mr. HUGHES. I objected advisedly. I was advised to object. Mr. CHILTON. That is a bill that has passed the House and was reported favorably by the Senate committee. I will ask the Senator if he will withdraw his objection so that I may take two minutes to explain it?

Mr. HUGHES. I shall be glad to do fhat.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia asks that we recur to Order of Business 780, House bill Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. CHILTON. In the first place, the bill involves only $152. The claimant is a poor woman who can not afford to lose this money. She was the postmistress at Maplewood, W. Va., and the postal funds were kept in a drawer in a desk which happened not to be locked; but the room in which the post office was kept was securely locked, had a good, strong door upon it, and entrance was made into the post office through the ceiling above. They bored a hole and in that way got a start, cut out a section of the ceiling, let ladders or a rope down, and got into the building in that way.

Of course the little desk or drawer in which the money was kept would have been no protection against that kind of a burglary. They took the money. That is the admitted fact. Now, this case has been passed by the House; and it does seem to me that the Senate is engaged in a pretty small business to withhold from a poor woman money taken from the post office of the Government under circumstances of that kind.

Of course, the Post Office Department has a regular way of reporting that if she had kept the drawer locked or the desk locked she might not have lost the money. That is ridiculous here, however. Burglars who go up to the top of a building, bore a hole down, and force an entrance into the post office would not have paid any attention to the little desk that she had there if it had been locked.

Those are the circumstances, and there is no use in putting it off. Let us say she shall not have it or let us give it to her ow. I ask for a vote.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, there is a postal regulation to the effect that all postal employees, under certain circumstances, such as were present on this occasion, shall keep the drawer or receptacle containing the money locked. They ought to know and undoubtedly do know that provision pretty thoroughly, and they know that if they do not lock up the money and protect it they will be held responsible.

It is not simply the amount of money that is involved in this case. If we are going to wipe out these restrictions which the Government, out of its years and years and years of experience in handling these matters, has seen fit to throw around its own money we will be confronted with a flood of claims from retiring postmasters with reference to money stolen or alleged to have been stolen.

I am very sorry for the woman who lost this money, but she ought to send her claim for sympathy to the man who took the The United States Government had nothing to do money.

with it.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I have this to say: The postoffice regulations are made for sneak thieves and not for burglars and train robbers. Of course, that is the law. She would not be here if she could get reimbursement within the postal regulations. All I ask is, let us have a vote on it. If the Senate does not want to give it to her, let her know it now, but it is now ready. The bill has been passed by the House, and it is up here, and whatever the Senate does will be the end of it. Why put off these things and keep forever holding out hope to these people? Let us get rid of it, one way or the other.

Mr. HUGHES. This involves only $141 and $10.77.
Mr. CHILTON. One hundred and fifty-two dollars.
Mr. HUGHES. One hundred and fifty-two dollars; but the next case, under precisely similar circumstances, may involve

Mr. CHILTON: If the circumstances are the same, the Senate ought to pay it.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not believe they ought to pay it. Mr. CHILTON. Well, let the Senate decide and not the Sena-The case is here.

Mr. HUGHES. I am perfectly willing to submit it to the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am going to object, and I will tell the Senator why. The postmaster at Morgan City—and there are several others in the State—not only had the money in his safe, but it was locked, and the safe was broken into and the money stolen; and yet I have had an adverse report for the last four or five years upon repaying to the postmaster at Morgan City $113, I think, that was stolen. Until we decide upon treating all these claims alike, I shall object to any consideration of this one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.
Mr. CHILTON, Mr. President, I have a notion to move to take up the bill notwithstanding the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that would not be in order under the unanimous-consent agreement. Mr. CHILTON. Well, I did not make the motion.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1289) for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated, mislabeled, or misbranded linseed oil, turpentine, or paint was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, that is a bill of 13 pages.

There is nobody here to explain it. I ask that it go over.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let that bill go over. I want to look into it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS IN HAWAII.

The bill (S. 4360) authorizing the President to exchange land set aside for military purposes in the Territory of Hawaii for private land was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the President of the United States to exchange public lands set aside for military purposes in the Territory of Hawaii, where not needed for such purposes, for private lands of practically equal value in the same Territory that are needed for military purposes, the lands so acquired by exchange to be given thereby the same status as lands set aside from the public domain by the President for military purposes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KENESAW MEMORIAL ASSOCIATION

The bill (H. R. 9547) authorizing the acceptance by the United States Government from the Kenesaw Memorial Association of Illinois of a proposed gift of land on the Kenesaw battle field, in the State of Georgia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of War to accept from the Kenesaw Memorial Association, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, a gift of certain land, with all the improvements thereon, comprising a part of the Kenesaw battile field, said land being described as lot No. 116 and the east half of lot No. 107 in the nineteenth district and second section, in the county of Cobb and State of Georgia, and upon which a monument has been erected to certain organizations that participated in the fighting on Kenesaw Mountain: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States in carrying out the provisions of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN B. HOOVER.

The bill (H. R. 5262) for the relief of John B. Hoover was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to John B. Hoover $145.30, being the amount expended by him out of his personal funds for medical services of agency physician during his incumbency as superintendent at Fort McDermit Indian School, from July 1, 1909, to October 15, 1909.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 12426) to authorize mining for metalliferous minerals on Indian reservations was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. The bill (S. 583) relating to the disposal of coal and mineral deposits in Indian lands was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. The bill (H. R. 7763) for the relief of Stephen J. Simpson was announced as next in order.

Mr. HUGHES. I will ask to have that bill go over unless there is an explanation of it. I do not propose to let any of these bills pass restoring to a deserter an honorable-discharge status on the record unless there is an explanation. I do not find any report with the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there an objection?

Mr. HUGHES. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The bill (H. R. 18181) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let that go over.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will let that bill pass to-night. It is a House omnibus pension bill that has been here for a long time.

he amendment was agreed to. The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1092) for the establishment of a probation system in the United States courts, except in the District of Columbia, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES. Let that go over.
Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President—
Mr. JONES. I have examined the bill, and I do not want it taken up at this time.

Mr. WALSH subsequently said: Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Washington if we may hope to get consideration for the probation bill the next time it is reached on the calendar?

Mr. JONES. I have examined the bill rather hurriedly tonight, and I do not want to have it passed without examining into it a little further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 55) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be

The bill (H. R. 14777) to provide for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Cal., and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, it would be impossible to consider this bill to-night. I therefore ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the Senate stands in recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning

Mr. SMOOT. Is it a recess or an adjournment? I thought it was to be an adjournment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the agreement was for a Thereupon (at 11 o'clock p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, February 3, 1917, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 2, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God Almighty, ever present in the hearts of men; swayed by Thy influence, upheld by the power of Thy majesty, help us with perfect faith and confidence to go forward to the grave issues of the hour, assured that all will be well; for Thine is the kingdom and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the leave granted to Representative HUMPHREY, of Washington, be extended for an indefinite period on account of illness

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 18542, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and ask unanimous consent to take the same from the Speaker's table, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to call attention to amendment No. 61, on page 120, and inquire whether or not in the event that amendment be not eliminated in conference the House will have an opportunity to vote separately on it? It is in regard to postmasters being placed within the classified civil service.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman desire to move to concur in the amendment?

Mr. STEENERSON. I desire to disagree.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will state to both gentlemen that I shall insist upon the right to move to concur in that Senate amendment, and have a vote upon it in the House. That will take care of the proposition of the gentleman.

Mr. STEENERSON. I wanted to be sure that it would not be agreed to unless the House had an opportunity to vote upon it separately.

Mr. MANN. I am going to ask the House to vote upon it to-day, if this bill comes up to-day. Mr. FITZGERALD. A number of gentleman have gone away.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman from Minnesota that the conferees of course would give the House an opportunity to vote upon the amendment, if it is not asked for to-day, as the gentleman from Illinois suggests he intends to do.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, as one of the conferees, I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that so far as I am concerned, and I believe I state the position of the chairman of the subcommittee, the conferees would not agree to that amendment until it is submitted to the House.

Mr. MANN. That is what I am afraid of. I think it will be very easily receded from by the other body, and I propose to have a vote on it before the conferees get a whack at it if I can, and that is said without any reflection at all upon the conferees

Mr SISSON In a matter involving the rights of every Member of the House, in a matter in which at the present time every Democratic Member is interested, and in which at some day in the very far distant future the Republicans may be interested, I would not undertake to decide it myself, in view of the fact that it has never been submitted to the House for its consideration one way or the other.

Mr. MANN. I want to help the gentleman out by having it submitted to the House.

Mr. GARNER. To-day?
Mr. MANN. To-day. I want to know how many of these promises made before election were sincere and how many were

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to move to concur in Senate amendment No. 5 with an amendment. That is the amendment in regard to clerk hire.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to take the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill from the Speaker's table, disagree to all of the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am willing to grant the request, so far as I am concerned, to take the bill from the Speaker's table and lay it before the House for consideration in the House.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. BORLAND. Would it be in order at this time to move to concur in amendment No. 61?

The SPEAKER. Nothing is in order except the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois indicate just what amendments he desires to

Mr. MANN. After you get the bill before the House I think there are two or three amendments that gentlemen desire to call attention to.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. 'I thought we might now disagree to all of those amendments as to which there is no desire to have debate and then take the bill up for the consideration of the other amendments.

Mr. MANN. I think the other way is a simpler way to get at it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take the bill from the Speaker's table.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Can the gentleman from Illinois not indicate the amendments he desires to discuss, so as to eliminate long delay? The naval appropriation bill is ready to be taken

Mr. MANN. I desire that the House shall have an opportunity to vote upon amendment No. 20, on page 37, providing for an assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury, before it is finally agreed to in conference. I do not ask for a vote upon that this morning. I also think that the House should have an opportunity to vote upon amendment No. 71, which is in respect to increased compensation of clerks, unless the Senate recedes from their amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman means the Smoot amendment?

Mr. MANN. Unless the Senate recedes from the Smoot amendment I desire that the House shall have an opportunity to vote upon it. These are the only two amendments to which I desire to call attention, except No. 61, where I shall move to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Which is that, the post-office amendment?

Mr. MANN. Yes.
Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will state to the gentleman the conferees will give the House an opportunity to vote upon those amendments.

Mr. GARNER. Why not disagree to all the amendments except No. 61 and take a vote and send the bill to conference?

Mr. MANN. As far as I am concerned I am perfectly willing to do so.

Mr. FOSTER. There is amendment No. 58 in reference to the Board of Education-

Mr. SIMS. I desire to offer an amendment to agree to amendment No. 5 with an amendment.

Mr. MANN. I think myself the better way is the way I suggested, to bring the bill before the House to be considered in the House and then ask whether any gentleman desires to withhold temporary disagreement to a Senate amendment and disagree to three or four at once and easily dispose of those later, before getting into a controversy over a whole lot of them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to disagree to all the Senate amendments except-

Mr. MANN. Make that request after we get the bill before the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If we get it before the House, we get into a discussion—

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take the bill from the Speaker's table and that the House disagree to all the Senate amendments except Senate amendments Nos. 5 and 61.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the bill be taken from the Speaker's table and that all the Senate amendments except Nos. 5 and 61 be disagreed to. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to object, I want to bring the attention of the gentleman to amendment 58. That amendment presents new matter and also prescribes punishment by a fine and imprisonment. I should like to know if the gentleman is informed as to the purpose of this amendment.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. What page?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Page 103, amendment No. 58. Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will state to the gentleman that amendment, as I understand it, was adopted on account of a custom which has grown up— Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It has not been adopted, as I understand.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I mean by the Senate. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Adopted on one side?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. On account of a custom that has grown up in the Bureau of Education which resulted in putting upon the pay roll outsiders—that is, men not officially connected with the Government-and giving them a nominal salary of, say, dollar a year. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Men and women?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Men and women, as I understand it, and this amendment was adopted by the Senate for the

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I wish to say to the gentleman while the practice may be subject to question—

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is absolutely indefensible.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from New York may have that opinion about it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can demonstrate it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. My attention has been drawn to the fact that the Chief of the Bureau of Education has been obtaining the services of some expert persons who have been writing on topics useful to the people, and that they have been paid a nominal salary of $1 per annum, and have been obtaining the franking privilege. Am I right about that?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is the charge that has been

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, does the gentleman know or can he inform the House whence come these charges that the practice has been unfair to the Government?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make that charge now.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is capable of making most any charge.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And of proving all the charges I make; not like the gentleman from Philadelphia, who makes charges and can not prove them.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that practice is being followed and has been followed for quite a number of years, and the question naturally arises whether or not it is a proper policy to permit outside parties to write up their own personal and individual views upon educational problems of a controversial nature and send them over the country at the expense of the Government, under the franking privilege.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If they are merely individual views, that would be reprehensible; but is it not a fact that up to the present time no views written by these individuals have gone out that have not had the approval of the Commissioner of the Bureau of Education, and is it not a fact they have been published under his direction?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I take it that in all cases these publications have been sent out officially, with the approval of the Commissioner of Education, but it is very questionable whether the people should be put to the expense of exploiting the views of individuals in private life, who are under no official responsibility to the people.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask the gentleman if the pamphlet entitled "Care of the Baby" was sent out in this way?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That was a very proper and wery useful pamphlet, which has gone all over the United States.
Mr. FOSTER. That came from the Children's Bureau.
Mr. FITZGERALD. That comes from the Children's Bureau.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. My attention has been called to the fact that some very worthy persons, public-spirited persons, have been dedicating a great deal of their private service to the Bureau of Education. It may be that some of them have been exploiting their personal views, but many of them have undoubtedly been rendering a self-sacrificing service to the Government. I call the gentleman's attention to this fact because the fanflare seems to have arisen in another body and to have been agitated by a person named Allen, who apparently has had some association with some of the persons who have been making this complaint.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield? The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr.

Byans] yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield for just a moment?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Illi-

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if it is not a fact-

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, pardon me a coment. I think I had the floor. The gentleman from Missouri had asked a question, and I was about to answer. I reserve

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. MEEKER. I simply wanted to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania reserves the right to object.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I am informed that there was a general impression on the part of a great many Members that the day would be consumed in a general discussion of the naval appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. That is true.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And I have no disposition to call this bill up and embarrass any Members who may be absent under that impression, and for that reason I withdraw my request for the present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee withdraws his request.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 18453, the Indian appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Indian appropriation bill, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees: Mr. Ste-PHENS of Texas, Mr. Carter of Oklahoma, and Mr. Campbell.

PROHIBITION IN ALASKA.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Hous-

TON] is recognized.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on the Territories to call up the bill (S. 7963) to prohibit the manufacture or sale of alcoholic liquors in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes. The Committee on the Territories have considered and reported a similar bill and have recommended it for passage.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the bill

S. 7963, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Houston] stating that there is a similar bill on the House Calendar. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 7963) to prohibit the manufacture or sale of alcoholic liquors in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CALDWELL. Under what rule of the House is this bill called up?

The SPEAKER. Under Rule XXIV. The bill was read, as follows:

The SPEAKER. Under Rule XXIV.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the 1st day of January, A. D.

1918, it shall be unlawful for any person, house, association, firm, company, club, or corporation, his, its, or their agents, officers, clerks, or servants, to manufacture, sell, give, or otherwise dispose of any intoxicating liquor or alcohol of any kind in the Territory of Alaska, or to have in his or its possession or to transport any intoxicating liquor acohol in the Territory of Alaska unless the same was procured and is so possessed and transported as hereinafter provided.

Whenever the term "liquor," "Intoxicating liquor," or "intoxicating liquors" is used in this act it shall be deemed to include whisky, brandy, rum, gin, wine, ale, porter, beer, cordials, hard or fermented cider, alcoholic bitters, ethyl alcohol, and all mait liquors, including all alcoholic compounds classed by the United States Internal-Revenue Bureau as "compound liquors": Provided, That this act shall not apply to methyl or wood alcohol.

That any person or persons, or any house, company, association, club, or corporation, his, its, or their agents, officers, clerks, or servants, who shall, directly or indirectly, violate the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $1,000 or shall be imprisoned for a period of not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Sec. 2. That before a pharmacist shall be authorized to transport pure alcohol for scientific, artistic, or mechanical purposes or for compounding or preparing medicines, as provided by this act, he shall procure a permit for that purpose from the judge of the district court in the division where the applicant resides.

Sec. 3. That to procure such permit a pharmacist shall make and file with the clerk of the said district court a statement in writing, under oath, stating that he

"Dated this ____ day of _____, 19____."

"Judge of the District Court."

SEC. 5. That said permit mentioned in section 4 hereof shall be issued upon forms supplied by the clerk of the district court, and shall contain the permit, a copy of the application for permit, and a copy of the provisions of section 6 of this act, and shall be issued under the seal of the said court and shall be void for transportation purposes after six months from the date of issuance. The clerk of said district court shall keep in a separate book provided for that purpose a record of permits issued under this act, wherein shall be entered the date and the number thereof, the person to whom issued, and the purpose for which issued.

which issued.

Sec. 6. That said permit shall be attached to and remain affixed in a conspicuous place upon any package or parcel containing pure alcohol imported into or shipped in the Territory of Alaska, and when so affixed shall authorize any common carrier or any person operating a boat or vehicle for the transportation of goods, wares, or merchandise within the Territory of Alaska to transport, ship, or carry such pure alcohol. Any person so transporting such alcohol shall, before the delivery of such package or parcel, cancel said permit and so deface the same that it can not be used again.

Sec. 7. That all express companies, railroad companies, public or

SEC. 7. That all express companies, railroad companies, public or private carriers, are hereby required to keep a separate book in which shall be entered, immediately upon receipt thereof, the name of the person to whom pure alcohol is shipped, from what city or town and State the same was shipped, and the name of the shipper, the amount and kind received, the date when received, the date when delivered, and to whom delivered, after which record there shall be a blank space in which the consignee shall be required to sign his own name, in ink, before such pure alcohol is delivered to such consignee, which book shall be open to the inspection of the public at any time during business hours of the company, and shall not be removed from the place where the same is required to be kept. A copy of entries upon any such record herein provided to be kept, when certified to by the agent of any express or railroad company or any public or private carrier in charge of the same shall constitute prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated in any court of the Territory.

It shall be unlawful for any person, house, association, firm, com-

It shall be unlawful for any person, house, association, firm, company, club, or corporation, his, its, or their agents, officers, clerks, or servants, to ship alcohol or intoxicating liquor to a false or fictitious name or person, or any person to receive or receipt for alcohol or intoxicating liquor in a false or fictitious name.

Sec. 8. That any common carrier or any person operating a boat or vehicle for the transportation of goods, wares, or merchandise may accept for transportation and may transport to any place within the Territory of Alaska shipments of wine for sacramental purposes when there is attached to such shipment a certificate in substantially the following form:

SEC. 9. That whenever a shipment of wines for sacramental purposes shall have been transported for delivery within the Territory of Alaska the delivering agent of the transportation company must refuse to deliver the same unless it is accompanied by the certificate prescribed in section 8 of this act, and then only to the person to whom the same is addressed or upon his written order. The transportation company must keep a record of all shipments and deliveries of wines for sacramental purposes and must preserve for a period of one year after their receipt all certificates accompanying such shipments and all written orders upon which deliveries may be made. Such records must be open to the inspection of the public at any time during office hours.

SEC. 10. That any person who shall desire to purchase pure alcohol for scientific, artistic, or mechanical purposes shall apply to the district court aforesaid for a permit for that purpose. To procure such permit he shall make and file with the clerk of the district court a statement in writing, under oath, stating that he desires to purchase pure alcohol for scientific, artistic, or mechanical purposes as provided by this act, and giving his name and residence and the place at which such pure alcohol is to be used.

SEC. 11. That if the judge of said district court is satisfied of the good faith of the applicant he shall issue to said applicant a permit to purchase a reasonable amount of pure alcohol for scientific, artistic, or mechanical purposes. The original of said permit shall have attached thereto a duplicate copy, and each shall be numbered with the same number and be in substantially the following form:

"DISTRICT COURT, "Territory of Alaska, ss:"

"DISTRICT COURT, ____ DIVISION, ____ Territory of Alaska, ss:

"______, residing at ______, is hereby permitted to purchase pure alcohol in the amount of _______, (here insert quantity), to be used for scientific, artistic, or mechanical purposes. Sec. 12. That the permit mentioned in section 11 shall authorize the applicant to purchase and any pharmaciet to sell and eliver to him the quantity named in the said permit. The permit shall be canceled, kept, and retained on file for at least one year by the pharmacist so selling said pure alcohol, and the copy of said permit shall be canceled, kept, and retained on file for at least one year by the pharmacist so selling said pure alcohol, and shall so remain upon said receptacle so long as the same shall contain alcohol. Said permit and copy shall only authorize one purchase and sale. It shall be unlawful for any pharmacist to sell pure alcohol without the permit and copy shall only authorize one purchase and sale. It shall be unlawful for any pharmacist to sell pure alcohol without the permit and copy shall only authorize one purchase and sale. It shall be unlawful for any person owning, leasing, or occupying or in possession or control of any premises, building, vehicle, car, or boat to knowingly permit thereon or therein the manufacture, transportation, disposal, or the keeping of intoxicating liquor with intent to manufacture, transport, or dispose of the same in violation of the same same person who shall in or upon appropriate of the same same sam to take into his possession and safely keep, to be produced as evidence when required, all alcoholic liquors and all the means of dispensing the same, also all the paraphernalia or part of the paraphernalia of a barrom or other alcoholic liquor establishment, and any United States internal-revenue tax receipt or certificate for the manufacture or sale of alcoholic liquor, effective for the period of time covering the alleged offense, and forthwith report all the facts to the district attorney or his deputy, and such alcoholic liquor or the means for dispensing same, or the paraphernalia of a barroom or other alcoholic liquor establishment, or any United States internal-revenue tax receipt or certificate for the sale of alcoholic liquor, effective as aforesaid, shall be prima facie evidence of the violation of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 18. That it shall not be necessary, in order to convict any person, company, house, association, copartnership, club, or corporation, his, its, or their agents, officers, clerks, or servants of manufacturing, importing, or selling alcoholic liquors, to prove the actual manufacturing, importing, sale, delivery of, or payment for any alcoholic liquors, but the evidence of having or keeping them in hand, stored or deposited, taking orders for, or offering to sell or barter, or exchanging them for goods or merchandise, or giving them away, shall be sufficient to convict; ror shall it be necessary in a warrant, information, or indictment to specify the particular kind of alcoholic liquor which is made the subject of a charge of violation of this act.

SEC. 19. That all houses, boats, boathouses, buildings, clubrooms, and places of every description, including drug stores, where alcoholic liquors are manufactured, stored, sold, or vended, given away, or furnished contrary to law, including those in which clubs, orders, or associations sell, barter, give away, distribute, or device whatever, as provided in this act, shall be held, taken, and deemed common and public nuisance, sha the sale or keeping of such liquor contrary to law, as the court may determine.

Sec. 20. That any United States district attorney for the Territory of Alaska may maintain an action in equity in the name of the United States to abate and perpetually enjoin such a nuisance as defined in the preceding section. No bond shall be required. Any person violating the terms of any injunction granted in such proceedings shall be punished for contempt by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment in the Federal jail for not more than six months, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

Sec. 21. That if a tenant of a building or tenement is convicted of using such premises or any part thereof or maintaining a common nuisance, as hereinbefore defined, or of knowingly permitting such use by another, the conviction of such use shall render void the lease under which he holds and shall cause the right of possession to revert to the owner or lessor, who may, without process of law, make immediate entry upon the premises, or may avail himself of the remedy provided for the forcible detention thereof.

Sec. 22. That anyone who knowingly permits any building owned or leased by him or under his control, or any part thereof, to be used in maintaining a common nuisance hereinbefore described in section 19 of this act, neglects to take all reasonable measures to eject therefrom the person so using the same, shall be deemed guilty of assisting in maintaining such nuisance.

Sec. 23. That no property right of any kind shall exist in alcoholic liquors or beverages illegally manufactured, received, possessed, or stored under this act, and in all such cases the liquors are forfeited to the United States and may be searched for and seized and ordered to be destroyed by the court after a conviction, when such liquors have been seized for use as evidence, or upon satisfactory evidence to the court presented by the district attorney that such liquors have been seized for use as evidence, or upon satisfactory ev

SEC. 24. That any person convicted of a violation of any of the provisions of this act where the punishment therefor is not herein specifically provided shall be punished as provided by section 1 of this

SEC. 25. That in case a pharmacist is convicted under the provisions of this act the judge of the district court, in addition to the penalty provided in this act, may, in his discretion, revoke his license to practice pharmacy, and thereafter he shall not receive a license for one tice pharmacy, and thereafter he shall not receive a license for one year.

SEC. 26. That the issuance by the United States of any internal revenue special tax stamp or receipt to any person as a dealer in intoxicating liquors shall be prima facie evidence of the sale of intoxicating liquors by such person during the time the stamp or receipt is in force and effect.

A copy of such stamp or receipt or of the record of the issuance thereof, certified to by a United States internal-revenue officer having charge of such record, is admissible as evidence in like case and with like effect as the original stamp or receipt.

SEC. 27. That it shall be the duty of the governor of Alaska, the United States marshals and their deputies, mayors, and members of town councils, town marshals, and police officers of all incorporated towns in Alaska, all Federal game wardens, agents of the Bureau of Fisheries and Forestry Service, customs collectors and their deputies, employees of the Bureau of Education, prosecuting attorneys and their deputies, and all other Federal and Territorial executive officers to enforce the provisions of this act.

SEC. 28. That prosecutions for violations of the provisions of this act shall be on information filed by any such officer before any justice of the peace or district judge, or upon indictment by any grand jury of the Territory of Alaska, and said United States district attorney or this deputy shall file such information upon the presentation to him or his assistants of sworn information that the law has been violated: and in such prosecutions anyone making a false oath to any material fact shall be deemed guilty of perjury.

SEC. 29. That any person, company, or corporation who shall import or carry liquors into or upon the Territorial waters of Alaska in or upon any steamship, steamboat, vessel, boat, or other water craft, or shall permit the same to be so imported or carried into or upon said waters, except under the provisions of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon convi

SEC. 30. That in addition to the power now exercised the judges of the district courts of Alaska may grant liquor licenses for any period of time less than one year upon a pro rata of the license fee for one year, but not to extend beyond the 1st day of January, 1918, under the provisions of law now in force there so far as the same are applicable.

SEC. 31. That the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska may pass additional legislation in aid of the enforcement of this act not inconsistent with its provisions.

SEC. 32. That in the interpretation of this act words of the singular number shall be deemed to include their plurals, and words of the masculine gender shall be deemed to include the feminine, as the case may be may be.

Src. 33. That this act shall be in full force and effect on and after the 1st day of January, 1918, and all laws and parts of laws inconsistent herewith be, and they are hereby, repealed as of that date.

The SPEAKER. The question is-

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SLAYDEN. To learn the parliamentary status. I could not hear, but I understand the gentleman proposes to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill 7963 and pass it. Is that the request?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes, sir.
Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, it is a very extraordinary bill, a very extraordinary invasion of the rights of individuals, and I would like to know of the gentleman if we can not have some discussion of it?

Mr. HOUSTON. I will state to the gentleman that it is not my intention to try to cut off discussion. I would be willing to have a reasonable amount of it, even willing to have amendments offered. I do not propose to cut off anything of that sort. Of course, we do not want to have a great deal of time

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The geutleman will state it.
Mr. SLAYDEN. Is it in order to take up this bill?
The SPEAKER. Of course it is. The status of it is this: The gentleman said he was not listening at the time.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied with the statement as to the status of it. I simply was not able to hear.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the status so that everybody can understand. Clause 2 of Rule XXIV states:

House bills with Senate amendments which do not require considera-tion in a Committee of the Whole may be at once disposed of as the House may determine, as may also Senate bills substantially the same as House bills already favorably reported by a committee of the House and not required to be considered in the Committee of the Whole.

Now, the Chair did not have time to examine these two long bills. He took the word of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Houston] that these bills are substantially the same; and if so, this bill is in order.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I have no doubt if the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Houston] says that, it is true. That was not But I did want to see that there was some little time for the discussion of it.

The SPEAKER. There is no trouble about that. If some gentleman will make a suggestion about the time, the suggestion may be agreed to.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I just want to suggest to the gentleman from Texas that the Alaska people have voted on this proposition, and it was carried more than 2 to 1.

Mr. MANN. That is not the question.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I would state to the gentle-man from Texas [Mr. Slayden] that I am willing to fix a time for discussion and for offering amendments. I am not disposed to want to cut off discussion on amendments, even.

Mr. GARNER rose. The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise? Mr. GARNER. Under the rules of the House, as I understand it, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Houston] has an hour in his own right.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair just stated.

Mr. GARNER. If he desires to yield to my colleague from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] or the gentleman from Oklahoma, he can do so, to offer amendments, or discuss the bill, or otherwise conduct themselves, in his hour?

The SPEAKER. Within the hour they can debate this ques tion. Without the previous question being moved, they could do so for the next 10 weeks. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. If he yields to anybody to offer an amendment, he loses the floor thereby.

Mr. HOUSTON. I want to make this statement now, in order to be candid and fair. I have no disposition to cut off debate or opportunity for amendment. I may want to move the previous question later on, in order to close the debate. Now a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. I can yield time out of my hour?

The SPEAKER. For debate.

Mr. HOUSTON. After amendments are offered, have I lost the hour?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] just warned the gentleman. The gentleman probably did not hear him, and the Chair will state it over again. If the gentleman from Tennessee yields the floor for amendments, he loses the floor. He can yield for debate but not for amendments.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, how much time has the gentleman to permit full discussion of the bill?

Mr. HOUSTON. I am willing to make it an hour on a side, or half an hour

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, as the naval appropria-tion bill is ready and the committee is ready to take it up, I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York raises the question of consideration, and the question is whether the House will now consider that bill. Those in favor will say aye"; those opposed "no."

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. GARNER. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded. Those in favor of considering this Alaskan bill at the present time will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Eightyfour gentlemen have risen.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. If the House should refuse to consider this bill and should proceed to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill, on the completion of that bill would it be in order then to call up this bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it could be called by this process, by which it has been called up this morning.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent that I may make a personal statement for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, we were dividing, as I understand. I make the point of order that that would not be in order. Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me explain the situation.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama object? Mr. BURNETT. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama objects. Those opposed to the consideration of this bill will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] On this vote the ayes are 84 and the noes are 64.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eighty-six gentlemen are present, not a quorum. Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of considering this bill at this time when their names are called will answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. BRITTEN. If the nays are successful on this roll call, will the naval bill then be in order?

The SPEAKER. It will. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 240, nays 104, answered "present" 1, not voting 88, as follows: VEAS 240

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded. The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors. The House determines to consider this Alaskan bill at this time. Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I stated to the House that I was willing to have some time for the discussion of this matter and would not make any attempt to cut off amendments. want to be perfectly candid and frank and to say to the House that I do not feel as generous in regard to that matter now: the parliamentary situation has changed from what I expected, and, after all, I do not feel that that is necessary.

This is a bill to prohibit the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes. In 1915 the Territorial Legislature of Alaska passed an act submitting to the voters of the Territory for them to determine the question whether they wanted to prohibit the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors. That election was held on the 7th of November last, and as a result of it the voters of Alaska by a majority of 3,527, or by a vote of almost 2 to 1, voted in favor of prohibiting the manufacture and sale of alcoholic drinks in

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. HOUSTON. I do not yield for the present. The people of Alaska having voted on this question, and having spoken in no uncertain terms in regard to their wishes in the matter, the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. Wickersham] introduced into this House a bill for the purpose of carrying out the wishes and views of the people as expressed in that election. This bill was worked upon by the Committee on the Territories and considered at some length. We had hearings, having before and considered at some length. We had hearings, having before us different people from Alaska. We had before us members of the legislature of that Territory. All of them approved this bill. We have letters from the governor of Alaska approving this bill. So far as we get it, the almost unanimous expression that we have received from the Territory of Alaska is in favor of this bill.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes.
Mr. MANN. The House bill, substantially similar to the Senate bill now under consideration, was introduced by the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. WICKERSHAM]? Mr. HOUSTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And reported to the House substantially without any change whatever-a slight change of the verbiage in one

Mr. HOUSTON. Does the gentleman mean reported to the House without change from the form in which it was introduced?

Mr. MANN.

Mr. HOUSTON. Oh, no. It was changed in many respects.

Mr. MANN. The bill that was reported to the House?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes. That bill was considered by the Committee on the Territories for a number of days, and quite a number of amendments were made, and after we had perfected the bill there were so many changes in it that we thought it better that it should be reintroduced, so the Delegate from Alaska reintroduced the bill in form in which it had been perfected by the committee.

Mr. MANN. The Delegate introduced the bill that was reported to the House by the committee, and I assume took the responsibility of being in favor of the bill which he introduced, Mr. HOUSTON. I think that is a very fair presumption.

Mr. MANN. So that the bill as it now comes before the House received in advance the approval of the Delegate from Alaska by the introduction by him of the House bill that was reported to the House by the committee. That is correct, is it

Mr. HOUSTON. If I follow the gentleman correctly, that is right.

Mr. MANN. So that if anybody is to be criticized, it will be the Delegate from Alaska, who will have to take his chances before the people of Alaska.

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes; and I think the Delegate may felicitate himself upon the fact that, judging from the expressions of opinion and the reports that have come from Alaska, the people there are heartily in accord with him and in full sympathy with this measure. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON. I prefer not to yield just now. I want to call attention to the fact that this bill is what is called a bone-dry

It is a bill to prevent the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the Territory of Alaska. I believe that this bill will accomplish that purpose. I believe it will prevent the manufacture and sale, and that is a very important thing for that Territory. Its provisions may be considered drastic somewhat, but they are complete and ample to carry out the pur-poses of real and genuine prohibition. It is not subject to the criticism that is often made against prohibition measures and prohibitionists that they are in favor of prohibition that will prohibit the poor man, the man without means, from getting intoxicating liquor, but that the man with money, the man with ample wealth, can secure transportation and get it. This bill absolutely applies the same rule to all and one alike—the man who loves liquor and is able to get it shipped to him and the men who are not able to do this are put upon the same footing. The man who sends to another State to get his liquor can not exercise that privilege in Alaska because the provisions of the bill prevent it.

Among the provisions in this bill are many similar to the prohibition laws of the State of Idaho. Several sections are similar to the sections in what is known as the Sheppard bill lately passed by the Senate. you may call a bone-dry bill. Take it all together, it is what I want to call attention to some of the evidence we had in support of this by the people of Alaska. I call attention to a letter signed by a senator of the Territorial legislature, and also by a member of the house of representatives in the Territorial legislature. I shall not take the time to read these letters, but I will ask that they be inserted as part of my remarks.

The letter is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 1, 1917.

Hon. W. C. Houston, Chairman Committee on Territories, House of Representatives.

Chairman Committee on Territories, House of Representatives.

Deár Sir: We, the undersigned members of the Legislature of Alaska, being in Washington, respectfully urge upon you the immediate passage of the prohibition law for Alaska. We have examined the bill which has just passed the Senate, S. 7963, and we approve it, and we think the people of Alaska are in favor of a bone-dry prohibition law, such as this is, and we earnestly recommend its passage by the House of Representatives. The vote was not so much against saloons in Alaska as it was against alcoholic liquor.

Respectfully,

DAN A. SUTHERLAND.

DAN A. SUTHERLAND,
Member of the Territorial Senate.
JAMES P. DALY,
Member of the Territorial Legislature.

We also had letters from the governor, and we had members of the Territorial senate before the committee when we were having hearings in this case. We had before us some of the temperance workers and speakers who canvassed the Territory of Alaska before the election November 7, 1916. Some ladies were before the committee who were interested in this work and are very familiar with conditions up there, and who say they know the sentiment of the people, and that they indorse this bill.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. HOUSTON. Certainly.
Mr. GORDON. Who fixes the qualifications of the voters in

Mr. HOUSTON. The qualifications are fixed by Congress.

Mr. GORDON. Do both men and women vote up there? Mr. HOUSTON. Yes.

What was the total vote in the election? Mr. GORDON.

Mr. HOUSTON. It was almost two to one. I quoted the numbers a little while ago.

Mr. GORDON. That is, the vote of men and women in the Territory.

Mr. HOUSTON. The vote was 7,958 dry and 4,431 wet, and that was a very large vote.

Mr. GALLAGHER. How many of those votes were cast by Mr. HOUSTON. I can not tell the gentleman, but it was the largest vote ever polled in the Territory of Alaska.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON. I will.

Mr. FESS. Under the present law, could the wish of the people of Alaska, as expressed in the election, be carried into effect without this legislation?

Mr. HOUSTON. I am glad the gentleman asked that question. I was just coming to it. Under the organic law passed by Congress the question of regulating the traffic and sale of alcoholic liquors is reserved to Congress. Here is a section that I will give from the organic act:

Nor shall intoxicating liquor be manufactured or sold except under such regulations and restrictions as Congress shall provide.

The people of Alaska are looking for Congress to pass this legislation. They are anxious to have this legislation. It was submitted to them on the 7th of November, at the time of the general election. They got an expression from the people of Alaska, and now they expect Congress to give them the legislation.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. HOUSTON. Yes.
Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman says this is the largest vote ever cast in Alaska; does he happen to know what the vote was for the Delegates to Congress?

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not; but there is a statement in the hearings that this is the largest vote ever cast, and I take it that it is true

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield? Mr. HOUSTON. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. The organic act provides that intoxicating liquor can not be manufactured or sold in the Territory of Alaska without the authority of law enacted by Congress. Have they the authority now for the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes; they have. Congress authorized the sale and provided a license system by taxation and the right to run open saloons in Alaska as they do at the present time. These people can not secure legislation on the subject, and they look to Congress to give them the relief, and it is now up to Congress.

I want to call attention to one feature of the bill which I am not going to discuss, but to which the committee gave careful consideration and which was considered in the Senate. Before I get to that, I desire to say a word in behalf of this being a "bone-dry" bill, so called. A very large number of the inhabitants of the Territory of Alaska are Indians, almost half of them-not half now, but up to two or three years ago about half-a people that it was thought needed the benefit of prohibitory laws more especially than did the white people, just as it was considered by this Government and by Congress that the Indians who lived in the Indian Territory needed drastic provisions and stricter regulations to prevent them from having liquor, and Congress did prevent liquor going in there. These people are up there and they are at the mercy of the liquor seller. including the blind tiger and the wildcatter, and this bill seeks to so fix it and safeguard it that these methods shall cease, so that the Indians can not be victimized and wronged as they have been to such a great extent by those who for the mere love of money and the profit they can make have been willing to make brutes and beasts of the native Indian for the lucre they got out of it.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. HOUSTON. Not now. Mr. SABATH. I desire to ask a question for information. Mr. HOUSTON. Not now. I want to get through with another statement that I have in mind. I want to take up now the question of the liquors that shall be excluded. This excludes all alcoholic liquors, attempting to cover the field widely. It has been a very difficult matter to establish standards and set a rule that would enable the prohibitory laws to accomplish the end in view, so that it can not be evaded one way or the other. For instance, take the use of patent medicines. They have been resorted to and have been used as a substitute for liquor, and it has been difficult to establish a rule that would prevent their use.

We had a provision in the bill that none of that kind of medicine containing a certain percentage of alcohol should be shipped into Alaska. Upon careful consideration and consultation with the experts from the Pure Food Bureau and from the Chemical Department of the Agricultural Department and with the Chief of the Law Division of the Internal-Revenue Bureau we have, we think, solved the question. I believe we have a classification that will come nearer to covering this than has been found elsewhere, and that is expressed in the words "including all alcoholic compounds classed by the United States Internal-Revenue Bureau as compound liquor."

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman reading from the bill?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes; from page 2, at the end of the second That is a classification that I believe will fix it so that it will be easily determined when parties have offended against the law, when they have transported or sold liquor in violation of the law.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON. Not now.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman, but I want to ask a question about the bill. As I understand it, we are considering S. 7963, but that is not the bill the gentleman is reading from.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am reading from S. 7963 as it was passed by the Senate and sent to the Speaker's table.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, in explanation to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Slayden] I might state that the Senate and our committee amended the bill the gentleman has before him in the particular to which the chairman refers.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do not find any reference to it. Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, liquors that are classed as compound liquors by the Internal-Revenue Bureau are liquors upon which the Internal-Revenue Department will levy a license We have a provision that covers that case fully. prietary or patent medicines, or any medicine in which is allowed the use of alcohol as a preservative or as a solvent, as fixed by the United States Pharmacopæia, providing that in every ounce of the mixture there shall be a dose of medicine of some valuable drug for an adult person. That is the kind that Medicines other than that, that have liquors in them, as classified as alcoholic compounds, and are taxed when being sold, and that gives us not only a good classification but it gives us the benefit and the aid of the Internal-Revenue Department in order to fix it and to prevent the sale of these prohibited

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I have often heard the statement made on the floor of this House by gentlemen opposing legislation of this character, that they would be for a prohibition bill that prohibited. I understand from what the gentleman has stated here that the gentlemen who are looking for a bill of that character will find it in this particular measure.

Mr. HOUSTON. There is no doubt about that.
Mr. SAUNDERS. So that we can have universal support of

Mr. HOUSTON. Men who want a bill that will prohibit I think will find the article they are hunting for in this measure.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. Is there any provision in this bill that pro-hibits the importation into Alaska of any liquor?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes; that is prohibited.
Mr. SABATH. Under the bill you can not bring it in in any Way?

Mr. HOUSTON. No; you can not make it there or have it in your possession, only as provided in this bill for medical purposes and for scientific and sacramental purposes.

Mr. SABATH. Then it is all right.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, the committee in reporting this bill to the House, and the chairman in speaking of it, states that the people of Alaska have voted for this measure. Is it not true that the measure submitted to the vote of the people of Alaska was for the prohibition of the manufacture and sale and the denial of licenses for that purpose, and has not the committee brought in here a different bill from that for which the people of Alaska voted?

Mr. HOUSTON. I think we have brought in a bill here that will accomplish the purpose for which they voted. They voted to prohibit the manufacture and sale of whisky. will do it, and that is an answer to the question. [Applause.]

Mr. IGOE and Mr. LANGLEY rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield? Mr. HOUSTON. To the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. IGOE. The act which was submitted provided that if the people voted dry that no wholesale or retail liquor license shall be issued for the sale, manufacture, barter, or exchange. Now, that was the question they voted upon.

Mr. HOUSTON. That was the question as was recited in the caption of the act. In order to carry out that purpose they have prepared a bill to do that, and, as I stated, the bill might appear to be very drastic, and it is, but it is the interpretation of their action that those representing them have given it. Now, I can not yield any longer. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I am willing to yield a portion of my time for discussion to other Members. I am willing to yield to those who are opposed to the measure.

Will the gentleman yield? Mr. LANGLEY.

Mr. HOUSTON. Does the gentleman want some time? Mr. LANGLEY. I just wanted to inquire what is meant by Is that a prohibition bill which actually probone-dry." hibits?

Mr. HOUSTON. That is what the bill endeavors to do. Mr. LANGLEY. That is what is meant by a "bone-dry" bill? I wanted to know.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman what be means by "pure" alcohol?

Mr. HOUSTON. As I understand it, that is grain alcohol, ethyl alcohol; but I am not an expert upon the classification.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If I am correctly informed, there is no such thing as pure alcohol.

Mr. HOUSTON. As I understand it, the term used is in distinction from wood or methyl alcohol.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman permits the use of pure alcohol and speaks of pure alcohol in many places in the bill. I would suggest for the purpose of perfecting the bill that wherever this word "pure" appears that he use the word ethyl" and that will correct it.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will not agree to any amendment of that

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. HOUSTON. No. Does the gentleman want some time?

Mr. SABATH. No.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield me two minutes? Mr. HOUSTON. Yes, sir; I will yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, in that two minutes I want to say the gentleman admits the people of Alaska have voted two to one for this legislation, and in further consideration of the fact that nearly half the people of that far distant country are interested in it and of the fact they are for dry legislation, while I voted, not having had time to read the bill, against its consideration, believing it was our duty to take up the naval bill in the present situation of the United States and of the world, and that the gentleman could have called up his bill when the naval bill was concluded, I therefore voted against its consideration; but the people of Alaska having spoken two to one, I bow to the vote under the conditions existing in laska. [Applause.] Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, if no gentleman wants to be Alaska.

heard in opposition to the bill-

Mr. MEEKER. I would like to be heard in opposition to the bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER].

Mr. MEEKER, Mr. Speaker, I only want sufficient time to call attention to the difference between the bill that was voted on in Alaska and the one that is here proposed. The Alaska bill or measure that was voted on was a bone-dry measure. You have it before you in the hearings and in the little report that is given here. I say that the thing the people of Alaska voted upon was against the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors in Alaska after January 1, 1918. I do not find that they voted there that the law of the land should be changed and the laws of evidence, that we have had invoked in the courts of the world for some hundreds of years, that the presence of liquor in a man's home will no longer be simply prima facie evidence of his guilt but will be sufficient to convict him.

Mr. LANGLEY. Is that provision contained in the bill? Mr. MEEKER. That is in this bill; that we are come to a time when the wine served at the Lord's table is marked as practically outlawed, so that the clergyman who stands up and talks about all this stuff nevertheless has a special permit for himself; that the intent of the people of Alaska was the intent and is the intent of every prohibitionist agitator, that, though he does not want the other fellow to have it, he still can get his. The people of Alaska did not vote for a bone-dry bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MEEKER. Yes.
Mr. RANDALL. I do not want the gentleman to feel that the question is personal, and the second question I will ask will answer the purpose. Was the gentleman the pastor of the Pilgrims Hill Congregational Church in St. Louis in 1906, and

Mr. MEEKER. If the gentleman wants personalities, he can get them from the record.

Mr. RANDALL. My purpose in asking the question was to ask whether he held the same views at that time he is expressing now

Mr. MEEKER. Absolutely; and long before, and the gentle-man campaigned the country for years before resigning. Now, does the gentleman want to ask any more personal questions? If he does, this is the time to ask them.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to know how— Mr. MEEKER. The gentleman has obtained some very valuable information.

He wanted to know if I was opposed to prohibition while I still was pastor of a church. I certainly was, I opposed it for years, and at my own expense in the 1910 campaign fought it in the State of Missouri. I am against hypocrisy anywhere, in the church or out of it. I offered a resolution to the preachers of St. Louis when they were for the prohibition bill to pledge themselves for total abstinence. It got two votes. I was one of them. [Laughter.] The prohibition resolution was one of them. [Laughter.] The prohibition resolution passed. This bill, as is proposed in this section 18, is an illustration of the extent to which people of this type of mind will go if they can have their way.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. If there are enough of them, they will have their way, will they not?

Mr. MEEKER. Oh, no.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I think they will.

Mr. MEEKER. It is not a question, I believe, any longer as to whether men are going to have their liquor or not, for they are going to have it; but in this Alaska bill the next thing we will be called upon to do will be to make appropriations to enforce this law or add to it. We are now spending $150,000 a year in doing it in various Indian territory countries. I remember last year we proposed an amendment to increase it $200,000, and the antisaloon gentlemen opposed it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MEEKER. May I have five minutes more? Mr. HOUSTON. I yield to the gentleman. Mr. MEEKER. Now, here is in this provision of this bill, and which was called attention to by the chairman of the committee, the proviso that such proprietary medicines as are classed by the Department of Internal Revenue as coming under the control of the Government, and so marked as compounds, shall be shut out. I would like to ask before the close of this hour that some one would give us the list of those which are classified and those which are not. And I would like to ask the gentleman on this floor in this legislation that is being now proposed as to whether from the standpoint of the checking of the spread of alcoholism-

Will the gentleman yield? Mr. HAMLIN.

Mr. MEEKER. Yes.
Mr. HAMLIN. I have here a list of proprietary medicines that are barred by the ruling of the Internal-Revenue Depart-

Mr. MEEKER. Will you kindly read it? Mr. HAMLIN. I will hand it to you, and you can read it. It is changed from time to time as they become convinced that the predominating element in any preparation is alcohol and can possibly be used for beverage purposes, and then they require a tax to be paid upon it.

Mr. MEEKER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that any proprietary medicine upon which a tax is paid is barred by this bill?

Mr. HAMLIN. Absolutely. The internal-revenue tax is paid on account of its principal constituent part being alcohol, so that it could be used for beverage purposes, like Peruna and stuff of that kind.

Mr. MEEKER. Will Peruna be admitted or barred?

Mr. HAMLIN. It will undoubtedly be barred, I think, unless they reduce the quantity of alcohol in it.

Mr. MEEKER. Of course, if they do, it is not Peruna.

There are only about 65 of these pets of the Antisaloon League that run 10 to 60 per cent alcohol that are protected in this country, and their friends see to it in the District bill that they are all taken care of. I supposed that there would be a pro-vision in this bill, but probably they have not seen this one. We are friendly to the fellow who pays our bills, even though dry, so that we can manufacture 5,000 barrels of alcohol in this District every year, even if we have prohibition.

Now, in this bill that is now before the House, if section 18 is left to stand as it now is, it means that the United States Congress has by its action proposed to change the laws of evidence that have stood in the courts of the world no one knows how

Mr. McCRACKEN. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MEEKER. Yes.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Does not the gentleman know that the Supreme Court of the United States, in a case which came up in West Virginia a short time ago, sustained and held this very section as a proper section?

Mr. MEEKER. I beg the gentleman's pardon-

Mr. McCRACKEN. It is exactly true.

Mr. MEEKER. Not on the wording on page 13, I think. I think you will not find any court that has ruled on that.

Mr. GALLIVAN. What is the wording?
Mr. MEEKER. I will read the entire paragraph. It is as

SEC. 18. That it shall not be necessary, in order to convict any person, company, house, association, copartnership, club, or corporation, his, its, or their agents, officers, clerks, or servants of manufacturing, importing, or selling alcoholic liquors, to prove the actual manufacture, importing, sale, delivery of, or payment for any alcoholic liquors, but the evidence of having or keeping them in hand, stored or deposited, taking orders for, or offering to sell or barter, or exchanging them for goods or merchandise, or giving them away, shall be sufficient to convict; nor shall it be necessary in a warrant, information, or indictment to specify the particular kind of alcoholic liquor which is made the subject of a charge of violation of this act.

That is, if a home is found with liquor in it, whether it be a gallon of wine or a pint of wine, that is no longer merely prima facie, but sufficient evidence to convict that man of selling liquor in the Territory of Alaska in violation of this law.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Even cider. Mr. MEEKER. Even cider.

Now, gentleman, I am not going to take any more time of the Congress now on this bill, but I want to say to you that the thing you see in that section, which is put there by those men who would enforce this bone-dry bill, is not in contravention alone of a man's right so far as the consumption of wine is concerned, which is granted to the church, but it is an assault direct upon the laws of evidence whereby men up to date have supposed they were free men in this country.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a minute more? I would like to ask him a question.
Mr. HOUSTON. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman one minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee yields to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER] one minute more.

The gentleman has just stated that the having in possession under this bill was sufficient to convict one of selling the liquor. Is not the very first section of this bill a provision against the having in possession of one any liquor? The having in possession is not evidence to convict of selling, but evidence of having-having in violation of the law.

Mr. MEEKER. Do not the first two lines of that section specifically state that "it shall not be necessary," and so forth, following down, but simply the holding of it shall be sufficient to convict?

Mr. MANN. Here is the first section of the bill, which makes it a misdemeanor to have or to hold in one's possession any liquor.

Mr. MEEKER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. shall be sufficient to convict for selling, manufacturing, import-That is what this is-to convict for in the section

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MEEKER. Yes.
Mr. LENROOT. The penalty is exactly the same in 1 The penalty is exactly the same in both cases, so that having it in his possession constitutes a violation of the law.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Slayden] eight minutes

The gentleman from Texas is

The SPEAKER pro tempore. recognized for eight minutes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, when the distinguished ex-Speaker of this House [Mr. CANNON] made the statement a few minutes ago—and he is a pretty good Democrat in many respects—that he bowed to the verdict of the people and accepted it, there was quite a lot of applause. the people of Alaska had passed on this question for them-selves, and that he accepted their verdict; and that statement had an unusual amount of applause. I observed some of the gentlemen who were applauding, and I wondered then whether, when that proposition is put up to them again, as a privilege that may be granted to the people of the District of Columbia, who are at least partially civilized and educated, whether, I say, they will applaud and support that sentiment then. [Applause.]

I very much doubt it, because consistency is not a conspicuous virtue among the people who advocate laws for the regulation and control and the tyrannical governance of other men's habits. [Applause.] I belong to a party that traditionally has been opposed to sumptuary legislation. opposition to sumptuary legislation in the platforms of the party. I have found it in the teachings of the fathers of the party. But I find distressingly few people now who call themselves "Democrats" who have any respect for those principles or such teachings.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SLAYDEN. No; I regret I have not the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to

Mr. SLAYDEN. I have only a very brief time, and I do want to try to say what I had in my mind.

Now, the question has arisen and some difference of opinion exists between the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER] as to the meaning of the language in section 18 of this bill, which I regard as a most extraordinary provision and a very dangerous assault on the liberties of individuals. That clause of section 18, as I read it, says this:

That it shall not be necessary, in order to convict any person, company, house, association, copartnership, club, or corporation, his, its, or their agents, officers, clerks, or servants of manufacturing, importing, or selling alcoholic liquors, to prove the actual manufacture, importing, sale, delivery of, or payment for any alcoholic liquors, but the evidence of having or keeping them in hand, stored or deposited, taking orders for, or offering to sell or barter, or exchanging them for goods or merchandise, or giving them away, shall be sufficient to convict.

The section is perhaps not as clearly expressed as the authors of it thought when they put it into the bill, but it is clear enough to indicate that if a citizen of Alaska should have the misfortune to be given a bottle of good, rich, Rhine wine or a bottle of wine from the sunny slopes of the hills of northern France or of Spain, and should have that mild intoxicant in his posses sion, hoping in a spirit of hospitality some time to entertain a prohibitionist friend, to warm the cockles of his heart [laughter], he would be carrying on his person or in his house evidence enough to convict him of a serious offense and subject himself to the penalty that would be imposed on him by this zeal that men have for the regulation of other men's habits.

They do not try to punish men guilty of the disgusting offense of drunkenness. Oh, no. But they propose to punish the sober man, the decent man, the law-abiding citizen who does claim some personal privileges, who thought that he had inherited from his American fathers and his European ancestry, who struggled for centuries to establish individual rights, the privilege of standing up as a man and regulating his own conduct. But it is not true any longer, Mr. Speaker, and the zeal and fanaticism—if I may be pardoned for the use of a word that I hope will not be thought offensive by anyone—that is behind this legislation is dangerous to the liberties of the people. I tell you, sir, the zeal which is manifested in this class of legislation is the same that sometimes appeals to the views of a majority of the same that sometimes appears to the views of a majority of the people of any country that this or that or the other theologi-cal tenet is the correct thing, and then no man may dare to entertain a different opinion. That same spirit has sent men to the gibbet and made martyrs at the stake. I heard a prohibi-tionist—and, strange to say, a young man—last summer in my own State, where the question was being discussed, say that if he had the power-and he hoped to have it, with his associates he would send to prison any man who dared to take a drink of liquor. Now, that young man frankly expressed what is in the hearts and in the minds of many other people.

I hope that sometime there will revive a spirit of independence and individualism among the American people, and that once more men may have admitted rights just because they are men. Personally, I do not much value the privilege of drinking liquors. I am not a drinking man. I have had antiprohibition-ists in my district denounce me as a prohibitionist because they had never seen me in their drinking establishments. But I do care enough about the privilege, the right to regulate my own habits, and as a Democrat I believe in the ancient doctrines of the party, and I believe that no association in politics or otherwise should assume the right to regulate my personal habits, either as to my food, drink, or raiment. Just so I despise and condemn any association of religious zealots when they undertake to direct my views in regard to such matters.

Now, it has been pretended here that this is specifically the matter voted on by the people of Alaska. It is not. It is different. It differs enough for gentlemen to have pronounced views, perhaps to support one and condemn the other, both being prohibition measures. We all know that there are prohibition measures that do not prohibit, and some of us apparently believe that there are prohibition measures that do prohibit. Any of them are sufficient to prohibit me or any other man who has a high regard for the spirit of the law, as well as for its letter, when in a community that tries to prohibit. But I do know from personal observation that the extremely dry prohibitory laws in some States have not been enforced and, I am told, could not be. I live in a brewing town, and yet the biggest pile of beer kegs I ever saw in my lifewere all empty, I was told, when I saw them, but at one time they had been full—was piled up in the city of Bangor, Me., where there had been prohibition for half a century. [Laughter.] I do know that in dry counties in my own State the express companies and transportation lines, when it was permitted, made more money carrying liquor packages to such communities than they made on the same quantity of traffic in any other direction.

Mr. HAMLIN. In view of that statement, does not the gentleman think this section 18, which he complained about, is a pretty good provision?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do not think it is a good provision that a man shall be imprisoned or punished severely because he happens to have in his possession a bottle of wine which, under other circumstances, might be used, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Meeker] says, in a religious ceremony.

Mr. HAMLIN. The condition the gentleman has just described in Maine and in his own State could not exist if that provision were enforced.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I did not describe the conditions in Maine or in my own State. The SPEAKER.

The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. HOUSTON. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, made public a few days ago, shows that despite the fact that prohibition legislation is being enacted throughout the country, the revenue received from whisky was greater than it ever was before in the history of the country. That report, on page 9, discloses that 140,656,103 gallons of distilled spirits were manufactured in 1915. In 1916 the total manufacture of distilled spirits upon which an internal-revenue tax was collected amounted to 253,283,273 gallons, or an increase of practically 80 per cent. The report shows on the other hand that the revenue received from beer is falling off. In other words, whenever you pass prohibition legislation, you drive people to strong drink. You compel them to take whisky where they had been accustomed to take beer or light wines. Prohibition legislation makes men into liars, sneaks, and hypocrites, and the crop will be materially increased in the Territory of Alaska if this bill becomes a law. The first law that was ever given to man was in effect a prohibition law. The first law that was ever violated by man was a prohibition law. Take the story in the Bible. Adam and Eve were given the Garden of Eden to hold, to enjoy, and to possess all their lives. When the Almighty gave it to them He said, practically, "But over there is one tree the fruit of which I prohibit you from eating." That was the first prohibition law. As soon as He was out of sight they broke the law, and they are of the fruit of that tree. Then, like a liar, a sneak, and a hypocrite, Adam blamed it on the woman. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. No; I can not yield. They tell us that the use of liquor has ruined many a man. Go into the State prisons of this country and you will find many a man there who will tell you he was brought to his ruin by some woman. Do you want to kill off all women on that account? [Laughter.] You will find many a woman in the State prisons who blames her downfall upon some man. Do you want to kill off all the men on that account? [Laughter and applause.] It would be as sensible as trying to prevent the use of liquor by the passage of prohibition legislation.

Mr. HOUSTON. I yield seven minutes to the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. WICKERSHAM].

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Speaker, I understand from the last speaker [Mr. KAHN] that anybody who favors a bone-dry prohibition law in the Territory of Alaska is a liar and a sneak. Well, I stand here urging upon this House that such a bill be passed for the people of the Territory of Alaska, because they have asked for it, and I am not a liar and I am not a sneak. [Applause.] I am not a prohibitionist myself and I am not the man who initiated this act. It was brought about by the people of the Territory of Alaska, who are a good people and a clean people, and it ought not to lie in the mouth of any gentleman to denounce them upon this floor as liars and sneaks, and I resent it. [Applause.] They are as good as any set of people in the United States, and they stand as well before the

Mr. KREIDER. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.
Mr. KREIDER. To rectify the erroneous impression in the mind of the Delegate from Alaska, the gentleman from California [Mr. Kahn] did not apply those epithets to the men who favor this bill.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. The House heard what he said.

Mr. KREIDER. He applied them to Adam, when he placed the blame on Eve.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; and then he applied them to the prohibitionists

Mr. KREIDER. No.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Speaker, the people of the Territory of Alaska on April 13, 1915, passed an act submitting this matter to a vote of the people of the Territory. It was provided in that bill that-

There shall be submitted to the electors of the Territory of Alaska at the next general election held for the purpose of electing members of the legislature of said Territory the question of whether they are or are not in favor of the sale, manufacture, barter, or exchange of intoxicating liquors within said Territory after the 1st day of January, 1918.

The bill provided the form of ballot, and provided the question should be submitted to a vote of the people at the general election on the 7th day of November, 1916. It was submitted to the people of the Territory at that time, and it was carried by a vote of 7,958 in favor and 4,431 against, and by a majority of 3,527. It was adopted by the people at that election, when the largest vote ever cast in the Territory of Alaska was placed in the ballot box. More people voted at that election than had ever voted at any other election in the Territory. Some gentlemen have asked if the women voted. Yes. How many? About 1 have asked if the women voted. Yes, How many? About 1 out of 5 of the votes cast in the Territory of Alaska were cast by women, and by a majority of more than 3,500, or almost a vote of 2 to 1, those people declared in favor of a bone-dry law in that Territory. Oh, but some gentleman points out the fact that there is some slight difference between the wording of the act of the Territorial legislature submitting this matter and the bull before the Horse sed twithfully those is and the bill before the House, and truthfully there is.

To the people of the Territory was submitted the question whether they should have a wet or a dry law in that Territory, and upon the ballot, if you were in favor of wet, you voted wet and if you were in favor of dry you voted dry. They voted dry by almost 2 to 1. That put it up to me, as their Delegate in this Congress, to secure the passage of a bill such as they wanted and such as they voted for. I drew this bill. It was sent to the Committee on Territories and there amended in some respects. The committee then asked me to reintroduce it, which I did. Thereupon the committee reported the second bill which I introduced and recommended that it do pass.

In the meantime, before this House could act, the second bill introduced by me was introduced in the Senate by Senator Jones, of Washington, and passed by the Senate, and is now pending in this House. It is a copy of the bill reported by the committee in the House and now pending before this body for

Now, the bill is substantially a copy of the Idaho act, and every clause which gentlemen have criticized is in the Idaho It is the law in Utah; it is the law in many other States which have passed dry laws. It is not the law in such States as Washington where they do not have bone-dry laws, but where the legislatures are at work now to give them a bone-dry law.

Mr. LANGLEY. It is the law that was passed upon by the Supreme Court.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; it is substantially the law that was passed upon by the Supreme Court. Now, the people of Alaska have a clear understanding of this bill, which has been submitted in exact terms to the governor of the Territory of Alaska, who approved of it in a written communication to me, which you will find in the hearings before the House committee It has been presented to a member of the Territorial senate and a member of the Territorial house, both of whom are in this city, and has been approved by them. It has been approved by the Territorial Delegate from Alaska and by everybody in the Territory of Alaska to whom it has been submitted.

We have about 50,000 white people in Alaska and twenty-five to thirty thousand Indians. We have bootleggers selling liquor throughout the Territory, and undoubtedly if this bill shall pass they will continue to do it if the suggestions of gentlemen on the floor shall prevail. If the great God-given right to have a bottle of whisky in your possession is of such serious moment to some of the gentlemen, let me call attention to what would happen in Alaska if that right is retained in this bill. If a man may lawfully have a bottle of whisky in his pocket or in his cabin in the standing that I should offer an amendment on the floor if I Territory of Alaska, we might as well not pass this bill. Every bootlegger might then lawfully go through the Territory with a bottle of whisky in the back part of his trousers, and he could not be restrained. If any man might have a bottle of whisky in his cabin for the purpose of trading it off to an Indian or a white man, if he had that great constitutional right, that God-given right over which gentlemen rave to have it in his own home, you might as well not pass this law. The argument made by the gentleman on that question is an argument for the bootlegger, and for the bootlegger alone. [Applause.] The good man in Alaska whom they have used as an example does not want that right. It is a right taken away from him by the first section of the bill, and if you allow it generally, to the bootlegger and violator of the law, you might as well not pass this bill. [Applause.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley].

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to prohibition ws. Whenever that question is in issue in my State, I shall so vote; but the people of Alaska, I think, have a right to determine this question. They have determined it. For my part, if we are going to have a prohibition law in Alaska, I want to see it just as stringent as it is possible to make it, because I do not believe in pretending to do a thing and then not doing it. If you are going to have prohibition laws, then I want to have real prohibition laws, and I know of nothing that will change the sentiment of a number of gentlemen so quickly as to enforce the sentiment of a number of gentlemen so quickly as to enforce upon them the prohibition they express touching others. But, aside from all that, I believe in the right of the people to govern themselves. Alaska has declared its desire for prohibition, and for my part I shall vote for the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. Speaker, I want to offer a concrete libra-

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I want to offer a concrete illustration this morning to prove that the liquor traffic, as well as most of those who speak for it, are ashamed of themselves. Every Member of this House has received in his mail to-day a letter containing booze literature under return card labeled "The United Press Association of Cleveland." I took occasion to secure from the general manager of the United Press Associations, one of the great news-gathering associations of the country, a statement of this matter which is being circulated, and in my time I ask to have it read at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATEMENT BY W. W. HAWKINS, GENERAL MANAGER UNITED PRESS ASSOCIATIONS OF NEW YORK.

The following was sent out on advice of our counsel in view of the fact that liquor propaganda has been sent broadcast throughout the country by a concern known as the United Press Association:

"New York, February 1.

"New York, February 1.

"A concern operating out of Cleveland, Ohio, is sending newspapers and Members of Congress in the country a great deal of free literature favorable to the liquor interests. This copy comes in envelopes bearing the return address, 'The United Press Association, Cleveland." "The United Press Associations, with general offices at New York and bureaus in many cities throughout the country, is in no way connected with or responsible for the concern that is sending out this anti-prohibition propaganda, and it has instituted proceedings to enjoin the methods which make it appear that the United Press Associations has abandoned its course of distributing only regular news matter."

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to print as a part of my remarks a part of the Treasurer's decision marked T. D.

Now I move the previous question on the bill. The SPEAKER. In the first place, the gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the

Mr. MANN. What is the matter the gentleman wishes to print? Mr. HOUSTON. It is a document gotten out by the Internal-Revenue Department marked "A Treasury decision."

Mr. MANN. I have no objection. The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The matter is as follows:

[From Treasury Decisions 1843.]

In order for a manufacturer or a dealer to be exempt under the provisions of section 3246, Revised Statutes, from special-tax liability on account of the manufacture or sale of an alcoholic compound containing drugs or medicines the preparation must conform to the following taining drugs or medicines the preparation must conform to the following standard:

First. Alcohol: The preparation must contain no more alcohol than is necessary for the legitimate purposes of extraction, solution, or preservation.

Second. Medicaments: As the minimum dosage each 1 ounce liquid of the completed preparation must carry in it approximately an average United States Pharmacopoxia dose for an adult of some drug or drugs of recognized therapeutic value, either singly or in compatible combination.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, I am a member of the Committee on Territories that reported this bill, with the express under-wished to do so. I do not want to be deprived of that privilege by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MANN. If there was an understanding to that effect-Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, in the discussion of this bill before the committee the gentleman from California, having voted to report the bill, said that he would like to offer an amendment, and I told him that any member of the committee would have the right to offer an amendment, but since the action of the House this morning I have changed my position on that. If the gentleman had been here at the time, we might have had an understanding, but I do not think he would be authorized to offer it now.

Mr. BUTLER. Why can it not be arranged that the gentleman can offer his amendment?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Tennessee has moved the previous question, and the previous question is not debatable.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent the gentle-man could be permitted to offer his amendment without depriv-ing the gentleman from Tennessee of the privilege of moving the previous question; and in all fairness, under the statement of both gentlemen, the amendment should be offered. I do not know what it is.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to make the request, and I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California be permitted to offer his amendment, with the understanding that after that is acted upon I shall have the right to move the previous question.

Mr. FERRIS. What about debate upon it?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California be permitted to offer his amendment without taking the gentleman from Tennessee off the floor. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unani-

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from California [Mr. Curry] be permitted to offer his amendment without taking the gentle-man from Tennessee [Mr. Houston] off the floor. Is there objection?

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. POWERS. I would like to have about one minute in which to discuss this bill, and I would like to know if I could get in under that arrangement?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman could not. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, is it not the understanding that this bill can be debated under the five-minute rule, as usual?

The SPEAKER. No; the gentleman from Tennessee has just moved the previous question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. My recollection is, if the Chair will permit, that the gentleman from Tennessee stated there would be opportunity to offer amendments.

The SPEAKER. That is true; but the rules of the House prohibit it in the circumstances. That is, if he yields to any prohibit it in the circumstances. That is, if he yields to any gentleman to offer an amendment, he loses the floor, and when the gentleman from Tennessee was informed of that, he de-clined to yield for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I be permitted to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he did not make the proposition that the bill would be open to amendment?

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I said at the beginning that I was unwilling to take any step to cut off amendment, and would allow reasonable time for debate and amendment, so far as I was concerned; but after that, when the effort was made to throw us out of position, to prevent consideration of the bill, and prolong the matter, and I found I could not yield the floor without losing the opportunity of having a vote upon it to-day, then I stated, in the beginning of my remarks, that I would move the previous question before yielding the floor.

The SPEAKER. There is no trouble about the matter.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, there is just this trouble, that when the gentleman made that announcement I for one fell back in my place, satisfied that we would have an opportunity to discuss the bill under the five-minute rule. undertook to interrogate the gentleman from Tennessee, and he declined to be interrogated; so that the effect, so far as I am concerned, is that debate was cut off.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has his remedy—all gentlemen have their remedy—in voting down the previous question. If that be done, they can debate this thing until noon the 4th of March. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from California will send up his amendment.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 17, line 4, after the word "may" strike out the balance of the section and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Amend or repeal this act: Provided, That before this act shall be repealed the question of repeal shall be submitted to a referendum vote of the registered voters in the Territory of Alaska."

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Gallivan) there were—ayes 54, noes 133.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and thirty-eight Members present, a quorum.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Houston, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The House bill (H. R. 20361) of similar tenor was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the Record and that all other gentlemen shall have five legislative days in which to extend

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object. Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I object. Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that may extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think this is one of those cases where the Record ought to show what really took place. I have no objection to the gentleman extending remarks on the subject of prohibition, for or against, but I think the Record ought to show what took place on this bill, and I hope the gentleman will not make his request.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, if I can have one minute, I will Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent withdraw that request.

to have one minute in which to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for one minute in which to make a statement. Is nere objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I made this request for the purpose not that I wished to extend my remarks but that I may make clear, if I did not do so in the remarks already made, that the parliamentary situation that developed here this morning changed the conditions of my relation to the members of the committee and other Members of the House to whom I had said that I would be perfectly willing to give opportunity to offer amendments, and the matter was discussed in the committee

Mr. MANN. I do not think anybody has any idea of accusing the gentleman from Tennessee of bad faith, unfairness, or anything of the kind.

Mr. HOUSTON. I want the House to know that after the gentleman from Illinois made the statement which developed the situation that I felt I would not be justified in yielding the floor for amendment, but that I should move the previous question.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 20453, the fortifications bill, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to take the fortifications bill from the table, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20453) making appropriations for fortifications and her works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement heavy ordnance, for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the conferees. The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SHERLEY, Mr. RAUCH, and Mr. GILLETT.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20632) making appropriations for the Naval Establishment for the fiscal year 1918, and for other purposes; and, pending that motion, I want to ask if we can not agree upon time for general debate.

Mr. BUTLER. How much time does the gentleman suggest?
Mr. PADGETT. I desire to expedite the passage of the bill as much as possible and I would be glad to hurry it along as much as I can.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I have been requested by gentlemen sitting upon our side to obtain a short period of time for general debate. Now, these gentlemen, I understand, are in favor of this bill; I am certainly in favor of the bill, and probably I should not control the time, then. If we could, I should like to have on this side not over two hours. Does the gentleman from Illinois wish some time?

Mr. MANN. I may want half an hour.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I would ask for two and a half hours. I think with that I would have time enough to give the gentleman from Illinois half an hour.

Mr. MANN. I think two hours and a half is little enough. I have never known it to get through before without two and a half days.

Mr. KITCHIN. If two hours and a half are had on that side by those in favor of the bill and two and a half hours on this side by those in favor of the bill, I would suggest that those who oppose the bill should have at least an hour and a half.

Mr. MANN. I can assure the gentleman from North Carolina on this side we never draw the line between those opposed to and those in favor of the bill. The gentleman from Pennsylvania would be glad to yield to anyone on this side reasonable time who is opposed to the bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. I would like to say there is a minority report filed and signed by several members of the committee, and I think they ought to have at least an hour and a half of that time, to be controlled by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Or type]

Mr. PADGETT. I would state, Mr. Speaker, that I am willing to agree to two and a half hours to a side, and out of my time I will yield an hour and a half to Mr. OLIVER for those opposed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that general debate on this bill be limited to five hours, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Butler] and the other half by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett], with the understanding that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] is to control one and a half hours—

Mr. PADGETT. That I will yield him one hour and a half of my time.

The SPEAKER. That the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] is to control one hour and a half of the time of the gentleman from Tennessee. Is there objection?

Mr. BUTLER. Is it understood we have two hours and a half on this side?

The SPEAKER. Yes; to be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and two and a half hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee, who agrees to yield an hour and a half to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Oliver] to be controlled by him. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on going into the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. Is it the intention to ask the House to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. I think it would be wise to do so now.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 20632, with Mr. PAGE of North Carolina in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 20632, the naval appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20632) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I shall not consume much of the time in making a statement to the House now. As we proceed with the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule, I will be pleased to answer such questions as anyone may desire and to give such information as I may be able to furnish.

This bill is in keeping and is carrying out the legislative program as authorized at the last session of the Congress. It will be remembered that at that time a certain program was provided, beginning within three years, and last year we made appropriations for the first year's program of the three-year program. In this bill we are making appropriations for the portion of the three-year program of the second year, leaving remaining about one-third of the program for the appropriation of next year. The bill contains very little legislation. Last year the bill containd a very great amount of legislation, reorganizing the Naval Establishment very extensively. But the bill this year, I might say, is strictly an appropriation bill, and these appropriations are explained in detail and fully and clearly in the printed report.

I shall reserve the remainder of my time, and I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Butler] to use a portion of his.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to yield 30 minutes of the time allotted to this side to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Britten] a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRIT-

TEN] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. BRITTEN, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I heartily agree with the chairman of the committee in his statement that this bill merely follows the authorization in the first session of the present Congress, and it is not my intention to in any way criticize the bill, at least from the standpoint of the amount of money it carries. As "big-navy" men—and we on this side of the aisle take pride in calling ourselves such—have no cause to complain against the Sixty-third or the Sixty-fourth Congress in appropriations for the Navy. But, my dear gentlemen, appropriations and authori-zations do not give us a Navy.

Now that the present administration has had four years of incumbency, during three-quarters of which time the United States has been constantly poised upon the very brink of a precipice of frightfulness, into which it might have been drawn, and where it to-day stands quivering between a declaration of war and the resumption of an apparently fruitless endeavor for world peace, it is only proper, it is only fair to the people of the country that they be advised now as to how much the fighting efficiency of the Navy has been improved by the present administration in the four years it has been in complete control of both Houses of Congress, in complete control of the purse-strings of the Government. And I am going to try to show the House as briefly as possible just how much the fighting efficiency of the Navy has been increased under the Wilson administration. And when I have concluded I am satisfied-and I am not talking from a partisan standpoint; there is no election staring us in the face; your President and my President is going to be with us for four years more-when I have concluded, you gentlemen on that side of the House will have goose skins. You should tremble at the thought of our unpreparedness for a terrible conflict.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. BRITTEN. For a question.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Does the gentleman think this is a fine time to advertise to the nations of Europe our weakness, if we have any?

Mr. BRITTEN. If a weakness exists, all nations know it. They have naval attachés here. They know it just as well as my good friend the judge does. I will be very glad to furnish it to our own people as well.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. What is the purpose of advertising this weak-

Mr. BRITTEN. It is not a matter of advertising a weakness. It is an attempt on my part to remedy a sad state of affairs in the Navy

Mr. LEVER. What does the gentleman hope to accomplish by it?

Mr. BRITTEN. I should like to see an improvement in the business administration of the Navy Department, which is to-day a howling farce, and I think the gentleman will agree with me after I have presented my few figures, which come from the Navy Department.

Mr. LEVER. I am afraid I will not; but I will listen to the gentleman.

Mr. GARDNER. Has not that same question been raised many times the last two years in order to suppress debate on

Mr. BRITTEN. It has. It makes very little difference to me whether you gentlemen come from Missouri or Louisiana or from Idaho. Our people are entitled to know the status of the Navy to-day, not merely as it affects the fleet on the high seas but the Navy as a whole. Including the amount carried in the bill now under discussion, the present administration will have appropriated the enormous sum of $961,000,000 for naval expenditures, covering a period of the world's greatest unrest, and our people ought to know just how much the Wilson administration has increased the fighting efficiency of the Navy. Appropriations alone never made a fighting force. It takes men and ships in training to win battles, and not authorizations or talk in the Halls of Congress

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. RUBEY. While the gentleman is discussing the Wilson administration and the weakness of it in regard to the Navy, will he also go back and discuss that question during the régime of Mr. Taft and Mr. Roosevelt and previous administrations?
Mr. BRITTEN. Yes. And I will be very glad to call to the attention of the gentleman the fact that during the Taft administration we authorized some submarines which are not yet completed. Also, that some of the submarines authorized six years ago are being constructed in Government yards.

One minute; you want me to answer you, I am sure. Some of these 500-ton submarines, costing less than a million dollars, capable of being completed within six months, and authorized under the Taft administration, are being built in Government navy yards, under the present Navy Department, where they have the control of the money, the men, the materials, and everything entering into their construction, and still it will take five or six years to complete them.

Now, if the gentlemen over there will not interrupt me for a moment, I have a few figures from the Navy Department that indicate the ships authorized under the Taft administration may not be completed under President Wilson's two terms of eight years at the present rate of progress.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BRITTEN. In a moment. Then I will yield to the gentleman. As I said before, I am not finding fault with the amount of money that has been authorized. We in the House certainly have been liberal. We have appropriated almost a billion of dollars for the Navy in four years. Let us see now, for our own satisfaction, just how much the fighting efficiency of the Navy has been increased; and, after all, it is fighting efficiency that counts on the high seas.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question now?

Mr. BRITTEN. All right; I will.
Mr. MONTAGUE. I know very little about this question, but did not Admiral Dewey, in an interview he gave out, take the opposite position from that now taken by the gentleman?
Mr. BRITTEN. What position do you assume that I am taking?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am a little in doubt about it.

Mr. BRITTEN. Well, inasmuch as the gentleman is in doubt,

Mr. MONTAGUE. The gentleman is taking a partisan position. Did not Admiral Dewey practically say that the Navy was in better condition to-day, man for man, ship for ship, efficiency for efficiency, than ever before? Do you agree with Admiral

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; I agree with Admiral Dewey. Mr. MONTAGUE. Then you contradict yourself.

Mr. BRITTEN. Every ship referred to by Admiral Dewey was authorized under previous administrations.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But he did not say that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will suspend a moment. The Chair desires to say that if gentlemen wish to interrupt the speaker, if they will address the Chair he will endeavor to observe the rules of the House and procure them the opportunity if he can. But gentlemen should not interrupt the speaker without first securing permission.

Mr. BRITTEN. I can understand how gentlemen on that side of the House will take unkindly suggestions coming from us when we attempt to show that the fighting value of the Navy has not been increased under their administration.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BRITTEN. No; I can not.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.
Mr. BRITTEN. I can not yield to my good friend who has made himself famous by a minority report.

It is almost a year since our President said that the Government of the United States could have no choice but to sever diplomatic realtions with the German Empire unless it immediately abandoned its then method of submarine warfare against passenger and freight carrying vessels. This means war, and with it must come the knowledge of the preparedness of our Navy to defend the Nation's honor, unless we or they back down.

And do not you gentlemen realize that during three-fourths of the entire time of the present administration's incumbency in office we have had a terrible war in Europe and the entire world has been upset?

Recognizing the offensive as well as defensive fighting value of submarines, which should be constructed in six months' time, does it not cause you to blush with shame when you realize that the present administration will not place in commission a single one of these destructive engines of war authorized under President Wilson's two Congresses. Of the 59 submarines authorized, exclusive of the bill now under consideration, the N-1, which was 78 per cent completed on January 10, is probably the nearest to completion, and at its present rate of progress should be fit for sea duty with a trained crew one year from now, or five years after the President's first inauguration.

The thorough inefficiency of the present Navy Department is all the more accentuated by the ridiculous but sad information contained in the report of the Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, dated January 10, 1917, showing that four of the eight L-type boats authorized under the Taft administration in August, 1912—five years ago—are still uncompleted, most of them being between 85 and 90 per cent finished.

The L-8, authorized during the last session of the Taft administration and being built at the Portsmouth Navy Yard under complete control of the Navy Department, is now 92 per cent completed as to hull and about 48 per cent completed as to machinery. If one is to take the figures seriously, this Government-built sea dog will not be completed during the eight years of President Wilson's two terms.

With American shipbuilders completing 20 submarines for England in five months, as well as an 800-ton submarine of the U-53 German type for Spain in 12 months, does not the business administration of the Navy Department stand out as a monumental failure?

Mr. GARNER. How many have been authorized during this administration?

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. BRITTEN.

Mr. TALBOTT. Will you please tell me the price paid by a foreign Government for the submarines built in Massachusetts? And were they all of one type?

Mr. BRITTEN. If the gentlemen of the House will pardon my expression, I will say "Price be damned!" [Applause on the Republican side.] What difference does it make what the submarine costs if you have them to defend your country when they are needed? They are worth a million dollars apiece, are they not, in time of war? [Applause on the Republican side.] Suppose they do cost a couple of hundred thousand dollars more—and I am going to go into these figures in a moment, if you will permit me.

The Secretary is a gentleman and a scholar, but he has shown desire to throttle big business. It does not make any difference whether a company has been supplying soap, tobacco, or armor to the Navy. It gets at ends with the Secretary, and it leaves in disgust, and the result is it does not desire to compete on future business. In the case of soap the Secretary concluded that our "jackie" should not use the highly perfumed kind. Castile was better. "Jackie," however, differed with him. Even at less money he knew what he wanted.

Now, a jackie is a peculiar fellow. If he wants perfumed soap, he wants it. It is he who is paying for it. If he wants a certain kind of chewing tobacco, that is his business. It is not up to the Secretary to force something else upon him. that is what the Secretary has attempted, and thousands of pounds of tobacco have either been dumped into the sea or sold at a loss, because the Secretary tried to force on them something that they did not want. It was not my intention to go into this, and I have merely recited it to show that there is a lack of business administration in the Navy Department.

Let us take the case of submarines. Replying to my friend, I say up to the present Congress we have authorized 59 sub-

Mr. GARNER. During the present administration?

Mr. BRITTEN. Exclusive of what are carried in the present

Mr. GARNER. In addition to what are carried in the present

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; and not a single one of them has been commissioned. Some of them from the Taft administration are still being completed in Government yards, which are under the complete control of the Secretary of the Navy. That is the shameful part of this thing.

Mr. LEVER. How many submarines were authorized under the Taft administration, and how many were completed under the Taft administration?

Mr. BRITTEN. I am glad to tell the gentleman how many were authorized under the Taft administration, and I am glad to tell the gentleman how many have not been completed under this administration.

How many were completed under the Taft Mr. LEVER. administration?

Mr. BRITTEN. Here is the Yearbook for 1916. The gentleman is at liberty to go through it.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman knows I am not a member of the Naval Committee, and I am not very familiar with this. am trying to get information.

Mr. BRITTEN. The Taft administration is dead; but we are bound to have four years more of this administration, and let us see if we can not improve it a bit.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman will permit, if he is going to criticize this administration for not doing something, as he claims, he ought to be willing to give the House the benefit of the facts, and of his knowledge as a member of the Naval Committee as to what a prior administration has done in the same

Mr. BRITTEN. I should like to go into that very thoroughly with the gentleman. He will understand that under the Taft administration there was an entirely different condition of affairs. The entire world was not in a state of unrest, and was not torn up by a terrible war which was lacerating a great percentage of its population. The gentleman realizes that conditions then and now are entirely different; and, after all, what difference does it make? This administration is undergoing a most trying period as far as foreign affairs are concerned, and because of that we should at least employ common, ordinary, everyday business methods in the conduct of our military and naval departments.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EMERSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. BRITTEN. I must decline to yield for just a few

Mr. EMERSON. Right at this point-

Mr. BRITTEN. I will yield.

Mr. EMERSON. Has the gentleman forgotten, in all this excitement about war, that we reelected President Wilson because he was going to keep us out of war?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; we reelected President Wilson because he has kept us out of war, and I hope to God that in the next few days he will continue to be "too proud to fight." Now let us go into the submarine question, if you please. As I said a little while ago, we have authorized 59 submarines up to and exclusive of the present bill. Let us see their condition in the course of construction. I am sure these figures will interest some of you gentlemen who want a big Navy and who are partial to submarines. We authorized eight in August, 1912, under President Taft. It will surprise you gentlemen to know that only four of those have been completed. Think of it! In the session prior to the last of the Taft administration we authorized eight little submarines and only four of them are completed at the present time. Let me tell you how far advanced they are.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman said something about the second session.

Mr. BRITTEN. The second session prior to the last one, in August, 1912. The last one ended March 4, 1913.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. August, 1912, was during the last Congress of the Taft administration.

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; but the last session of that Congress ended on March 4, 1913.

Mr. GARDNER. If the gentleman will allow me, four of the submarines authorized August 22, 1912, are uncompleted, and one authorized March 4, 1913.

Mr. BRITTEN. That is true; and I am going to show you how near completion they are, and you gentlemen can draw your own conclusions as to when they will be finished. I will show you by actual figures that at the present rate of construction President Wilson will have to be reelected a third time in order to finish a submarine,

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman is not advocating that, is he? Mr. BRITTEN. Not yet. Of the four authorized in August, Not yet. Of the four authorized in August, 1912, almost five years ago, they average between 85 and 90 per cent of completion, some 79 per cent completed, and so on. During the last session of Congress under President Taft we authorized four little boats. The construction of one of the four was sent to the Portsmouth, N. H., Navy Yard by Secretary Daniels. The machinery for that ship is now 47.85 per cent completed, or less than half completed. It was authorized four years ago, and is being built in a Government yard.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BRITTEN. Not now. In the present bill the Secretary asks the House for $12,000,000 additional to the $6,000,000 given him last year with which to equip Government navy yards. I am going to show you how construction has progressed in Government navy yards.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BRITTEN. No; I can not. On June 30, 1914, we authorized eight submarines of the N type. Will it surprise you, gentlemen, to know that the ship or hull, meaning the superstructure of one of these boats, is 27.1 per cent completed? Why, at that rate it will take 16 years to complete these ships, and we all recognize the fighting value, offensive and defensive, of submarines.
